NOTE BY THE REPORTER.

The preparation and publication of the volume of Debates and Proceedings has been very much delayed, by causes beyond the control of the Reporter or Printer; and the work is now presented, from necessity, without the contemplated introductory pages, the committee appointed by the Convention to prepare an introduction, embracing a brief outline of the history of the Territory of Nevada, not having performed that duty in season. The volume is respectfully submitted to the people of Nevada, with a full consciousness on the part of the Reporter that he has discharged faithfully, and to the utmost of his ability, every duty devolved upon him, in connection with its preparation, revision, and indexing. He takes this occasion to return his sincere thanks to all the members of the Convention for their cordial and friendly coöperation.

ACT OF CONGRESS

ORGANIZING THE TERRITORY OF NEVADA.

An Act to Organize the Territory of Nevada.

[Approved March 2, 1861.]

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That all that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, to wit:—Beginning at the point of intersection of the forty-second degree of north latitude with the thirty-ninth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence running south on the line of said thirty-ninth degree of west longitude, until it intersects the northern boundary line of the Territory of New Mexico; thence due west to the dividing ridge separating the waters of Carson Valley from those that flow into the Pacific; thence on said dividing ridge northwardly to the forty-first degree of north latitude; thence due north to the southern boundary line of the State of Oregon; thence due east to the place of beginning—be, and the same is hereby, erected into a temporary Government, by the name of the Territory of Nevada; provided, that so much of the territory within the present limits of the State of California, shall not be included within this Territory until the State of California shall assent to the same, by an act irrevocable without the consent of the United States; provided, further, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of the Territory of Nevada, until said tribe shall signify their assent to the President of the United States, to be included within the said Territory, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulations respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent for the Government to make if this Act had never passed; provided, further, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to inhibit the Government of the United States from dividing said Territory into two or more Territories, in such manner and at such times as Congress shall deem convenient and proper, or from attaching any portion thereof to any other Territory or State.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Executive power and authority in and over said Territory of Nevada shall be vested in a Governor, who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The Governor shall reside within said Territory, shall be commander-in-chief of the militia thereof, shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and shall approve all laws passed by the Legislative Assembly before they shall take effect; he may grant pardons for offenses against the laws of said Territory, and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon; he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be a Secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States; he shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the Governor in his Executive Department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws and one copy of the Executive proceedings, on or before the first day of December in each year, to the President of the United States, and at the same time two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, for the use of Congress; and in case of the death, removal, or resignation, or other necessary absence of the Governor from the Territory, the Secretary shall have, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute and perform, all the powers and duties of the Governor, during such vacancy or necessary absence, or until another Governor shall be duly appointed to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in the Governor, and a Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly shall consist of a Council and House of Representatives. The Council shall consist of nine members, which may be increased to thirteen, having the qualifications of voters as hereinafter prescribed, whose term of service shall continue two years. The House of Representatives shall consist of thirteen members, which may be increased to twenty-six, possessing the same qualifications as prescribed for members of the Council, and whose term of service shall continue one year. An apportionment shall be made, as nearly equal as practicable, among the several counties or districts, for the election of the Council and of the House of Representatives, giving to each section of the Territory representation in the ratio of its population, (Indians excepted,) as nearly as may be; and the members of the Council and of the House of Representatives shall reside in, and be inhabitants of the district for which they may be elected, respectively. Previous to the first election, the Governor shall cause a census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the several counties and districts of the Territory to be taken; and the first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, as the Governor shall appoint and direct; and he shall, at the same time, declare the number of the members of the Council and House of Representatives to which each of the counties or districts shall be entitled under this Act. The number of persons authorized to be elected having the highest number of votes in each of said Council Districts for members of the Council, shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected to the Council; and the person or persons authorized to be elected having the greatest number of votes for the House of Representatives, equal to the number to which each county or district shall be entitled, shall be declared by the Governor to be elected members of the House of Representatives; provided, that in case of a tie between two or more persons voted for, the Governor shall order a new election, to supply the vacancy made by such tie. And the persons thus elected to the Legislative Assembly, shall meet at such place and on such day as the Governor shall appoint; but thereafter, the time, place, and manner of holding and conducting all elections by the people, and the apportioning the representations, in the several counties or districts, to the Council and House of Representatives, according to the population, shall be prescribed by law, as well as the day of the commencement of the regular sessions of the Legislative Assembly; provided, that no one session shall exceed the term of forty days, except the first, which may be extended to sixty days, but no longer.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every free white male inhabitant of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of said Territory at the time of the passage of this Act, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office within the said Territory; but the qualifications of voters, and of holding office at all subsequent elections, shall be such as shall be prescribed by the Legislative Assembly; provided, that the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States, and those who shall have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States, and the provisions of this Act; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents; nor shall any law be passed impairing the rights of private property; nor shall any discrimination be made in taxing different kinds of property; but all property subject to taxation shall be in proportion to the value of the property taxed.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all township, district, and county officers, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be appointed, or elected, as the case may be, in such manner as shall be provided by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory. The Governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, appoint all officers not herein otherwise provided for: and, in the first instance, the Governor alone may appoint all said officers, who shall hold their offices until the end of the first session of the Legislative Assembly, and shall lay off the necessary districts for members of the Council and House of Representatives, and all other officers.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That no member of the Legislative Assembly shall hold or be appointed to any office which shall have been created, or the salary or emoluments of which shall have been increased while he was a member, during the term for which he was elected, and for one year after the expiration of such term; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States, except Postmasters, shall be a member of the Legislative Assembly, or shall hold any office under the Government of said Territory.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Judicial power of said Territory shall be vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, Probate Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two Associate Justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and who shall hold a term at the seat of Government of said Territory annually, and they shall hold their offices during the period of four years. The said Territory shall be divided into three Judicial Districts, and a District Court shall be held in each of said districts by one of the Justices of the Supreme Court, at such time and place as may be prescribed by law; and the said Judges shall, after their appointments, respectively, reside in the districts which shall be assigned them. The jurisdiction of the several courts herein provided for, both appellate and original, and that of the Probate Courts and of the Justices of the Peace, shall be as limited by law; provided, that Justices of the Peace shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy when the title of boundaries of land may be in dispute, or where the debt or sum claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars; and the said Supreme and District Courts, respectively, shall possess chancery as well as common law jurisdiction; and authority for redress of all wrongs committed against the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of the Territory, affecting persons or property. Each District Court, or the Judge thereof, shall appoint its Clerk, who shall also be the Register in Chancery, and shall keep his office at the place where the Court may be held. Writs of error, bills of exception, and appeals, shall be allowed in all cases from the final decisions of said District Courts to the Supreme Court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; but in no case removed to the Supreme Court shall trial by jury be allowed in said Court. The Supreme Court, or the Justices thereof, shall appoint its own Clerk, and every Clerk shall hold his office at the pleasure of the Court for which he shall have been appointed. Writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of said Supreme Court shall be allowed, and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the Circuit Courts of the United States, where the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, to be ascertained by the oath or affirmation of either party, or other competent witness, shall exceed one thousand dollars; and each of the said District Courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as is vested in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States; and the said Supreme and District Courts of the said Territory, and the respective Judges thereof, shall and may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the Judges of the United States in the District of Columbia; and the first six days of every term of said Courts, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under the said Constitution and laws; and writs of error and appeals in all such cases shall be made to the Supreme Court of said Territory the same as in other cases. The said Clerk shall receive, in all such cases, the same fees which the Clerks of the District Courts of Utah Territory now receive for similar services.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed an Attorney for said Territory, who shall continue in office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive the same fees and salary as the Attorney of the United States for the present Territory of Utah. There shall also be a Marshal for the Territory appointed, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall execute all processes issuing from the said Courts when exercising their jurisdiction as Circuit and District Courts of the United States: he shall perform the duties, be subject to the same regulations and penalties, and be entitled to the same fees, as the Marshal of the District Court of the United States for the present Territory of Utah, and shall, in addition, be paid two hundred dollars annually as a compensation for extra services.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, Secretary, Chief Justice, and Associate Justices, Attorney, and Marshal, shall be nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President of the United States. The Governor and Secretary, to be appointed as aforesaid, shall, before they act as such, respectively take an oath or affirmation before the District Judge, or some Justice of the Peace in the limits of said Territory, duly authorized to administer oaths and affirmations by the laws now in force therein, or before the Chief Justice, or some Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to discharge the duties of their respective offices; which said oaths, when so taken, shall be certified by the person by whom the same shall have been taken, and such certificates shall be received and recorded by the Secretary among the Executive proceedings; and the Chief Justice and Associate Justices, and all other civil officers in said Territory, before they act as such, shall take a like oath or affirmation before the said Governor or Secretary, or some Judge or Justice of the Peace of the Territory, who may be duly commissioned and qualified, which said oath or affirmation shall be certified and transmitted by the person taking the same to the Secretary, to be by him recorded as aforesaid; and afterwards, the like oath or affirmation shall be taken, certified, and recorded in such manner and form as may be prescribed by law. The Governor shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars as Governor, and one thousand dollars as Superintendent of Indian Affairs: the Chief Justice and Associate Justices shall each receive an annual salary of eighteen hundred dollars. The Secretary shall receive a salary of eighteen hundred dollars. The said salaries shall be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States. The members of the Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to receive three dollars each per day during their attendance at the session thereof, and three dollars for every twenty miles' travel in going to and returning from the said session, estimated according to the nearest usually traveled route. There shall be appropriated annually the sum of one thousand dollars, to be expended by the Governor, to defray the contingent expenses of the Territory. There shall also be appropriated annually a sufficient sum, to be expended by the Secretary of the Territory, and upon an estimate to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses; and the Secretary of the Territory shall annually account to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for the manner in which the aforesaid sum shall have been expended.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nevada shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the Governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said first session, or as soon thereafter as they shall deem expedient, the Governor and Legislative Assembly shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of Government for said Territory, at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by the said Governor and Legislative Assembly.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve during each Congress of the United States, may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are exercised and enjoyed by the Delegates from the several other Territories of the United States to the said House of Representatives. The first election shall be held at such time and places, and be conducted in such manner, as the Governor shall appoint and direct; and at all subsequent elections, the times, places, and manner of holding elections, shall be prescribed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the Governor to be duly elected, and a certificate thereof shall be given accordingly.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted. That when the land in said Territory shall be surveyed, under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said Territory shall be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in the States hereafter to be erected out of the same.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That temporarily, and until otherwise provided by law, the Governor of said Territory may define the Judicial Districts of said Territory, and assign the Judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts, and also appoint the times and places for holding Courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said Judicial Districts, by proclamation to be issued by him; but the Legislative Assembly, at their first or any subsequent session, may organize, alter, or modify such Judicial Districts, and assign the Judges, and alter the times and places of holding the Courts, as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Nevada as elsewhere within the United States.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a Surveyor-General for Nevada, who shall locate his office at such place as the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time direct, and whose duties, powers, obligations, responsibilities, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and incidental expenses, shall be the same as those of the Surveyor-General of New Mexico, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and such instructions as he may, from time to time, deem it advisable to give him.

ENABLING ACT.

CHAP. XXXVI.—An Act to enable the People of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the Admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the inhabitants of that portion of the Territory of Nevada included in the boundaries hereinafter designated be, and they are hereby, authorized to form for themselves, out of said Territory, a State Government, with the name aforesaid, which said State, when formed, shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatsoever.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said State of Nevada shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington with the thirty-seventh degree of north latitude; thence due west along said thirty-seventh degree of north latitude to the eastern boundary line of the State of California; thence in a northwesterly direction along the said eastern boundary line of the State of California to the forty-third degree of longitude west from Washington; thence north along said forty-third degree of west longitude and said eastern boundary line of the State of California to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence due east along the said forty-second degree of north latitude to a point formed by its intersection with the aforesaid thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence due south down said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude to the place of beginning.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the general assembly of said Territory, at the date of the passage of this Act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe; and also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention, under such rules and regulations as the said Convention may prescribe; and if any of said citizens are enlisted in the army of the United States, and are still within said Territory, they shall be permitted to vote at their place of rendezvous; and [if] any are absent from said Territory, by reason of their enlistment in the army of the United States, they shall be permitted to vote at their place of service, under the rules and regulations in each case to be prescribed as aforesaid; and the aforesaid representatives to form the aforesaid Convention, shall be apportioned among the several counties in said Territory in proportion to the population, as near as may be; and said apportionment shall be made for said Territory by the Governor, United States District Attorney, and Chief Justice thereof, or any two of them; and the Governor of said Territory shall, by proclamation, on or before the first Monday of May next, order an election of the representatives as aforesaid, to be held on the first Monday in June thereafter throughout the Territory, and such election shall be conducted in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory regulating elections therein for members of the House of Representatives, and the number of members to said Convention shall be the same as now constitute both branches of the Legislature of the aforesaid Territory.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the members of the Convention, thus elected, shall meet at the Capital of said Territory on the first Monday in July next, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said Territory, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States. Whereupon the said Convention shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to form a Constitution and State Government for said Territory. Provided, That the Constitution, when formed, shall be republican, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And, provided further. That said Convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable, without the consent of the United States and the people of said State:—

First. That there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said State, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Second. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Third. That the people inhabiting said Territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within said Territory, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States: and that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said State shall never be taxed higher than the land belonging to the residents thereof; and that no taxes shall be imposed by said State on lands or property therein belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased by, the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case a Constitution and State Government shall be formed for the people of said Territory of Nevada, in compliance with the provisions of this Act, that said Convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection at an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein, at which election the lawful voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against the proposed Constitution, and the returns of said election shall be made to the acting Governor of the Territory, who, with the United States District Attorney and Chief Justice of said Territory, or any two of them, shall canvass the same, and if a majority of legal votes shall be cast for said Constitution in said proposed State, the said acting Governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said Constitution and ordinances; whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation declaring the State admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, without any further action whatever on the part of Congress.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That until the next general census shall be taken, said State of Nevada shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representative, together with the Governor and State and other officers provided for in said Constitution, may be elected on the same day a vote is taken for or against the proposed Constitution and State Government.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted. That sections numbers sixteen and thirty-six, in every township, and where such sections have been sold or otherwise disposed of by any Act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter section, and as contiguous as may be, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State for the support of common schools.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That provided the State of Nevada shall be admitted into the Union, in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Act, that twenty entire sections of the unappropriated public lands within said State, to be selected and located by direction of the Legislature thereof, on or before the first day of January, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, shall be, and they are hereby, granted, in legal subdivisions of not less than one hundred and sixty acres, to said State, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the Capital of said State, for legislative and judicial purposes, in such manner as the Legislature shall prescribe.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That twenty other entire sections of land, as aforesaid, to be selected and located as aforesaid, in legal subdivisions, as aforesaid, shall be, and they are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for a penitentiary or State prison in the manner aforesaid.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That five per centum of the proceeds of the sales of all public lands lying within said State, which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State for the purpose of making and improving public roads, constructing ditches or canals, to effect a general system of irrigation of the agricultural land in the State, as the Legislature shall direct.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That from and after the admission of the said State of Nevada into the Union, in pursuance of this Act, the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said State as elsewhere within the United States, and said State shall constitute one judicial district, and be called the District of Nevada.

APPROVED, March 21, 1864.

AMENDATORY ACT.

CHAP. XCIV.—An Act to amend an Act entitled "An Act to enable the People of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the Admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the fifth section of the Act to which this Act is an amendment as provides by ordinance for submitting the Constitution to the people of said State, for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, be so amended as to read "on the first Wednesday of September," and that the election for the purposes aforesaid be held on that day instead of the second Tuesday of October.

APPROVED, May 21, 1864.

PROCLAMATION.

TERRITORY OF NEVADA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, }
 CARSON CITY, May 2, 1864. }

WHEREAS, By the foregoing Act entitled "An Act to enable the People of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," it is made obligatory upon the Governor, Chief Justice, and United States Attorney, to apportion "among the several counties in said Territory in proportion to the population, as near as may be," representatives to form the said Convention, and likewise obligatory upon the Governor, when said apportionment is made as aforesaid, to issue a proclamation ordering an election as prescribed in said Act.

Now, therefore, I, James W. Nye, Governor of the Territory of Nevada, do order and direct that an election be held in the several counties of this Territory, on the first Monday of June next, for the purpose of electing Delegates or Representatives to the Constitutional Convention for said Territory, "in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory, regulating elections therein for members of the House of Representatives," and that the number of Representatives, to be elected in the several counties, as this day apportioned by the Governor, Chief Justice, United States Attorney, or of the Territory of Nevada, shall be as follows:

Counties.	No. of Delegates.
Storey.....	10
Lyon.....	4
Churchill.....	1
Ormsby.....	5
Washoe and Roop.....	5
Douglas.....	2

The foregoing does not embrace the vote of Lander County, as it was not certified to the Board of Canvassers in time to be considered. There was no material difference in the vote, however, and consequently it could not have changed the result.

C. N. NOTEWAKE,
Secretary of State.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA :

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, the Congress of the United States passed an Act, which was approved on the 21st day of March last, entitled "An Act to enable the people of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States :"

And whereas, the said Constitution and State Government have been formed, pursuant to the conditions prescribed by the fifth section of the Act of Congress aforesaid, and the certificate required by the said Act, and also a copy of the Constitution and ordinances, have been submitted to the President of the United States :

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, in accordance with the duty imposed upon me by the Act of Congress aforesaid, do hereby declare and proclaim that the said State of Nevada is admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this thirty-first day of October, in the year of our Lord one [L. S.] thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, and of the independence of the United States the eighty-ninth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President :

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

OFFICIAL REPORT

OF THE

DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

NEVADA STATE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF 1864.

Monday.]

TEMPORARY ORGANIZATION.

[July 4th.

FIRST DAY.

CARSON, N. T., July 4, 1864.

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved March 21, 1864, entitled "An Act to enable the people of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," a Convention of Delegates representing the various Counties in the Territory, assembled in the Chamber of the House of Representatives at Carson City, for the purpose of framing a Constitution and form of State Government.

Mr. JOHNSON called the Convention to order, at ten o'clock, A. M., and said :—

Gentlemen, Members of the Convention :—At the request of several delegates, the hour having arrived when it is proposed that this Convention shall meet, I now call you to order, and move that Judge Brosnan, of Storey, be requested to serve as temporary President.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN took the Chair as President pro tem. of the Convention, and said :—

Gentlemen of the Convention :—I thank you most sincerely for this mark of your kind attention and respect for me. You will, I know, excuse me from making any observations at this time. Our work lies in hand, and we intend to get through with our business for to-day as rapidly as we can, in order to celebrate this glorious anniversary.

Mr. JOHNSON moved that Mr. Tozer be chosen temporary Secretary ; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. I would inquire if there is a quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe there is not.

Mr. TOZER, the Secretary pro tem., suggested that in order to ascertain the fact, members rise and be counted.

This was done, and only nineteen members, (one less than a quorum), were present.

Messrs. JOHNSON and GIBSON suggested that one or two others were in town, and would be in in a moment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I suggest, that perhaps it would be a good idea for Mr. Clemens, the Secretary of the Territory, to call the roll of the members elect to the Convention. Then we shall not only know whether or not a quorum is in attendance, but any existing erroneous impressions will be corrected in regard to who are members. For instance, it does not appear from the list as published in the newspapers, that I am a member.

Mr. JOHNSON. We already have a temporary Secretary of the Convention, but nevertheless I will suggest that Secretary Clemens, as he has the roll, or list of names of members elected, oblige the Convention by calling the roll. I will make that as a motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ROLL CALL.

The Hon. ORION CLEMENS, Secretary of the Territory, proceeded to call the roll of the Convention by counties, in the order in which the election returns had been received by him.

Ormsby County ,.....	A. J. Lockwood.
Humboldt County ,.....	{ E. F. Dunne, William Henry Jones.
Lander County ,.....	{ J. H. Warwick, R. H. Williams, E. A. Morse.

The Territorial Secretary announced that twenty-one members were present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is a quorum of members present, and before proceeding any further I suggest to the Convention the propriety of opening our proceedings with prayer, inasmuch as I see that the Rev. Mr. White is present.

Mr. COLLINS moved that Rev. Mr. White be invited to offer prayer, which was agreed to.

The Rev. E. F. WHITE came forward and offered the following

PRAYER.

Our Father in Heaven, Thou art clothed in majesty and might! Thou art infinite in wisdom and truth—glorious in holiness, and everlasting in being! Heaven and earth are full of Thy presence and can not contain Thee! Thou hast given us life. Thy unwearying care has ever been extended over us, and we have dwelt and rejoiced "under the shadow of Thy wing." We acknowledge Thy mercy in directing our ways,—in appointing our changes, and in bestowing upon us all the personal, social and political blessings essential to our highest temporal and eternal well-being. We thank Thee for the civil order which has been established and maintained in this remote part of our land—that among these mountains, and amid these desert wilds, where hidden treasures are hoarded in their primal beds, neighborhoods, villages, cities, and the institutions of an enlightened Christian civilization have been planted, as in a day; and we thank Thee that now the foundations of a permanent Commonwealth are being laid,—that here, as we trust, a State is to be reared in righteousness,—an enduring monument to the honor of Thy name—a solid pillar in the great temple of human freedom, and a tower of strength to the General Government, through all time. We beseech Thee, Heavenly Father, to bless every member of this Convention. Imbue each heart with wisdom from on high, and grant that no selfish purposes, no sordid motives, no unholy ambition, may bear influence upon this floor. May every mind realize its dependence upon Thee, and be assured of the enlightening influences of Thy word, and of the blessed teachings of Thy Holy Spirit. Let harmony prevail through all the deliberations and enactments of this body, and grant that the Constitution about to be made may be deeply founded in truth and equity, and secure to all classes of the inhabitants of the new State their natural, inalienable rights. And now, oh Lord our God, we commend to Thy guardian care our bleeding country. We thank Thee for Thy goodness in rearing and thus far preserving our nation. We confess that, as a people, we have wandered far from Thee. We have neglected Thy word and Thy sanctuary. We have not heard the cry of the poor and of the oppressed. We have abused Thy mercies—have grown proud, and have trusted in our own wisdom and strength. Forgive us, oh Lord, all our sins; cleanse our nation from every iniquity, and use it as a chosen instrument for good in all coming ages. We ask that thou will abundantly bless all in authority over us, especially the President of these United States, his Cabinet, and the heads of all the departments of our Government; grant to watch over them, and to give them wisdom and strength to enable them to discharge every duty faithfully and in Thy fear. Remember in merciful kindness our armies and our navy; guide their generals and officers, and guard and sustain all under their authority. In the hour of battle be thou their shield and defence; give them victory, and crown their efforts to sustain this great nation and to restore peace with success. Bless the wounded, the sick, the destitute, the suffering, and the bereaved ; bind up every broken heart, and supply the wants of all the needy. We pray for our enemies ; show them, oh Lord, the wickedness of their rebellion ; lead them to repentance, and pardon their great sin ; overcome evil with good. Cause " the wrath of man to praise Thee, and the remainder of wrath restrain." Grant that the hour may hasten on when righteousness and peace shall prevail in all our borders. Bless the nations of the earth ; send abroad the light of Thy word ; regenerate, purify, and ennoble all the masses of our race, and fill the world with a knowledge of Thy name. Hear our prayer ; mould our characters, and ever let the light of Thy love abide upon us in all its fullness and richness ; and to Thy name, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be all the praise, world without end. Amen.

COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS.

Mr. COLLINS. I move that the Chair appoint a committee of three, on Credentials, to report at the next meeting.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. appointed as such committee, Messrs. Collins, Johnson, and Kennedy.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Convention now adjourn till to-morrow at ten o'clock, A. M., in order that we may participate in the celebration of Independence Day.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend that motion so as to adjourn to meet to-morrow, at twelve o'clock. I think most of the members will agree with me that we are likely to be somewhat sleepy to-morrow morning, after the festivities and fantasies of the day.

Mr. GIBSON. I am in favor of that amendment. It will give time for members to get here who are now absent. The Esmeralda members probably will not arrive before twelve o'clock. The stage does not get in before that hour.

Mr. BALL. I insist on my motion. I did not come down here to attend balls, and parties, and get sleepy, but to work. I came here for business.

Mr. TOZER. I hope the motion will prevail.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to amend the amendment so as to meet at one o'clock. It seems to me that the hour should be either ten or one, because twelve o'clock is the usual hour for lunch.

Mr. CHAPIN. I think the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) is correct. If we do not meet at ten o'clock, we should defer it till one.

Mr. STURTEVANT accepted Mr. Nourse's amendment.

Mr. FRIZELL. I suggest, before this motion to adjourn is put, that we shall be adjourning without finishing our business properly. It seems to me that we ought to appoint a committee on permanent organization.

Mr. CHAPIN. Oh, I think not. I would not do that when there is so small a number of members present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Messrs. DELONG and FITCH suggested that the question should be taken on the shortest time first ; which was agreed to.

The question was taken on Mr. Ball's motion, that the Convention adjourn until ten o'clock, A. M., to-morrow ; and it was agreed to, upon a division—ayes, 12 ; noes, 6.

Accordingly, at thirty minutes after ten o'clock, A. M., the Convention adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

CARSON, July 5, 1864.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order at twenty-five minutes before eleven o'clock, by the President pro tem.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. E. F. White.

The roll was called, and twenty-eight members were present, viz :—

Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Earl, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Johnson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, and Tozer.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. COLLINS submitted the following report :—

Your Committee on Credentials beg leave to report the following list of delegates, as returned by the several County Clerks to the Secretary of the Territory. There are several counties that have made no returns, or at least, none have been handed to the committee. The following is the list of delegates returned :—

J. A. COLLINS, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the report was received and the committee discharged.

On motion of Mr. CRAWFORD, the report was adopted.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move now, Mr. President, that we proceed to a permanent organization of the Convention, by the election of a President, and other officers.

Mr. CHAPIN. Before that motion is put, I suggest that the oath be administered to the members.

Mr. JOHNSON. Judge Wright. Probate Judge of this County, is, I understand, in the adjoining room, and as he is, probably, the highest judicial authority now at the capital, it would be proper, I think, to invite him to administer the oath.

Mr. CHAPIN. Very well; I move that a committee of three be appointed to wait upon Judge Wright, and request him to attend and administer the oath of office to the members.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. appointed as such committee, Messrs. Chapin, Hudson, and Gibson.

The committee retired, and immediately thereafter returned, accompanied by Judge Wright.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we had better inform ourselves, if we are not already advised, as to what oath should be administered. My own memory is at fault at the present moment, in respect to the Enabling Act, but I suppose, if there is nothing in regard to the oath in that act, that we shall have to resort to that form of oath which was prescribed for all public officers by Act of Congress, passed some two years since, rather than to the one prescribed by the laws of the Territory.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the Enabling Act is silent upon the subject. I suggest that Governor Johnson procure a copy of the oath prescribed by Congress, if he has one.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I can procure it in a moment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I do not know but it would expedite matters to administer the old oath and the new one too; the new one is very strong, and if the old one is stronger it will not hurt us any.

After a few moments' delay, Mr. Johnson returned with a copy of the oath prescribed by Congress, in 1862.

The members of the Convention rose, and Judge Wright administered the oath in the following words:—

You and each of you do solemnly swear, that you have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since you have been citizens thereof; that you have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that you have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that you have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And you do further swear, that to the best of your knowledge and ability you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter—SO HELP YOU GOD.

The above oath having been transcribed by the Secretary, was subscribed by the members present.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Mr. CROSMAN. I now renew the motion to proceed to the election of permanent officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has been suggested that another member has arrived since the oath was administered—Mr. H. G. Parker, of Lyon County—I propose that he be sworn in now.

Mr. PARKER come forward, was sworn, and took his seat as a member of the Convention.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I renew the motion to proceed to a permanent organization by the election of permanent officers.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope the gentleman will define the motion more clearly; if he will say for the election of President and Secretary, we shall then be in working condition, and can proceed to the election of subordinate officers afterwards.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I do not know what the objection is to going on now with the election of all the officers, from the commencement; I would like to finish it up.

Mr. TOZER. I hope the gentleman from Washoe. (Mr. Sturtevant), will accept the amendment suggested by my colleague. If we elect a President and Secretary, we can then proceed to determine what other officers we shall require, what their compensation shall be, etc.; by proceeding to elect officers promiscuously, we might get more officers than we want, or not so many as we ought to have.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Then I will amend my motion so as to be, that we proceed to a permanent organization of the Convention, by the election of a President and Secretary.

Mr. CROSMAN. How are we to elect officers?—Viva voce?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is known to be more than one candidate for Secretary, and as the voting may be pretty even, I think it would be equally as expeditious to vote by ballot.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suppose the first thing in order will be nominations for President, and I think there will be no objection to electing that officer by acclamation. I move that we proceed to the election of a President viva voce.

Mr. FITCH. If there is only one candidate for President, I have no objection; but for the other officers, I should be opposed to it.

Mr. STURTEVANT accepted Mr. Crosmán's amendment.

The question was taken on the motion as modified, and it was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Nominations are in order for President.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have the honor of submitting the name of the Hon. John A. Collins, of Storey County, as a candidate for President.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have the honor to place in nomination the Hon. J. Neely Johnson, of Ormsby County.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. President, I would return my thanks to my friend and colleague, for presenting my name to this Convention for so honorable a position; but I beg leave to decline the nomination, and will with great pleasure second the nomination of my friend J. Neely Johnson, and I move that we elect him as President of this Convention by acclamation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to unanimously.

J. NEELY JOHNSON was thereupon declared elected President of the Convention.

Mr. STURTEVANT moved the appointment of a committee of three to conduct the President elect to the chair.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Messrs. Sturtevant, Frizell, and Kinhead having been appointed as such committee, conducted the President elect to the chair.

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. JOHNSON, on taking the chair as President, said:—

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I do not propose to make this the occasion of any extended remarks, as I feel well assured that it is your desire to enter at once upon the more important duties which have called us together. For this evidence of your partiality and confidence in selecting me by the unanimous voice of the Convention to preside over its deliberations, you have my sincere thanks, and it shall be my constant endeavor to execute the duties of the position with strict impartiality, and with a just sense of their great responsibility and importance. But, gentlemen, whatever of rules you may adopt for our government, or however earnest and faithful may be your presiding officer in their enforcement, yet are we chiefly dependent upon the action of each individual member that our deliberations may be harmonious, and efficiency characterize the labors of the Convention, and with confidence I shall rely upon your aid and assistance, so that our proceedings may be marked with all the dignity and decorum befitting an assemblage of men convened for such a noble purpose as the present.

In conclusion, I may be permitted to add, that, in view of the provisions of the "Enabling Act," authorizing the meeting of this Convention, we have a great and important duty to perform, both to the nation and to the people we represent. The Congress of the United States has made most liberal and beneficial concessions to us in providing for the formation of our new State, and the circumstances which surround us augur most favorably for the speedy establishment here of a State government. You, as the representatives of the people, come directly from their midst, and know their essential wants and requirements in framing a Constitution and form of government for them; and when you have incorporated in that instrument those needs, no longer can a possible doubt arise but that the Constitution thus framed will, at the next September election, be endorsed and ratified by an overwhelming majority of the popular vote, and thenceforth Nevada will be numbered among the States of the Federal Union. That this may be the result of our labors is my most earnest wish and hope. [Applause.]

ELECTION OF SECRETARY.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the Convention proceeded to the election of a Secretary.

Mr. CROSMAN. I take pleasure in placing before the Convention, for the office of Secretary, the name of R. G. Clark.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I place in nomination for Secretary of the Convention, the name of Hon. William Martin Gillespie. Gentlemen are aware that he has had some experience in that capacity.

There being no further nominations the Convention proceeded to ballot for a Secretary, and with the following result:

For Mr. Gillespie.—Messrs. Ball, Brosnan, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Folsom, Gibson, Hudson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Lockwood, Nourse, Parker, Sturtevant, Tozer, and Mr. President—17.

For Mr. Clark.—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Crosmán, Crawford, DeLong, Earl, Fitch, Frizell, Kinhead, Murdock, Proctor, and Tagliabue—12.

WILLIAM MARTIN GILLESPIE having received a majority of votes, was declared elected Secretary of the Convention.

OTHER OFFICERS.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I now move that we proceed to elect a Sergeant-at-Arms in the same manner, and such other officers as the Convention shall see fit to elect; one at a time to be placed in nomination and voted for.

Tuesday.]

HAWLEY—STURTEVANT—BALL—COLLINS—KINKEAD—CHAPIN.

[July 5th.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman had better make it a little more definite—one Sergeant-at-Arms, and perhaps two pages, and a porter. I think that is all we shall require.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will make the motion to elect a Sergeant-at-Arms and let it go at that; though I think it more than likely that we shall require some one to keep the room clean, etc.

Mr. BALL. I suppose we shall take a recess very soon, for an hour; if the gentleman will allow me, I will make this motion—That a committee of three be appointed, to report one hour hence, what additional officers of the Convention are needed, and what their compensation shall be.

Mr. DELONG. And who will pay it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BALL. We shall then elect persons who will fully understand what compensation they are to receive, and what duties they are to perform. In the last Convention there was no compensation fixed until near the close, and I think we spent nearly the whole of one day in arranging the matter of compensation.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. BALL. Then I make the motion I have suggested for the appointment of a committee of three, to report what officers are necessary, and to fix the compensation of all the officers, as well those already elected as those to be elected.

ADOPTION OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

Mr. COLLINS. I think, by referring to the Enabling Act, we shall find that we have something to do previous to acting upon the motion that is now before the house. By Section 4 of the Enabling Act, Congress imposes a certain duty upon the members of the Convention immediately after its organization. By the election of a President and a Secretary, I believe the body is now permanently organized, and therefore, with the permission of the chair, I will read that portion of the Section to which I refer:—

Section 4. And be it further enacted: That the members of the Convention thus elected shall meet at the Capitol of said Territory on the first Monday in July next, and after organization, shall declare on behalf of the people of said Territory, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States.

It occurs to me now, that before we proceed to any other business, we ought to perform this duty.

Mr. BALL. I withdraw my motion temporarily.

Mr. COLLINS. As that motion has been withdrawn, I will read a preamble and resolution which I have drawn up with a view to meet the requirements of this occasion.

WHEREAS, The act of Congress, approved March 12, 1864, "to enable the people of the Territory of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," requires that the members of the Convention for forming said Constitution, shall, after organization, on behalf of the people of said Territory, adopt the Constitution of the United States; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of this Convention, elected by the authority of the aforesaid Enabling Act of Congress, assembled in Carson, the capital of said Territory of Nevada, and immediately subsequent to its organization, do adopt, on behalf of the people of said Territory, the Constitution of the United States.

The question was taken on the adoption of the preamble and resolution as read, and they were unanimously adopted.

RULES AND ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COLLINS offered the following resolution, which was read:—

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President, to report rules for the government of this Convention.

Mr. KINKEAD. Let me suggest that the gentleman include in the same resolution, the order of business.

Mr. COLLINS. I would prefer a separate resolution, and a separate committee. I think the question of rules will occupy all the time of one committee during the recess.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope the resolution will be made to cover the whole subject, and I would suggest also, that there be a committee of five, as the business is of considerable importance.

Mr. COLLINS. Very well; I will accept the amendment, and make it a committee of five on rules and order of business.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified:—

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the President, to report standing rules, and order of business for the government of this Convention.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the committee under the resolution, Messrs. Collins, Banks, Sturtevant, DeLong, and Kennedy.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION—AGAIN.

Mr. BALL offered the following resolution:—

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Chair, to report the various subordinate offices to be filled by this Convention, and to fix their compensation, as well as the compensation of the officers elected.

Mr. COLLINS. I would inquire whether that last sentence does not embrace our President. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. I hope the gentleman will "let me out." [Laughter.]

Mr. BALL. I think it will be very easy to fix that.

Mr. COLLINS. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "officers," and inserting the word "Secretary."

Mr. BALL. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. KINKEAD. I suggest a further amendment; to strike out "three," and insert "five."

Mr. BALL. I have no objection to making it five.

The resolution was read as modified:—

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair, to report the various subordinate offices to be filled by this Convention, and to fix their compensation, as well as the compensation of the Secretary elect.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the committee under the resolution, Messrs. Ball, Chapin, Tagliabue, Tozer, and Murdoch.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move that the Committee on Rules and Order of Business be instructed to report this afternoon. I apprehend that they will have time to do that, and the sooner we get to work, the better. If it is necessary to have rules and order of business at all, they should be adopted at once.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope that will be done, so that we may get to work, and that when we adjourn, it will be to meet at two o'clock, so as to give the committee time enough.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's motion, and it was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

SEATS OF MEMBERS.

Mr. GIBSON called attention to the matter of the seats of members, and said, so far as the members of the Ormsby delegation were concerned, they were satisfied with the seats they then occupied, which were the same as they had in the Convention of last fall. If other gentlemen, however, desired it, they would be willing to draw for seats, or to give up their seats to any gentlemen who preferred them. He thought there should be some arrangement, or understanding, and all he desired was to have the delegations from the respective counties sit together.

Mr. FITCH said the delegation from Storey was composed of very litigious materials, and he suggested they had better be scattered around among the others. [Laughter.]

Several members expressed themselves satisfied with their present seats, and no action was taken upon the subject.

Messrs. E. F. DUNNE of Humboldt, and WILLIAM WETHERILL of Esmeralda appeared, and presented their credentials; the official oath was administered to them by Judge Wright, and having subscribed the same, they took their seats as members of the Convention.

STATIONERY.

The PRESIDENT. It is well known to you all that no provision has been made, either by Congress or by the Legislature of this Territory, for the payment of the expenses of this Convention; but there are some expenses which will necessarily have to be borne in some way, such as stationery, &c. The Secretary of the Territory has been kind enough to suggest to members of the Convention that he will furnish them, from the supply he has on hand, with such stationery as is necessary. It is an act of liberality, to say the least, on his part, which I have no doubt the Convention will fully appreciate. He takes the responsibility of so doing without any authority of law, in order to aid us as far as possible in our labors; and I trust that members will see the importance of practicing all possible economy in the use of stationery, as the supply is very limited. As the Secretary of the Territory is present, he will state to the Convention what he can furnish, and his position in the matter.

Mr. ORION CLEMENS (the Territorial Secretary.) As the President has stated, there is no provision made by the Legislature or by the United States Government for stationery for the Convention, and the only fund under my control is the Legislative fund, which comes to me with specific instructions as to the items for which I am to use it, such as per diem and mileage of members and officers of the Legislative Assembly and other matters, which are mentioned in my instructions. I have thought, however, in view of the exigencies of the case, that I might furnish the members of the Convention with so much of the stationery which I have on hand, that they could get along without serious inconvenience. I will furnish them with paper, pens, ink, and envelopes so far as they may be required. I would willingly do more, but gentlemen will see that, under the circumstances, it is out of my power.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am not experienced in these things called conventions, but I suppose we will have a regular routine, and committees to take charge of all these matters, to be appointed by the President. There will necessarily be some expenses, and I suppose the proper committee will make a recommendation to the next Legislature to make an appropriation for their payment.

RULES AND ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on Rules and Order of Business, presented the following:

The Committee appointed to report the Order of Business and Rules for the government of this Convention, beg leave to submit the following report:—

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

- 1—Calling the Convention to order.
- 2—Calling the roll.
- 3—Prayer.
- 4—Reading the journal of the preceding day.
- 5—Reports of Standing Committees.
- 6—Reports of Special Committees.
- 7—Motions and resolutions.
- 8—Second reading and reference of resolutions.
- 9—General file.

RULES.

Adopt as far as applicable for the government of this Convention the Rules of the House of Representatives of the third session of the Legislature of Nevada Territory, and Jefferson's Manual in matters to which the rules of said Legislature may not apply.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN A. COLLINS, Chairman.

Accompanying the report was a copy of the rules of the House of Representatives of the third Legislature.

Tuesday,] FITCH—GIBSON—BALL—COLLINS—CROSMAN—STURTEVANT—CHAPIN. [July 5th.

The PRESIDENT. If these rules are to be adopted I suppose the word "President" is to be substituted for "Speaker" wherever it occurs.

Mr. FITCH. I do not see how we can well get along under these rules without each member being furnished with a copy, and as there are only four or five copies to be had, I suggest the propriety of having them printed.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Thomas Carson, who is present, states that he thinks he can find over a hundred copies, which were printed for the last Legislature, and left over.

Mr. BALL moved that the report be received and the Committee discharged, which was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the report.

Mr. COLLINS. In the rules of the third Legislature the words "Speaker" and "Clerk" occur very frequently. I move to substitute the words "President" and "Secretary" in every case.

The PRESIDENT. A motion will not be necessary to that effect; the Secretary will make the corrections, and it will be understood as being the report of the Committee.

The question was taken on the adoption of the report, and it was adopted.

ADDITIONAL OFFICERS.

Mr. BALL, from the Special Committee on Subordinate Officers and their Compensation, presented the following report:—

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention: Your Committee on Subordinate Officers and Compensation beg leave to report: That, in view of a short session, they deem it advisable that an Assistant Secretary be employed, and that enrolling and engrossing clerks be specially appointed when they may be needed at the close of the session. We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Convention elect one Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, one Official Reporter, one Page, one Porter, one Assistant Secretary, and that the three resident clergymen of Carson be requested to alternate in opening the sessions of the Convention with prayer.

Resolved, That the following compensation be allowed the officers of the Convention:

To the Secretary, $10 per diem.

Assistant Secretary, $5 per diem.

Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $6 per diem.

Page, $4 per diem.

Porter, $4 per diem.

Chaplain, $2 50 per diem.

Official Reporter, $15 per diem, and thirty cents per folio for writing up his notes; Provided such notes shall only be written up if the Constitution framed be adopted by the people.

Resolved, That the President and Secretary are hereby instructed to certify the accounts of the officers of this Convention in duplicate—one to the first State Legislature convened, provided the Constitution framed be adopted; and in the event of its rejection by the people, one to the Territorial Legislative Assembly, asking an appropriation for their payment on behalf of this Convention.

Mr. CROSMAN moved that the report be received and the committee discharged, which was agreed to.

The question was on the adoption of the report.

Mr. FITCH. From the reading of the report it appears that we are to have three clergymen every day.

Mr. BALL. Oh, no! they are to alternate, at $2 50 each. The word "chaplain" is in the singular; not in the plural.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It strikes me quite forcibly still that each one of them will get his $2 50 per day. There might be a row among the clergymen, and that would be a thing rather discreditable to the town. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. I apprehend that there is no difficulty. It is understood, of course, that the per diem is allowed to those who officiate, each in his regular course.

The question was taken on the adoption of the report, and it was adopted.

ELECTION OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. HAWLEY moved that the Convention proceed to the election of subordinate officers, viva voce; which motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT announced that nominations were in order for a Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper.

Mr. MURDOCK. I put in nomination Thomas Carson, of Carson.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it one officer, or two?

Mr. CHAPIN. It is one; but he can discharge all the duties of two.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that we dispense with calling the roll, and elect him by acclamation.

The question was taken, and THOMAS CARSON was unanimously elected as Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper.

ELECTION OF OFFICIAL REPORTER.

The PRESIDENT announced that nominations were in order for Official Reporter.

Mr. CHAPIN. I put in nomination, Mr. President, Mr. Andrew Jackson Marsh; and as there are no other nominations, I move that the rules be suspended and he be elected by acclamation.

The question was taken, and ANDREW J. MARSH was unanimously elected Official Reporter.

ELECTION OF PAGE.

The PRESIDENT said nominations were in order for a Page.

Mr. GIBSON. I put in nomination George Richards.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would like to have the young gentleman define his position on the Union.

Master RICHARDS (the candidate for Page). Oh, it is sound! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BROSNAN. I move that he be elected by acclamation.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to; and Master GEORGE RICHARDS was unanimously elected as Page of the Convention.

ELECTION OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY.

The PRESIDENT called for nominations for Assistant Secretary.

HOVEY—KINKEAD—CHAPIN—PRESIDENT—DUNNE—BANKS.

[July 5.

Mr. HOVEY nominated Andrew Whitford.

There being no other nomination, under a suspension of the rules ANDREW WHITFORD was unanimously elected, by acclamation, as Assistant Secretary.

ELECTION OF PORTER.

Nominations were called for for a Porter.

Mr. KINKEAD nominated WILLIAM E. SKEENE, who was unanimously elected by acclamation.

Mr. CHAPIN. As the officers are now all elected, I suggest that Judge Wright be invited to come in and administer the oath of office to them.

The PRESIDENT said he would take that course.

Judge S. C. Wright came in immediately thereafter, and the oath of office was taken and subscribed by the several officers of the Convention elected.

Mr. KINKEAD. I presume it is necessary to take some action in regard to notifying the clergymen of the request of the Convention that they officiate alternately as Chaplains. I move that the Secretary be instructed to notify the three resident clergymen of Carson City of the action of the Convention in reference to the Chaplains.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

BASIS OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. CHAPIN. I suppose we are now ready to go to work, as the machinery of the Convention is all in regular order. I therefore offer this resolution:—

Resolved, That the Constitution adopted by the late Convention be taken as a basis by this Convention, and that the same be taken up in Committee of the Whole and acted upon section by section.

ADJOURNMENT WITHOUT DAY.

Mr. DUNNE. If the gentleman will permit me, I have a resolution which I wish to offer, and which I think comes more properly before the one he has presented. It will take but a moment to act upon it, and I will ask as a favor that he withdraw his resolution for the present and allow me to present mine.

Mr. CHAPIN. Certainly; I withdraw it.

Mr. DUNNE. Before the resolution which I offer is read, as it is the first time I have had the floor since the marked courtesy extended by the Convention to those who came late, by waiting for them before proceeding to business, I desire to express my appreciation of that courtesy, and the more so because, perhaps, something in these resolutions might be construed as not evincing that appreciation on my part. The sentiments of these resolutions are such that I am satisfied—

The PRESIDENT, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman suspend a moment; I think the resolutions are not seconded.

Mr. BANKS. I will second them in order to get them before the house, though I do not know what they are.

The PRESIDENT. Perhaps they had better be read before the gentleman proceeds.

Mr. DUNNE. Only one word. I present these resolutions as the sentiments of a large body of my constituents, and as the sentiments of those people, I ask to have them receive the attention of the Convention. With this explanation, I will ask the Secretary to read them.

The Secretary read as follows:—

WHEREAS, This Convention has assembled, not from any call of the people of this Territory, but in pursuance of an Act of Congress which virtually compels us to take action again upon a question which we believe should be left entirely to the unbiassed judgment of the people, uninfluenced by the interested appeals of aspirants for office, or by the surging passions of partisan strife; and

WHEREAS, The overwhelming defeat sustained by the late Constitution from the people themselves but a few months ago, and later still from their Representatives in Legislature assembled, is a convincing proof of the sentiments of this Territory as to the propriety of at present assuming the responsibilities of a State Government; and that the vote some time before in favor of such action was no test, inasmuch as no canvass on the subject was had, and the question constituted no part of the real issue in the contest; and

WHEREAS, The conducting of a State Government upon even the most economical basis is necessarily attended with a burden of expense, greater than the people at present can bear, and which would necessitate a ruinous system of credit and depreciation of the paper of the State, because of the absence of the necessary basis of revenue upon which the people will willingly consent to be taxed; and

WHEREAS, The reasoning of the supporters of the late Constitution, that twelve months' time would show the taxable property of the Territory doubled in amount and trebled in value, has failed to be sustained by the facts in the case; but that, on the contrary, a depreciation instead of an increase has ensued; and

WHEREAS, The submission of another Constitution to the people, at present, would be to force upon them again an election at a great expense for the settlement of a question upon which they have just given their decision—so recently, in fact, that the echo of their remonstrance has scarcely yet died in our ears; and

WHEREAS, Of all possible times for the submission of such a question, the present is the least appropriate, the question being one which should be determined upon from its intrinsic merits alone; one which calls for the exercise of the calmest judgment, and for a consideration of its effects upon the whole people, and not as to how it may benefit the interested few; and the time proposed for action upon it being not only at the red-hot heat of a Presidential campaign, but of a contest the like of which, for partisan enthusiasm and party bitterness, the world has not yet witnessed; when the mingled indignation and loathing, and fierce, vindictive hate of patriotic men against the infamy of treason may easily be stirred by designing politicians to carry this Constitution through, if for no other reason than because it would inflict an additional pang upon the rebellion to see another star rise grandly to its place in the constellation sought to be shrouded in the pall of death; and

WHEREAS, Though we yield to no portion of this nation in our love or devotion to our country, or in willingness to sacrifice our interests for the public good, we do not believe the Government is menaced by any danger which requires of us the assumption of the attitude of a State to prevent; and

WHEREAS, We have assembled here as the representatives of the real interests of this Territory, in order that no action prejudicial to those interests should be had in this body; and

WHEREAS, There is nothing in the act calling us together which imposes any obligation upon us to form a Constitution; and

Tuesday,]

DUNNE—BROSNAN—DELONG—PRESIDENT.

[July 5th.]

WHEREAS, It should be our first duty to represent, by our action here, the expressed sentiment of the people we claim to represent; therefore

Resolved, That the paramount allegiance of every citizen of the United States is due to the Federal Government; that we heartily endorse the general policy of the present Administration in its efforts to maintain the national authority over the rebellious Territory of the United States; that we are in favor of the most thorough and vigorous prosecution of the war, without delay or compromise, until the heresy of rebellion be forever eradicated from the land; that we are for the employment of all means of civilized warfare for the accomplishment of that end; but that when rebels resort to the atrocities of savage cruelty, we believe retaliation justifiable.

Resolved, That we believe the initiative steps towards the forming of a State Government should only be taken under the direction of the people themselves by direct expression of their will, and particularly so when it is required to be done at their expense.

Resolved, That under the circumstances, we deem it our duty to return to our constituents, leaving to them the right to call a Convention for the formation of their State Constitution, whenever they shall deem it advisable for their own interests to do so.

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourn it adjourn sine die.

Mr. DUNNE. I have only a few words to say, Mr. President, in regard to these resolutions, I hope that each member of the Convention will endeavor to vote upon them exactly as he believes the sentiments of a majority of his constituents demands. I do think, however, so far as I myself am concerned, that, when we consider the action of the people of this Territory, taken in conjunction with the consideration of our circumstances—a careful comparison of our present state with what it was twelve months ago, financially speaking, or what it was at the time when the previous Constitution was proposed and rejected—we should be induced to refrain from presenting another Constitution to the people at the present time. I think that the depreciation of property, the depreciation of the value of mining stocks, and the cessation of investments necessarily consequent upon the downfall of all mining stocks, have rendered such a measure impolitic. I say that all these things taken together, tend to show that if the people did not wish to adopt a Constitution and State Government, some months ago, when everything looked more prosperous and promising than now, they certainly do not wish to do so at this time.

Then, in regard to the basis of revenue, I think it is unmistakably apparent to all that the last Constitution was rejected because the mines were taxed; there can be no question as to that proposition. Now, if there is to be a Constitution submitted to the people, leaving that clause out, or recommending the proposition that the mines shall not be taxed, I think it would undoubtedly be satisfactory to the people in that regard; but I doubt whether such a Constitution would be satisfactory to the office-holders under that Constitution, for I do not see, for my part, where their pay would come from. There is scarcely any property, when you come to look at the vast budget of State debt which would be accruing every year, aside from the mining property, from which you can hope to raise funds to carry on a State Government. There is scarcely any property to speak of in this Territory, outside of mining property, and the people will not willingly consent to see that species of property taxed. In my own county, to my knowledge, since the assessor, under the revenue act of last winter, began his operations, the people have expressed the most unlimited abhorrence of that mining law—the law taxing mining property—and they have expressed their determination that that law shall be repealed at the next session of the Legislature. They expressed, farther than that, their determination never to consent to have such a law remain on the statute books.

Those who believe that a Constitution can be adopted now with the mining tax clause in it, think we can go on under it and get a revenue, because they have succeeded in having a law passed by the Legislature taxing this species of property; and so long as that law remains, they say, then everything is sure and as they want it. Because the Legislature adopted that measure once, they contend that we can adopt it again, and safely allow it to go before the people without any clause exempting the mines from taxation. I hope, however, that their expectations will be disappointed in that respect.

But I know that the minds of most of the members have been specially exercised on this subject, as it has been before the people in many ways since the late Constitution was rejected, and I am satisfied, therefore, that the Convention will be willing to determine this matter without further debate. Hence, as I do not wish, above all things, to set the example of making long speeches, I will submit my resolution to the action of the Convention, without any further remarks, unless they shall meet with some opposition which may call for reply.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move that the preamble and resolutions be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DELONG. I have asked that the resolutions be read. I am informed, however, that they are very long, and I will withdraw that request if some gentleman will state the purport of them.

The PRESIDENT. The purport, so far as the Chair understands it, is a proposition that we dissolve this Convention and go home to our constituencies without doing anything further.

Mr. BROSNAN. I wish to make one or two suggestions before the vote is taken on the pending question. I have listened to the reading of the preamble and resolutions with a great deal of attention, and I have been struck very much, Mr. President, with the loyalty of the sentiments which they embrace. I should be the last person in the world to vote against those sentiments, or to willingly favor any opposite doctrines. But that, I conceive, is not the question here. I consider that our duty is marked out for us by the highest authority of the land, and that, as sensible men, who have been sent here to discharge a specific duty, we should be playing the part of children to dissolve our Convention at the present time without having done what we came here to perform. So far as the loyalty of the sentiments expressed in the resolutions is concerned, I most heartily accord with them each and every one, and lest it might be deemed by my friend from Humboldt that I intended any disrespect either to him or to the loyal sentiments which he has embodied in his resolutions in moving their indefinite postponement, I will ask permission to change my motion, and move instead that they be laid upon the table.

Mr. DUNNE. I said that I would make no further remarks unless some point should be made against the resolutions, and I notice now that there is a point made, namely, that it is our duty here to form a Constitution; that that path of duty has been marked out for us by the supreme authority of the nation; that we have come here in obedience to that call, and would be recreant to our duty if we adjourned our Convention without performing that work which we came here to do.

Mr. FITCH, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman from Humboldt; but certainly, upon a motion to lay upon the table, debate is not in order.

Mr. DELONG. I do not think my colleague from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) intended by his motion to cut off debate, and I would request him to withdraw the motion. It is rather a harsh way for a gentleman to make a speech and wind up with a motion to lay upon the table, which necessarily prevents any one from replying.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable, and unless it is withdrawn the Chair will rule debate out of order.

Mr. DUNNE. I should think that, having made a portion of an argument against the resolutions, the gentleman from Storey would be willing to have them further discussed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would suggest that, judging from the drift of the remarks of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne), so far as he has been allowed to proceed—I am inclined to think at least that a point was about to be raised which it would probably be well enough for the Convention to take into consideration. If it is in order, I will ask that the rules be suspended to allow the gentleman to make his explanation.

Mr. FITCH. The only way to settle it, I take it, is to vote down the motion to lay on the table, or for the mover of that motion to withdraw it; there is nothing else in order while that motion is pending.

Several gentlemen objected to the withdrawal of the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CROSMAN. I hope the Convention will consent to its withdrawal temporarily.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope it will not be withdrawn; these resolutions have been thrown in here as a sort of firebrand, and I hope the motion now pending will not be withdrawn, but that we shall dispose of the whole subject in a summary manner and proceed with our business. I object to its withdrawal.

Mr. PARKER. I ask for information in regard to the rules. If this matter be laid on the table I want to know whether, under the rules, either a majority or two-thirds can take it up again. That may make a vast difference, because if it is liable to be taken up again, we may be annoyed with this question for weeks here.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has no more opportunity of ascertaining what the rules are than the rest of the Convention, as they are not accessible in print, and there is only a single copy on the table; but the impression of the Chair, from his past experience, is, that laying a subject upon the table is about the last of it.

Mr. COLLINS. I think there is another rule equally applicable, which is, that a majority can take it up again at any time.

Mr. DELONG. Certainly, the best way is to withdraw the motion, and move an indefinite postponement. Then if the gentlemen do not want debate, they can move the previous question, and have a vote on that. If the previous question be sustained, and the motion to indefinitely postpone carried, we get rid of the question forever. For one, I would like to have it discussed as long as the gentleman wants it discussed. I do not understand that it makes any difference whether it requires a majority or a two-thirds vote to take it up again, because in either case it may be taken up at any time.

Mr. FITCH. I understand the rule to be in California, that a majority vote may take any subject from the table.

Mr. BANKS. The practice in California has been to require a two-thirds vote when the motion to take up was not made in the regular order of business, but under the head of "motions and resolutions," or under the head of "unfinished business," any matter could be taken up by a majority.

The PRESIDENT. This discussion is somewhat out of order, but it has been tolerated by the Chair in order that the Convention may understand the effect of the vote to be taken.

Mr. TOZER. It seems to me desirable to dispose of this resolution finally at this time; but I dislike very much to dispose of it without a full, fair, and free discussion upon it. It is a matter, certainly, of considerable importance, as the gentleman from Humboldt says it embodies the views and wishes of a large portion of his constituency; and I really hope that nothing will be done in the Convention which will cut off the discussion of the matter. Let it be amply discussed, and then finally disposed of.

The PRESIDENT. This discussion is all out of order. An inquiry was made in reference to the effect of the vote about to be taken, and the Chair is now prepared to state, from the limited opportunity given him to examine the rules, that in the opinion of the Chair, a majority vote would be sufficient to take the resolutions from the table, inasmuch as only a majority vote is necessary to lay them upon the table.

The question was stated on the motion to lay the preamble and resolutions on the table.

Several gentlemen demanded the yeas and nays, and a vote was taken by yeas and nays.

During the voting—

Mr. DeLONG. I ask leave to explain my vote, and merely wish to say a word. I intend to vote in the negative on this question, simply out of courtesy to the gentlemen who offered the resolutions, and not because I think there is no necessity for a State Government, nor because I do not intend to support the Constitution which may be framed here. I vote "no," solely out of courtesy, and I regret that the motion was made, because I would like to give to the Convention, and through it to the people, my reasons for favoring a State Government at this time, when it is well known that one year ago I opposed it with all my might. I vote "no."

Mr. GIBSON. I shall vote "no," for the simple reason that I wish to have the subject ventilated.

Mr. Hawley. I ask leave to say a word in explanation. I shall vote "no," upon the question of laying on the table, partly because I wish to see an opportunity extended to the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) to explain his peculiar views on the question which he introduced, or intimated in his remarks, as far as he went. If "coming events cast their shadows before," I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Humboldt was about to raise certain propositions based upon the remarks of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) to the effect that he did not consider this Convention in duty bound to take into consideration, or to take any notice whatever, of the call of the national government convening us here for a specific purpose. How much further he might have gone if he had not been interrupted, we have no means of knowing; and for my part, as a member of the Convention, and a delegate representing a loyal community, I feel somewhat anxious to understand the gentleman's entire proposition.

Mr. Tozer. I ask leave to explain my vote briefly. I vote "no," on the motion to lay the resolutions on the table, and I do so for the same reasons which have been given by other gentlemen of the Convention,—not because I do not at this time favor the organization of a State government, but simply because I am opposed to this manner of disposing of the question.

The result of the vote was announced as follows :—

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brosnan, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Earl, Fitch, Fricell, Folsom, Hudson, Hovey, Kennedy, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, and Wetherill—21.

Nays—Messrs. Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Gibson, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Parker, Tozer, and the President—10.

Mr. CROSMAN. I voted "no," for the reasons which have already been assigned by gentlemen. It was my expectation, or at least my hope, that this motion to lay upon the table would have been voted down, in order that I might make a motion to indefinitely postpone the resolutions. Upon that motion, my friend from Humboldt could have explained his position.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is not in order, except by consent of the Convention. ["Leave. Leave."]

Mr. CROSMAN. Only one word further. I wanted the gentleman to have the privilege of explaining; and believing that the sense of the Convention was in favor of disposing of the resolutions immediately, the vote could then be taken on indefinite postponement. For my part, I am in favor of a State organization, and I am in favor of doing anything that the General Government asks at our hands, to sustain it in this conflict.

The PRESIDENT. In this same connection, with the permission of the Convention, while explanations are the order, I desire to say that I am opposed to every thing contained in those resolutions, except the very loyal sentiments expressed therein, which I of course heartily approve. For the same reasons which have been expressed by other gentlemen, I voted against laying the resolutions on the table.

Mr. BANKS. I ask leave to say a few words in explanation of my vote. I will only say, that with all my desire to extend courtesy to my colleague, for whom I entertain the most profound respect, I so thoroughly disagree with the sentiments advanced in these resolutions, so far as they pertain to the people whom I represent, and so far as they pertain to the propriety of adopting a State government, that I felt compelled to vote in favor of laying them on the table, because I regarded that vote as a test vote, and I wished to place myself right on the record against those resolutions.

Mr. Hawley. Will the Convention allow me a moment to explain my vote? I merely wish to say that I am decidedly in favor of a State organization, and opposed to everything in the resolutions except their patriotic sentiments. I wanted to say this now, because I neglected to do so when I had the floor before.

Mr. DUNNE. Some gentlemen, in explaining their votes, have expressed a desire to extend courtesy to the gentleman from Humboldt. Now, I would say that with me there is not a particle of personal consideration in this matter—the gentleman from Humboldt has not the slightest feeling about it. He understood that the vote was simply on the principle involved in the resolutions which he had felt it his duty to offer, conceiving it to be the wish of his constituents that resolutions of this nature should be presented for the consideration and action of the Convention. So far as the gentleman from Humboldt is concerned, therefore, there need be no hesitancy on the score of courtesy.

Mr. NOURSE. If there are any others who desire to explain their votes, I suggest that they be allowed to do so in the columns of the Carson Independent.

Mr. KINKEAD. After the explanation which has now been made by the gentleman from Humboldt, I desire to change my vote to the affirmative.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to do the same.

Mr. CROSMAN. I wish to change mine also.

Mr. TOZER. I wish to explain before changing my vote. I voted "no" only as a matter of courtesy to the gentleman, and now I vote in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT. I will state, with the permission of the Convention, that I am not prepared to refer to the gentleman's explanation as a reason why I should change my vote. I voted in the negative, because I wanted to have the matter discussed. I wanted to hear from some gentlemen whom I knew had hitherto opposed the adoption of a State Government, and who are now the ardent friends of that policy. I desired to hear from them an explanation of the reasons which, in their judgment, now exist in favor of a State Government which did not formerly appear, and I wanted that explanation to go forth to the people, to show them the reasons why we desire now to adopt a State Government. I wanted the subject ventilated, and believed there was no better time for this discussion than at the initiatory stage of our proceedings, in order that the people may be instructed, so far as the views of their delegates are concerned, as to the reasons and arguments in favor of the formation of a State Government. I do not change my vote, therefore, and I hope the matter will still be discussed, and possibly I may participate in such discussion. I will repeat, however, my former statement, that I am opposed to everything in the resolutions, save and except their loyal and patriotic sentiments.

Messrs. Parker and Hawley changed their votes from the negative to the affirmative.

The result of the vote was again announced, as follows :—

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brosnan, Brady, Chapin, Crossman, Crawford, Collins, Earl, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hudson, Hawley, Hovey, Kinkead, Kennedy, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, and Wetherill—27.

Nays—Messrs. De Long, Dunne, Lockwood, and Mr. President—4.

So the preamble and resolutions were laid on the table.

Mr. CHAPIN. I desire to say that I voted aye for an entirely different reason from any that has yet been stated. I voted to lay the resolutions on the table for the simple reason that I believe we are here for business, not for the presentation of arguments for or against the adoption of a State Constitution. I came here to work, and I want to go to work, and work every hour till I get through, and go home to attend to my private business; and then let every man who wants to present arguments for or against the Constitution which we shall have adopted, go home, and work and talk as long as he pleases. Those are my sentiments, and those are the reasons why I wanted the resolutions laid on the table and allowed to remain there.

Mr. FITCH. I would like to explain my vote. I have only this to say—that I raised the question of order upon the motion to lay on the table, not out of any discourtesy, but solely because I believed it to be important that we should enforce the common parliamentary rules in the outset.

Mr. DELONG. Now, I am compelled to rise to a point of order, because these gentlemen who put the gag on me are themselves making long speeches. My point of order is, that there is no question before the house.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) asked leave to explain, and leave was given him, by the assent of the Convention, to proceed.

Mr. FITCH. I only want to say that I raised the question of order, not out of discourtesy to any one, nor from any desire to stifle discussion, but simply because I saw that the discussion was flagrantly and clearly out of order.

Mr. EARL offered the following resolution, which was read by the Secretary :—

Resolved, That we now enter into a Committee of the Whole, and ask of Congress to give us a change in our Judiciary, and that this body now propose such change necessary to be made, and forward the same to Congress. That we then adjourn, hoping that Congress will grant our prayer; that we say to the people of this Territory that if this change is granted us, we think it better for the present to remain as we are, under a Territorial Government.

Mr. EARL. I offer this resolution, thinking it will do no great hurt at least, to ascertain what the feeling is amongst delegates from different parts of the Territory in relation to our passing now from a Territorial to a State form of government: I offer it for that purpose wholly.

Mr. DELONG. Mr. President, I am frank to confess that if the recommendation in that resolution could be carried into effect immediately, and we could be assured that the desired change in our judicial system would be effected in that mode, I would certainly favor it, and it would be all I should ask. I went into the caucuss and opposed the adoption of the Constitution last year, and the main grounds of my argument were, that in my opinion, we, as a people, were too young; that the amount of public property in this Territory which would be taxable under that Constitution was too small to warrant this people in assuming the responsibilities and obligations of a State Government, the support of which must fall so onerously upon the small amount of property which was then within our confines. I proposed that we should wait until we had the material wealth on which to base a State Government, so far as property was concerned, so that our revenues might be sufficient to meet our expenses. But, sir, since that time, in the short space of less than a year, I have seen so many of the evil workings of a Territorial Government like ours, situated so far distant from the central Government, to which men are looking for appointments; I have seen, in our judicial department, such an extraordinary lack of ability to come up to the requirements of our condition, in the men who have received appointments in that department, that I have come to the conclusion that some remedy is absolutely demanded. Nor is it alone a lack of ability on the part of our judges. Of our three judges at nisi prius, at this time, one is sick and the others have absented themselves, and thus blocked the wheels of justice; so that in reality we have no Courts at all; although I know, and every lawyer knows, that we have interests in litigation so vast in importance that the parties interested in them could almost afford to pay the expenses of a State Government for one year if by that means they could have their rights judicially determined. This is what impels me to favor a State organization. It is to obtain the power of electing our own judges, and just as many of them as we want, to transact our criminal and civil business. But I feel sure that if this resolution should pass, or one embodying the same propositions, and we should petition Congress for this change of judiciary, the petition would hang there and probably never be acted upon; or even if it were acted upon we should not be sure of obtaining any relief whatever; consequently, I have made up my mind to vote for and support a State Government, and I shall vote against this resolution.

Mr. NOURSE. It seems to me that this is not the place to discuss the question whether or not we should adopt a State Government, and therefore I am opposed to the resolution. We are here to make and submit to the people a Constitution and form of State Government, and then let them say whether or not they will have a State Government. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone the resolution indefinitely, and it was agreed to.

BASIS OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. CHAPIN. I now call up my resolution, and ask that the Secretary read it as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:—

Resolved, That the Constitution adopted by the late Convention be taken as the basis of the Constitution to be adopted by this Convention, and that the same be taken up in Committee of the Whole, and acted upon section by section.

Mr. NOURSE. I would inquire in relation to that, Mr. President, whether that will prevent the examination of different portions of the Constitution by committees? If so, I am not prepared to say whether it would be well or ill. I would like to have that understood.

The PRESIDENT. I suppose it would be entirely competent for the Convention at any stage to raise a committee to consider any portion of it.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will explain my view of it, Mr. President. I notice that the committee which was appointed before we took a recess did not report a recommendation that we should have any standing committees; consequently, as we must bring up our business in some manner, I think that this would be the best method. We can take up the Constitution, adopting it as a basis, and consider it in Committee of the Whole. Let us go on with it there, until we come to a disagreement, or until discussion arises, and then, if it should seem to be necessary, we can appoint a special committee of five or any other number, to which may be referred any particular section or article in regard to which there may be differences of opinion. I think it would be the better way to take up the Constitution in the manner the resolution proposes, and then as we see the necessity of appointing committees upon any particular portions, let them be appointed to report at subsequent meetings. I believe we can expedite business in that way much more rapidly than we can by referring the whole matter to various standing committees.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to offer an amendment to that resolution. I move to strike out the words—"The Constitution adopted by the late Convention," and insert the words—"The amended Constitution of California;" so as to read: "Resolved, That the amended Constitution of California be taken as a basis," etc.

Mr. BANKS. I second that motion.

Mr. DELONG. I trust, Mr. President, that the Convention will bear with me in the few remarks which I desire to make on this subject, because, whether successful or unsuccessful in the enforcement of the views which I present, it will probably be the last occasion on which I shall make any lengthy remarks in the Convention. I hope, therefore, that I may be heard patiently. Now, sir, I came here with this as a particular pet object which I had in view—that this Convention should adopt the amended Constitution of California as the basis of the one which they were to frame for submission to the people of Nevada. My reasons for wishing that are these: I know that this Territory is peopled almost exclusively by Californians—by men that have lived and acquired property there for years past—who have lived under and are acquainted with the Constitution of that State as it has been construed from time to time by the Supreme Court of that State. They have come into this Territory and found that here the leading and paramount interests of our Territory are similar to those which they left behind them in the State of California. This important fact renders the Constitution and laws of California peculiarly applicable to us; for if they were applicable to the wishes and wants of Californians at home, they are equally applicable here, so long as our leading and paramount interests are the same. These men have acquired interests here under a knowledge of the laws as they are established there. They have regulated their intercourse with each other here as it is regulated there, to a greater or less extent. In fact, they have brought with them the peculiar customs and usages which prevail there, under the Constitution and laws of that State, and they have been governed by them in the acquirement of property here. Now no other State in the Union, and no other land on the globe, except perhaps some of our remote Territories, have those peculiar interests which we have in common with California, and consequently the Constitution and laws of any other State would be decidedly more inapplicable to us than would the Constitution and laws of California. The people of that State have gone on under their Constitution for fifteen years, and have been pleased with it. It has worked well, and as a truly loyal, energetic, enterprising, and intelligent people, they are fully satisfied with it. Then why should we desire or expect to obtain anything better than that?

Tuesday,]

DELONG.

July 5.

Then, another thing, if you adopt any other Constitution, I care not whether it be better or worse than the one I propose by my amendment, and if in any single clause of that Constitution there is a difference in the reading, if any case arises which involves a construction of that clause of the Constitution, parties litigant will not rest content with a trial in the court of first instance, but in all cases, advised by their attorneys, they will appeal, and there will be the necessity of a construction of that clause. The opposing counsel on either side will always desire to have the Supreme Court of the State construe the clause for them. That is what led to that multifarious system of litigation in California. Perhaps the Supreme Court of California has had more business before it during the last twelve or fifteen years than the first appellate court of any other State in the Union, within the same period of time. And why? Because simply the people never will rest content with the decisions of the lower courts, but always appeal to the Supreme Court upon every possible Constitutional question, until they get the entire instrument construed by the court of last resort. Now, if we adopt the Constitution of California we have the benefit, without cost to us, of fifteen years of jurisprudence there, and all the litigation of their courts and the constructions which the Supreme Court have given to that instrument. The Supreme Court of that State has been presided over by men of marked ability. Such men as Stephen J. Field, and other eminent jurists whom I might name, have adorned that bench with their learning and legal talent, and their decisions would be received here by our courts, and by parties litigant, with scarcely ever a question, and without the expense and trouble of going to our Supreme Court to ascertain the true construction. If we find that Judge Field and other eminent judges have thrown the light of their genius upon any clause of the Constitution, we shall be willing at once to accept that construction.

Another thing: the California Reports are in nearly every lawyer's library here, and they are familiar to every business man; and they would become standard authorities on questions of law, because they are reports of decisions upon the same instrument which we would have as our fundamental law. I think it would save a world of expense, and a vast amount of litigation. And I think also—and in my opinion this is worthy of consideration—that when the question is presented before the people, whether or not we are to have a State Government, this action would prevent many men from doubting the wisdom of the instrument submitted for their approval or rejection. It would prevent men from going into the canvass and telling the people, who do not always stop to consider or to study, that the Constitution proposed contained some new-fangled machine that would blow them all up. [Laughter.] The reply to that would be that we had adopted the same instrument that California has, and under which that State has lived and prospered for fifteen years, and if California has got a good Constitution, then we have a good one also.

Now, I know, Mr. President, how much men become attached to their own works—to the things of their own creation. I know that a large and respectable number of gentlemen in this Convention were members of the last Constitutional Convention—gentlemen who framed this Constitution which I now hold in my hand; and it is natural for them to believe that in the framing of it they had framed a wise fundamental law. But they will agree with me when I state that on that point they and the people disagreed. That Constitution was repudiated. They may say it was not on account of any inherent defects in the instrument itself; but I say this, that there were defects, and glaring defects, which met with disapproval at the hands of this community, and which, if they were reiterated to-morrow, would secure to the work of our hands the same popular condemnation. It would be a fatal error, which would blast all our hopes that the people will adopt what we here shall construct.

I say, also, that there were many objectionable things contained in this instrument which were not brought to the attention of the people during the canvass, as they would have been, if there had not been more salient points to be assailed—things which were never mentioned by those who opposed this Constitution and State Government before the people. I know that, for I was one of the number that opposed it, and I was in most of their conferences. I know that the Constitution was assailable in many other points than those which we saw fit to submit to the people.

DELONG—CHAPIN—DUNNE.

Now in following the line of the California Constitution, we are only following in that of the Constitution of a still greater State; a Constitution which received the indorsement of many wise men. I speak of the Constitution of the State of New York; a State which has given her Constitution to very many of the western States of this Union. The Constitution of California was derived from that of New York, and from California it comes to us, and then we have a Constitution which all may understand and upon which there need be no disagreement.

I hope no feeling of personal pride, or desire to uphold that which they have themselves created, will prevent any gentlemen on this floor from selecting, as the basis of our new Constitution, that which is the best. We desire to give this people a fundamental law which will be wise, and which all may understand, and one also which they will adopt when called upon to vote upon it. We desire to remove as many as possible of the grounds of opposition, and of the arguments against a State government by those who are opposed to it, and who would naturally in the canvass attack the instrument itself as being unwise.

Now, sir, with these views, submitted hastily, I leave this proposition with the Convention. Is it not better to take that Constitution that we know to be a good one, because it fully protects the people in their lives, in their liberty, in their property, and in the pursuit of happiness; a Constitution that is better understood than any other one could be in this State, and one that is more applicable than any other, because our interests are more nearly identical with those of California than with those of any other State in the Union? Why should we not, for these reasons, take up that instrument which has received this thorough trial, and which has been found to be good and beneficent? Why not take that up and make it the basis of our action? And if in any particulars we see grounds of objection, we can offer amendments, and improve upon that which has been adopted and acted upon so long by the people of California. Let us improve upon it if we can, but let us assume it as the basis of our own fundamental law, and then we will have a fundamental law which originates not with us, not with a few men assembled here who may be, and probably are, less wise in their generation than many of the men who have thrown the light of their minds upon the Constitutions of California and of New York; but we will have the benefit of the wisdom of the past, the benefit of the jurisprudence of the past, the benefit of past experience; and I candidly believe that we shall then present to the people an instrument which they will be more ready to adopt than any new or untried experiment which could possibly be brought forth by us.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have a few remarks to make. I hope the amendment offered by my colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) will not prevail. The resolution which I offered admits of every facility for amending every section, and every line throughout the whole document. And now I would like to inform my colleague that, as the President very well knows, this Constitution which I offered as the basis for us to act upon now, was framed under a resolution offered by Judge Bryan in the late Convention, that the Constitution of California should be the basis of the Constitution there to be framed. Under that resolution we went to work, and this Constitution was framed and adopted by that Convention. Now I believe it will facilitate the business very much, to take up this document which was passed by the last Convention, and let us proceed under that as a basis; so that we will not have to begin, and do the whole work over again, which was done by the last Convention. This document is already a remodelling of the Constitution of California, so as to adapt it to our own peculiar circumstances, and our own local divisions and subdivisions, geographically, with reference to our courts, and every thing else; and it would require at least four times as much labor to go back and adapt the Constitution of California to all these things, over again, as it would to proceed under this Constitution. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DUNNE. I conceive that the manner in which this resolution itself operates, is a sufficient illustration of the fact that we shall hardly ever get through with the Constitution, if we attempt to discuss every one of its provisions in Committee of the Whole. Large bodies move slowly. In half an hour we have not determined on this simple question, and I think in two months we shall not have finished the entire Constitution, if we attempt to do the whole work in Committee of the Whole. I think well of the proposition to accept the last Constitution as the basis of our action, for that Constitution was the result of grave deliberation on the part of the best talent in the Territory, and I think for that reason it is entitled to our respect. At the same time, many persons here do not feel—I know it from the remarks made about me here—like taking up with old clothes. Still, I think we had better take the last Constitution as our basis. But I think, however, that we cannot get along with the work with advantage in Committee of the Whole, and I will therefore offer this resolution as a substitute:—

Resolved, That there be appointed a Standing Committee on Declaration of Rights, whose duty it shall be to report upon the first three Articles of the late Constitution of Nevada; a Standing Committee on Legislative Department, to report on Article IV; also on Executive Department, to report on Article V; also, on Judiciary, to report on Article VI, which shall also report upon Article VII of last Constitution; also, on Municipal and other Corporations, to report on Article VIII; also, on Finance and State Debt, to report on Article IX, which committee shall also report on Articles X and XI; also, on Education, to report on Article XII; also, on Militia, to report on Articles XIII, XIV, and XV, and that the balance of the late Constitution be reported from Committee of the Whole; and that the several committees appointed be requested not to consider themselves limited in their powers to the consideration of the Articles referred to them, but are requested to present any amendments thereto they may deem advisable.

Mr. BROSAN. I second the substitute, in order to get it before the house.

Mr. FITCH. I trust that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Humboldt will not be adopted. We have now before us, under the resolution of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin), the Constitution adopted by the last Convention, and if the amendment of the other gentleman from Storey (Mr. De Long) be adopted, we shall then be in exactly the same condition that we would be if we were to adopt the resolution offered by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne), so far as our practical work is concerned. You take, for instance, the Constitution of Nevada or the Constitution of California, and bring it into Committee of the Whole, and you can there take up the propositions advanced, seriatim, and pass upon them without difficulty. But if committees are appointed upon the different provisions in either of those Constitutions, and consider them, and bring them into the Convention, then, after that, we have got to consider them in Committee of the Whole. We can just as well proceed in the first place in Committee of the Whole, without considering them in a standing committee first, and then in Committee of the Whole afterward. I do not see that anything would be gained, but, on the contrary, it seems to me much valuable time would be lost, by adopting the suggestions of the gentleman from Humboldt.

The question was taken on the substitute proposed by Mr. Dunne, and it was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. De Long.

Mr. KENNEDY demanded the yeas and nays. [Mr. Fitch in the chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON (the President). It is not my purpose to unreasonably detain the Convention in the course of this discussion, but some views have been expressed which seem to me to call for a reply, and are entitled to the respectful consideration of the Convention. First, it is proposed to adopt the Constitution of Nevada, framed by the late Convention, and rejected by the people, as the basis of our action; and the pending amendment is that the Constitution of California be substituted as such basis of action. We well know that no appropriation has been made to pay the expenses of this Convention, and no inconsiderable part of the expenditures of the late Constitutional body, and, I may say, in all bodies of like nature, assembled under ordinary circumstances, has been the item of printing. Now, if we secure the California Constitution as a basis of action for this body, we will necessarily require a considerable amount of printing, as it will be impossible for us, with that considerate regard which the subject demands, to pass upon the varied subjects treated of, without having them, in some form, presented for our inspection, and this City cannot furnish, in sufficient number, copies of the Constitution of California to supply each member of the Convention; to say nothing of the facilities which would be required for making amendments, and placing them properly before the Convention, so as to be understood. But, on the contrary, if we take the Constitution of the State of Nevada, as adopted by the late Convention, as the groundwork and base of our action, we have it already in print. Several hundred copies of it are accessible, and when the necessity of amendments arises, as doubtless it will, we can use those printed copies, separating the different parts, and so obviate the necessity of any expense in the item of printing, and, at the same time, furnish all needed information. I speak without any pride of opinion in this matter, although, as most of you know, I had considerable hand in the framing of that document. I care nothing for that; I want the Convention to adopt a good, loyal Constitution, and one which will receive the indorsement of our respective constituencies; and I care not whose handiwork it may be. If it is such as to assure us a good State Government I am content.

Again, as has been correctly remarked by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Chapin), the Constitution of California was adopted as the basis of action of the late Convention which framed the Constitution referred to in the original motion. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. De Long,) has referred to the Constitution of New York. I have had occasion, perhaps more than he has, or if less, then his memory is more at fault, to compare the Constitution of New York with that of California, and I cannot perceive that twenty sections of the one earlier framed, that of New York, has, without some material alterations, been incorporated in the Constitution of California; and I think it would be within the bounds of truth to assert that not even ten consecutive sections of the California Constitution are to be found in the fundamental law of New York. There, the Judicial system is entirely unlike that of California. The same may be said of their Legislative and Executive departments. The Declaration of Rights of California contains not three consecutive lines as embodied in the Constitution of New York. Indeed, in all its essential features, the differences are important and essential. So that, to my mind, the gentleman's argument should have no possible weight. But, on the contrary, the embodied labors of the late Convention has section following section, without the substitution of a word, or change of a single clause, copied from the Constitution of California as it now exists. In all essential features of the Judicial department, it is word for word with that of California. In the Legislative department it proceeds further, and provides annual sessions for a given time, in the infancy of our State Government; but, following in the same beaten track that California has pursued, by the amendments recently adopted by her, after a limited time, their Constitution also proposes biennial sessions of its Legislature.

PRESIDENT—TOZER—NOURSE.

[July 5.

I might go on and enumerate instance after instance where this Constitution is word for word, and line for line, the same; and I might say article after article have been taken, transferred without change, from the Constitution of the State of California. Now, why should we go back and do this work over again, involving the necessity of this additional expense and trouble, by adopting the Constitution of California as our basis instead of taking something which we have already before us in print, and which we can use for every purpose?

I recognize the force of the gentleman's objection in reference to judicial decisions, and I will say to the gentleman, that in the late Convention, when I advocated the adoption of the Constitution of California as the basis, among the reasons, stated by myself and other gentlemen, was this very argument; and I think we have all the advantages to which he refers in reference to that subject, in this instrument. There may have been some changes, but if they are unnecessary we can reject them. I have no doubt there will be disagreement as to many of the features contained in this instrument, but nevertheless, as a basis, it is substantially the same as the Constitution of California, and I think it would be a great auxiliary, and will very much facilitate our labors to adopt the Constitution framed by our predecessors. I hope we shall vote down the amendment and adopt the resolution as proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Chapin), taking the Constitution framed for the State of Nevada as the basis of our action.

Mr. TOZER. I am opposed to the amendment offered by my colleague, (Mr. DeLong), and shall vote in favor of the original resolution as presented by my other colleague, (Mr. Chapin.) During the session and debates of the Constitutional Convention which met in this room, I believe, when their labors were well nigh completed, a public meeting was held in Storey County, composed of a goodly number of the citizens of that county; and I was one of a committee of several—I do not know how many—appointed to come down to Carson and confer with our delegates here, expressing our views and the views of the meeting which appointed us, upon that Constitution. The Constitution had been published from time to time, and we were in various ways apprised of its provisions. It was well nigh completed, and it met with entire approval, except in one or two particulars. We came here to confer with our delegates, and with delegates from other portions of the Territory, and we told them that the Constitution, in most particulars, met with our approval, and we should support it heartily and cheerfully, and were in favor of a State organization; but that if the objectionable features referred to were allowed to remain as a part of the Constitution, we should feel it to be our duty to ourselves and to the entire people of the Territory to oppose that Constitution. Those features were retained, and that Constitution met with disapproval and strong resistance, and was defeated. Now I know, from conversations with many people, not only in the county which I have the honor, in part, to represent, but with people from other sections of the Territory, that this Constitution which I hold in my hand, adopted by the late Convention, will now meet with their approval if those few objectionable features, to which I have referred, are stricken out of it, and if, in perhaps some few other slight particulars, it should be amended.

The argument of my colleague (Mr. DeLong) that the old Constitution, if adopted as the basis of the one we are about to frame, will lead to opposition merely on that account, and that the old Constitution might have met with opposition in other particulars besides those which were referred to before the people, and will meet with such opposition now, if taken as a basis for the new one which we are about to form, it seems to me goes for naught. Whatever Constitution we frame, whatever we adopt as a basis, will most undoubtedly meet with some opposition, and with great opposition, perhaps; but I do not think that any Constitution can be framed by this Convention which will be more nearly perfect, and more in accordance with the general views and wishes of the people of this Territory, than the one which was formed by the late Convention, with the exceptions to which I have alluded.

For these reasons, and for many others, which I shall refrain from giving at this time, I hope that the original resolutions as proposed by my colleague (Mr. Chapin) will prevail.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. NOURSE. I only wish to say a word on this matter for the reason that I want to say that word which the well known modesty of the President and the other gentleman who were members of the former Convention, naturally will not allow them to utter; that is, that I think the Constitution adopted by the former Convention is an excellent one; [laughter]. I think that that Convention performed its duty with rare fidelity and ability. If the California Constitution be suitable for us because California is like Nevada, why then the Nevada Constitution is more suitable because Nevada is more like us than California is. [Laughter.] This Constitution has been prepared by our best talent, and with a full consideration of all the other State Constitutions, including that of California.

Now, in regard to the argument of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong), my reading of the judicial decisions of California has not been such as to inspire me with any profound respect, either for the decisions of California, or for the judges who made them. While there has been much merit in some of them, yet in others, so far as I can judge, I do not think that the decisions according to California, upon matters that have also been decided in other States—and these are after all the bulk of the decisions—are such as would be entitled to or would receive much weight; and I do not think that the bulk of the California decisions upon questions that come up will, after a little while, have as much weight here as they have now. I do not think that disputed questions that may come up under the Constitution, even if they be in the very wording of the Constitution of California, will by any means necessarily be deemed to have been settled by the decisions which the Supreme Court of California may have already made upon the same questions. Therefore, although I submit these views with diffidence—having come here as an immigrant, and never having been a Californian—I no not give as much weight to that point which the gentleman makes as to others.

I confess that I am not well posted in the Constitution of California, though I have had occasion to examine it somewhat; but I have examined this Constitution of Nevada with a good deal of care, and I think it is as good a one as I ever did examine. I think there are changes which must be made, on account of the changed condition of our affairs, and some changes in principle, perhaps; but I think that those changes will be much more slight than would have to be made in any other Constitution which we might adopt as a basis to meet the wants of our people. I presume that I shall have myself some propositions to make, and I presume that they will be voted down [laughter]; and others may have propositions to make, and perhaps they will be voted up; but, on the whole, I am satisfied that the Constitution prepared and submitted by the other Convention was not voted down for want of merit in it contained; but it was voted down, rather, because the people did not want a State Government, for which the state of society or the state of litigation has now produced a demand, bringing about a great revulsion in the feeling of the Territory on that subject. I believe that that Constitution, or one substantially like it, if submitted to the people this summer, will carry, and under it we will grow and flourish, and have quite as good a state of society as even California has.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope, also, that the amendment of my colleague (Mr. DeLong) will not prevail. I was a member of the last Constitutional Convention, though I had very little to do with the framing of that instrument, on account of a severe and dangerous attack of illness, and therefore I can be allowed to speak with more fulness and freedom on that subject than those gentlemen present who aided in the labors of that Convention.

In the first place, I agree with the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) that this Constitution—I mean the Constitution adopted by the last Convention—is well adapted to meet the wants of the people of this Territory, with a very few modifications. I well remember that in that Convention, before I was taken sick, Judge Bryan, Governor Johnson, Mr. Stewart, Judge Brosnan, and other members, urged with a great deal of force the propriety and importance of adopting the Constitution of the State of California as a basis for the framing of the new Constitution. And I know that I received positive information from two or three of those gentlemen, subsequent to the adoption by the Convention of the California Constitution as a basis, that where it was deemed advisable to incorporate the language of the Constitution of California into the new Constitution, especially in those clauses involving cases which might arise in our own Courts, similar to cases that had already been adjudicated in California, they would incorporate the words fully and completely which they found in the Constitution of California, in order to meet that very want.

And, again, with the gentleman from Washoe, I have not that very profound admiration for the judiciary of California—some of its decisions, at least—that my colleague (Mr. DeLong) has. To my knowledge, members of that Supreme Court, to whom have been accorded great judicial and legal ability, have rendered decisions that subsequently the same Court, being differently constituted, has reversed, and in many instances I would hardly know which side of those judicial decisions I would take. As the gentleman from Washoe has remarked, I do not believe that the decisions of California will be binding, or will to a great extent control the Courts of Nevada. We are different from California. In almost every respect this Territory may be declared to be sui generis. There is nothing on the east or the west, the north or the south, like her, and she needs a Constitution based upon her own peculiarities—a Constitution adapted to her own condition—a Constitution that will meet the wants of her mining, her agricultural, and such other interests as she may have.

I regret, however, that my colleague, (Mr. Chapin,) should have presented the resolution he did, providing that we should take up this Constitution section by section. This Constitution was adopted with great care, and, I will say, without any disrespect to this body, by gentlemen equally as competent, I think, as this Convention; and, after its adoption, I took a great deal of pains to read the newspapers of this Territory, and the newspapers of California and Oregon, in their comments in regard to this Constitution, and their general judgment was one of hearty approval. They all agreed, without an exception, that it was one of the best instruments of the kind that had ever been offered to a people. The Convention adopted it after five or six weeks of hard labor, and serious and sober deliberation. The members of that Convention came fresh from the people, and they represented their constituents faithfully. It was submitted to the people for their ratification, and I have yet to learn of any respectable body of men; I have yet to learn of any newspaper in this Territory; I have yet to learn of any individual on the stump in this Territory, that ever assailed that Constitution in any of its features, save and except those four or five clauses which it is not necessary for me at this time to name. With these four or five exceptions, it was all and every thing that the people could possibly desire. I ask, then, why this change in our feelings at the present time? I ask, then, why not take this Constitution as a basis of our new Constitution?

Let us adopt this Constitution as a basis, and then I would say, scatter it around on every desk, give each member twenty-four hours to write out any emendations or additions which he may think necessary, then let the several propositions be referred to a committee for arrangement and segregation, that we may have clearly and distinctly before the minds of this Convention, the several alterations that may be required, and upon those alterations let us agree in Committee of the Whole. Take this course, and I will vouch for it that in five days' time we will have this Constitution completed and ready to be submitted to the people. It occurs to me that this is the most simple, straightforward way. I can hardly see the propriety or reason for pursuing a different course. We will then take up those sections, considering four or five alterations proposed by me, half a dozen by my colleague, as many more by some other gentleman, and so on, and that will be all that will be necessary to consider; after which, I have no doubt, we shall be ready to pass it as a whole. Then why spend our time here, running up a bill against the new State? Or why should the Legislature be called upon to pass upon bills that may be created here in the course of a session of three, four, or five weeks; for we shall be compelled to continue in session for that length of time if we take it up section by section, whereas the work might all be done in four or five days. With a few exceptions, I am willing to give this Constitution my approving vote now; and you are willing, and every other member is willing to give it his vote, after, perhaps, some trifling amendments. But if it is taken up section by section, some member will speak upon a proposition in it, and then I may feel called upon to reply by some remarks, and others may think it necessary to defend their views, and thus we shall spend as much time upon it as though we took the Constitution of some other State. It will all be new work.

I therefore hope that some gentleman will move that each member be requested to make such amendments as he desires within a limited time, and that then we go into Committee of the Whole and act upon them, and that thereafter no new matter be introduced unless, perhaps, by a two-thirds vote. If we adopt this plan, I fully believe that four or five days will be ample to complete our work.

Mr. DELONG. I feel heartily gratified, Mr. President, to find how cordially I am supported in my views, especially by members of my own delegation. [Laughter.] In the first place, I am assailed, or my position is attempted to be beaten down, by my exceedingly plausible colleague who rises and insists that it is absolutely preposterous to make any such basis as I propose. And then the Chair descends from that high position in which I helped to place him, and gives as a reason why my views should not be adopted, the impossibility of obtaining a sufficient number of copies of the Constitution of the State of California for the consideration of the members of this body. Now, if we adopt my amendment I will agree to furnish every man in the Convention with a copy by to-morrow night, and if Carson be indeed so poor that she has not twenty-five or thirty copies within her limits, I can procure them from my own city by return of mail.

Now one word also in reply to the remarkable attack upon my position that the California Constitution is the offspring of the Constitution of New York. I did not state that it was literally copied from that of New York, but I stated that it was drafted in its general principles from that instrument, and I still so state; and in support of the position I assume, I refer the Chair, or any body else, to the reports of the debates of the Constitutional Convention of California which framed that instrument.

Then it is said that the California Constitution was taken as a basis when this Constitution of Nevada was drawn. If so, then the basis I propose is a correct one, or else the basis upon which this Constitution is drafted must be wrong, one of the two. Now, sir, the basis being correct, why should we adopt as our basis a basis built upon another basis rather than the basis upon which that instrument was originally predicated?

I said there were many other objections to this Constitution of Nevada which were not urged against it on the stump, but which might have been taken up, and would have been, but that it was sufficiently assailable upon the points upon which we did assail it. I still say that, and it is my candid belief, taking this entire instrument into consideration. I do not care if it has been overwhelmed with newspaper compliments. Why, sir, they always compliment such things. Newspaper editors are not always the most competent of men, and do not always know whether a thing is wise or unwise, nor do they always thoroughly examine it; consequently, their endorsement does not go far with me, unless I am sure that they have well considered what they are talking about, which is not commonly the case with newspaper editors. I wish to say further, that the basis being correct, as has been conceded, with the Constitution of California before us we can make such few amendments as are necessary to make it applicable to our own interests in a very short time.

How is it, I should like to know, that we are such a peculiar people as my colleague (Mr. Collins) has remarked, different from the North and the South and the East and the West? I do not so understand it. What is the paramount interest of our Territory? Why, the mining interest. What is the paramount interest of California? The mining interest. Where do our people come from? There are immigrants here from every portion of the globe, and so there are in California. Our people and the people of California are alike in that respect. I say I cannot perceive in any leading particular any difference between our wants and the necessities for a good government for us and the wants and necessities of California.

These gentlemen have backed up their views by assailing the Supreme Court of California, and even my worthy friend, the immigrant, as he styled himself, informs us that he differs with that Court in its decisions, and in company with my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) he assails the character of the decisions of the Supreme Court of California. Now I think I know the real objection that my worthy colleague has to that Court, and its jurisprudence. I know that that gentleman has entertained a strong antipathy to the Supreme Court of California, ever since the time when that Court gave, as the saying was, "the law to the North, and the nigger to the South," in the decision involving the right to hold the slave Archie. But I know that there are men who have held positions upon that Supreme Court Bench, whose equals as lawyers, and as judges, are not to be found in this Territory or upon the Pacific coast; and in speaking thus, I believe I shall be borne out by the entire legal profession in this Territory, and in California also. I know that occasionally some rather shabby decision may have been made, following, perhaps, on the heels of some unworthy purpose; but still, as a general thing, I guarantee that the decisions of the Supreme Court of California will not be overturned by the California Courts hereafter, and hardly can be by our Courts here. Then if my views on this subject are correct, the adoption of the California Constitution as a basis will save this people an immense deal of litigation.

I made this proposition, well knowing that I should meet with a great deal of opposition—that kind of opposition which is founded upon that principle which leads the indulgent and delighted mother to imagine the homeliest baby in Christendom to be a beauty, and to claim that others ought to view it in the same way. I knew very well that the members of the Convention which framed this Constitution would be likely to endorse it, but I hardly expected that their converts would number so many that they would be able to carry it in this Convention. At all events, I have considered it my duty to urge the adoption of the California Constitution as a basis. I believe it is economy of time, and if we take it up section by section, and consider it, I do not believe that a dozen features of it will ultimately be amended by this Convention; while I know that this Constitution of Nevada, if it is taken as the basis, will receive multifarious amendments. This instrument is filled with legislation, and the people have shown that they are opposed to legislation in the Constitution. It fixes the salary of State officers; it ties the hands of the Legislature, so as to give it scarcely anything to do; and I recollect that that feature in particular, met with the greatest amount of sarcasm last fall. It was said then, and very justly too, that the Constitutional Convention which met one year ago, seemed to be impressed with the idea that it contained the only wise, just, true, and honest men that were ever going to be, or ever could be got together in this Territory, and that they consequently went to work to legislate, to fix salaries, and to do everything else, and left the Legislature nothing whatever to do but to enact into laws those strange and wild provisions which are to be found in no other fundamental law in Christendom. I know that these things have had weight with many men, and I am satisfied that much more of opposition will be manifested against our work, if we take this Constitution of Nevada as a basis, than if we take as our basis that which they say was the basis of this, namely, the Constitution of the State of California.

Mr. EARL. I offer this resolution as a substitute :—

Resolved, That each member of this Convention be requested to hand in, by to-morrow, at ten o'clock, A. M., such amendments and changes as he may deem necessary to be made in the Constitution formed for the so called State of Nevada; and that such changes shall be considered in Committee of the Whole, and the remainder of the Constitution shall be adopted in Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. FITCH. I rise to a point of order. There is already an amendment pending, and the substitute is not, therefore, in order.

The PRESIDENT. A substitute was offered, which has been voted down, and the question now is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong.) The Chair thinks the substitute is in order.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to have the time changed. I think to-morrow morning would give us too short a time.

Mr. EARL. It seems to me that this resolution will save us torrents of talk. All we want is to get on with our business, and in this way we can cut short an immense amount of argument. This Constitution is undoubtedly as good a one as we can expect to get up. We have had the experience of those who have gone before us, and they have given their careful attention to the subject, and all we need is to make a few changes. So far as I am concerned I have already taken a copy of it, and marked in it all the changes I desire to propose. I think others can do the same in a short time, and in that way I have no doubt we can get through our work in a few days.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like myself to change that resolution, so as make it apply only to a portion of the instrument. It seems to me that it is rather forcing matters to require us to examine the whole thing before to-morrow morning, and be prepared then to offer our amendments, or else to be cut off, finally. It is more of a task than I can perform, for one, to read through, and carefully consider this whole document; and I suggest the propriety of only taking the first three articles for to-morrow, and then two or three more for the next day, and so on. It strikes me that the resolution, as it stands, is slightly overrating our ability.

Mr. EARL. I will accept an amendment, if the gentleman desires, requiring the amendments to be offered to all that part of the Constitution up to the fifth Article.

Mr. FITCH. I will make a suggestion, which, if adopted, will enable us to save several days' time. If we take up some of the first of these Articles first—the Bill of Rights, the right of suffrage, and other things liable to provoke discussion—we shall be likely to occupy several days' time in their consideration. This being the early part of the session of the Convention, gentlemen will feel more at liberty to speak at length. But if we leave those things, and commence in the middle, going through the Constitution to the end, and leaving those controverted subjects to the last, probably members will be considerably tired of sitting here, and not disposed, therefore, to occupy so much time in the consideration and discussion of those sections. The latter portion of the Constitution will not lead to much discussion, and in the way I have proposed, we can shorten the time considerably.

Mr. EARL. Perhaps, then, we had better commence with Article VIII, and consider the latter portion of the Constitution first.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think there had better be an amendment to this substitute, if it is going to be adopted, providing that a standing committee be appointed upon the schedule. That is a matter, it strikes me, which it would be impossible to arrange in the manner proposed by either of the resolutions originally offered, or the substitute. It strikes me that it is necessary to have a committee on the schedule to arrange for the change from the Territorial to the State organization, and for that reason I offer an amendment to the substitute, that a committee of five be appointed upon the schedule.

The PRESIDENT. I think gentlemen are proceeding too fast. We have here, first, a proposition to adopt the old Constitution as a basis; then an amendment to adopt the Constitution of the State of California as a basis; and finally a substitute is offered for the latter. I think no further amendments can be entertained at this time. If the Convention will tolerate a suggestion, I would say that the schedule should be the last matter to consider, because everything else must be first proposed and acted upon, before you can know how to make it harmonious in all its different parts. I trust that gentlemen will not propose amendments so fast that we shall lose sight of our starting point. The question was, first, on the resolution to adopt the Constitution of Nevada as a basis; then on the amendment to that, adopting the Constitution of California; and now the question comes on the substitute or amendment, offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Earl.)

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a point of order. It is, that the proposition of my colleague, (Mr. Earl), is not a substitute, because it does not relate to the subject matter of the original motion.

The PRESIDENT. It embraces a part, at least, of the subject matter; but the Chair will suggest that it will simplify matters to take the vote first on the original proposition.

Mr. EARL. In order to get a vote upon that proposition, I will withdraw my motion for the present, and after the vote is taken I will offer my resolution.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am glad the gentleman has withdrawn it, for I am not willing to ask members who are comparatively unacquainted with it to take this whole document and swallow it at once, without even reading it, or having an opportunity of intelligently passing upon it. I believe we ought not to do that.

The PRESIDENT (interrupting.) The only question now is on the original motion, with the pending amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) to substitute the Constitution of California.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the original resolution offered by Mr. Chapin.

Mr. EARL. I will now offer my resolution as an amendment to that resolution.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which had been modified, as follows:—

Resolved, That each member of this Convention be requested to hand in by to-morrow, at 10 o'clock, A. M. such amendments as he may deem necessary to that portion of the Constitution formed for the so-called State of Nevada which commences with Section 8 and continues to the end of said Constitution; and that such changes be considered in Committee of the Whole to-morrow, and that the remainder of said Constitution be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the gentleman include the schedule?

Mr. EARL. I include all after Section 8.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to amend so as to read, "commencing with Article IV." That will take in the whole Legislative Department, and I think there is likely to be as little discussion there as anywhere. I mean to include only Article IV.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that we take in Articles IV, V, and VI. That is about as much as we can do in one day's work.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest

EARL—FITCH—BROSNAN—BANKS.

[July 5.

to the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Earl,) that his motion now embraces the schedule, and gentlemen will see that it will be impossible to complete that until we have completed the balance of the instrument.

Mr. EARL. I suggest that we take up from Article V to Article VIII, inclusive, and consider the remainder. Certainly, it seems to me that any gentleman could take up this whole document, after having had it before him for a month, and no doubt made up his mind upon its provisions, as nearly every gentleman probably has done, and state what changes he thinks are necessary. I, for one, can make all the changes necessary in my opinion between now and to-morrow at 10 o'clock; in fact, I have done so since yesterday, and have marked them all in my copy. I think I will fall back on my original motion, to take it all up from the first to the fifth articles.

Mr. FITCH. I will move, as an amendment, that we commence by taking up Articles III, IV, V, and VI, that is, "the distribution of powers," and the legislative, executive and judicial departments. If that is too much to consider in one day, it is not too much, I think, for gentlemen to go over and prepare their amendments to in one evening. We can take up those four articles, and if we do not succeed in getting through with them in one day, we can take another day for them. I trust the gentleman will not insist on our considering the first and second articles at present, namely, the "Bill of Rights" and the "Right of Suffrage," which would be calculated to produce an immense amount of discussion at this time. I make my motion, Mr. President, upon the hypothesis that the motion of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) be adopted, making this Constitution the basis. My amendment will simply be that Articles IV, V, and VI be noted for to-morrow.

Mr. EARL. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not see the object of this proposition; I cannot see that it economizes time at all. If we are to have discussion upon the first, or upon the second article, it must come at some time, and we may as well have it at once. I am one of those who think that if I have to meet the devil on the way, I would prefer to meet him boldly, in front, at the outset, and then, after overcoming him, my journey is smooth and easy the rest of the way. I therefore see no use in adopting this proposition and commencing at the middle of our work. I think the more direct, as well as the most expeditious way, is to commence with Article I, and go through our work in its regular sequence. If we can get through with Article I, well and good; or if we can finish the first and second Articles in one day, so much the better. At any rate, we shall know that we are progressing on our journey in a consecutive and harmonious manner. I am decidedly opposed to the amendment, the proposition, or the suggestion, whatever it may be called, pre-mented by my colleague on my right, (Mr. Fitch), and I had thought that the proposition made by my other colleague, (Mr. Chapin), as originally made, would cover the whole ground. It may be said that by taking up this first Article in Committee of the Whole, it will be necessary to read it through. Undoubtedly it will have to be read through in Committee of the Whole, and then, after any amendments which may be moved are acted upon, we adopt it in committee and report it to the house, where it is passed, and there is an end of it. When we come to a section that needs amendment, in order to satisfy gentlemen, if we cannot agree readily upon such amendment, the Convention may refer the section to a special committee, to report subsequently, and go on with the consideration of the following sections. I do think that is the best and most expeditious way, and I hope all these amendments will be voted down.

Mr. FITCH. I am perfectly willing, as well as my colleague, to meet the devil boldly in the face; but if it be necessary to have a contest with him, I prefer that it should be limited in duration. I am quite confident that if we commence the deliberations of the Convention by considering the proposition in the first and second Articles—if we begin with the discussion of the much vexed question of the paramount allegiance clause, or the equally vexed question of allowing the right of suffrage to persons who have been in arms against the Government, I am quite sure, from what I have learned of the views of members here, that the discussion will keep us in session till doomsday, or, at least, till the patience of the Convention is worn out, before we come to any conclusion. But let us go on and discuss first the more practical questions—those principles upon which we are to form our local government, and by the time we have disposed of them, we shall perhaps have consumed so much of the time of the Convention, and have so wearied members out with speeches, that they will be willing to let us off with perhaps only one day upon "paramount allegiance," and another on the "right of suffrage." They will say, "Any way to get rid of it and enable us to go home." But if we get into these discussions now, they will consume four or five days at least. For these reasons I am for postponing those sections which are likely to provoke discussion until we have disposed of and settled those which are not likely to provoke discussion.

Mr. BANKS. I understand the question to be this: shall we commence at the beginning of our work and pursue it regularly in the ordinary course of a business-like transaction, or shall we commence in the middle of our work? Now, any man of ordinary experience in life would say, upon general principles, that it is best to commence at the beginning. What reasons, then, have we heard offered for changing the rule which governs in the ordinary affairs of life? Simply such reasons as are based upon the assumption that we are not a grave, deliberative body, but a mere set of schoolboys, incapable of regulating our own conduct, incapable of doing what we all feel to be necessary and right, and then going home. But I think the logic of those gentlemen is singularly defective in this particular, that they insist upon our putting off the hardest work until the last part of the session. On the other hand, I insist that it will be much better to take up those sections which are likely to consume most time at the first, because that will give all of us an opportunity to investigate the remaining portions of the Constitution at our leisure moments, while in public here we are considering and debating those difficult propositions. It will give us an opportunity in the evenings and mornings, and at all times when we are not here in session, to consider the grave questions arising in this Constitution. I confess, for one, that although I have had considerable experience in deliberative bodies, yet I am not prepared, and will not be prepared until I have heard everything within the bounds of reason which is to be offered, pro and con., concerning each of those propositions, to decide what will be my vote upon them. If gentlemen here are so wise as to be able to sit down in a room by themselves, and without any discussion, or comparison of views, decide what they will or will not do in every case, why, all I can say is, that they possess more wisdom than any man with whom it has been my fortune to communicate in regard to the formation of views. Therefore, I hope that the suggestion just now made by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan), will prevail. Let each man, as he finds time, prepare any amendments he may deem necessary, bring them in on paper, and present them. Insist that we ought to take up the first Article and pass through it, and then the next Article, in the ordinary course of business, and so on till we get through with the whole instrument, and when we get through we shall be ready to adjourn.

BANKS.

Mr. EARL'S amendment was modified so as to read as follows:—

Resolved, That each member of this Convention be requested to hand in by to-morrow, at 10 o'clock, A. M., such amendments as he may deem necessary to that portion of the Constitution formed for the so-called State of Nevada, as may be embodied in the IIIrd, IVth, Vth and VIth Articles, and that the said Articles be considered in Committee of the Whole, to-morrow.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the original resolution, as proposed by Mr. Chapin, and it was agreed to.

So the Constitution framed by the Convention of 1863 was adopted as a basis, as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the State of Nevada, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, insure domestic tranquillity, and form a more perfect Government, do establish this Constitution.

ARTICLE I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whensoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

SEC. 3. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law; and, if three-fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a two-third vote of each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict notwithstanding this provision.

SEC. 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.

SEC. 5. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension.

SEC. 6. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor shall cruel nor unusual punishment be inflicted, nor shall witnesses be unreasonably detained.

SEC. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties; unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for capital or otherwise infamous crime, (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of the militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny, under the regulation of the Legislature,) except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and in any trial in any court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel, as in civil actions. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made or secured, except in cases of war, riot, fire, or great public peril, in which case compensation shall be afterwards made.

SEC. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions and civil actions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted or exonerated; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

Sec. 10. The people shall have the right freely to assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances.

Sec. 11. The Legislature shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all persons.

Sec. 12. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be maintained by this State in time of peace, and in time of war no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.

Sec. 13. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war except in the manner to be prescribed by law.

Sec. 14. Representation shall be apportioned according to population.

Sec. 15. The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale for payment of any debts or liabilities hereafter contracted; and there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.

Sec. 16. No bill of attainder, ex-post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

Sec. 17. Foreigners who are or who may hereafter become bona fide residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights, in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property, as native-born citizens.

Sec. 18. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crimes, shall ever be tolerated in this State.

Sec. 19. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons and things to be seized.

Sec. 20. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies, or giving them aid and comfort.

Sec. 21. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.

ARTICLE II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States, (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

Sec. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot, insane, or disloyal person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Sec. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have lost a residence by reason of his absence while employed in the service of the United States or of this State, nor gained a residence while a student in any seminary of learning.

Sec. 4. No soldier in the army of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed within this State.

Sec. 5. The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be absent from this State in the military or naval service of the United States; provided, that the payment of a poll tax, or registration of such a voter, shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections.

Sec. 6. During the day on which any general election shall be held in this State, no qualified elector shall be arrested by virtue of any civil process.

Sec. 7. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by the Legislature, or by either branch thereof, shall be viva voce.

Sec. 8. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment by proper proofs of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as hereby established.

Sec. 9. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll tax of not less than two nor exceeding four dollars from each male person resident in the State of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, one-half to be applied for State and one-half for county purposes; and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right of voting.

Sec. 10. All citizens of the United States and bona fide residents of the Territory of Nevada, at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be held under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors herein provided, shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election and upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution.

ARTICLE III.

DIVISION OF POWERS.

SECTION 1. The powers of the Government of the State of Nevada shall be divided into three separate departments—the Legislative, the Executive, and Judicial—and no persons charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases herein expressly directed or permitted.

ARTICLE IV.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The Legislative authority of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated, "The Legislature of the State of Nevada," and the sessions of such Legislature shall be held at the seat of government of the State.

Sec. 2. The sessions of the Legislature shall be biennial, and shall commence on the first Monday of January next ensuing the election of its members, unless the Governor of the State shall, in the interim, convene the Legislature by proclamation.

Sec. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially by the qualified electors of their respective districts on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election.

Sec. 4. Senators shall be chosen at the same time and places as members of the Assembly, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election.

Sec. 5. Senators and members of the Assembly shall be duly qualified electors in the respective counties and districts which they represent, and the number of Senators shall not be less than one-third, nor more than one-half of that of the members of the Assembly.

Sec. 6. Each House shall judge of the qualifications, elections and returns of its own members. Choose its own officers, (except the President of the Senate,) determine the rules of the proceedings, and may punish its members for disorderly conduct, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected, expel a member.

Sec. 7. Either House, during the session, may punish, by imprisonment, any person not a member, who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not extend beyond the final adjournment of the session.

Sec. 8. No Senator or member of Assembly shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, nor for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office of profit under this State which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term, except such office as may be filled by elections by the people.

Tuesday.]

SEC. 9. No person holding any lucrative office under the Government of the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this State; provided, that Postmasters whose compensation does not exceed five hundred dollars per quarter, or commissioner of deeds, shall not be deemed as holding a lucrative office.

SEC. 10. Any person who shall be convicted of the embezzlement or defalcation of the public funds of this State, or who may be convicted of having given or offered a bribe to procure his election or appointment to office, or received a bribe or reward to aid in the procurement of office for any other person, shall be disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in this State.

SEC. 11. Members of the Legislature shall be privileged from arrest on civil process during the session of the Legislature, and for fifteen days next before the commencement of each session.

SEC. 12. When vacancies occur in either House, the Governor shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 13. A majority of all the members elected to each House shall constitute a quorum to transact business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner and under such penalties as each House may prescribe.

SEC. 14. Each House shall keep a journal of its own proceedings, which shall be published, and the ayes and noes of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of any three members present, be entered on the journal.

SEC. 15. The doors of each House shall be kept open during its session, and neither shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be holding their sessions.

SEC. 16. Any bill may originate in either House of the Legislature, and all bills passed by one may be amended in the other.

SEC. 17. Each law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject and matter, properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title; and no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but, in such case, the act as revised, or section as amended, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

SEC. 18. Every bill shall be read by sections on three several days, in each House, unless, in case of emergency, two-thirds of the House, where such bill may be pending, shall deem it expedient to dispense with this rule; but the reading of a bill by sections, on its final passage, shall in no case be dispensed with, and the vote on the passage of every bill, or joint resolution, shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be entered on the journals of each House; and a majority of all the members elected to each House, shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution, and all bills and joint resolutions so passed, shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses.

SEC. 19. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money shall be attached and published with the laws at every regular session of the Legislature.

SEC. 20. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Justices of the Peace and of Constables; for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors; regulating the practice of courts of justice; providing for changing the venue in civil and criminal cases; granting divorces; changing the names of persons; vacating roads, town plots, streets, alleys, and public squares; summoning and empanneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their compensation; regulating county and township business; regulating the election of county and township officers, and their compensation for the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county, and township purposes; in relation to fees and salaries; in relation to interest on money; providing for opening and conducting elections of State, county, or township officers, and designating the place of voting; providing for the sale of real estate belonging to minors or other persons laboring under legal disabilities.

SEC. 21. In all cases enumerated in the preceding sections, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the State.

SEC. 22. Provision may be made by general law for bringing suit against the State as to all liabilities originating after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 23. The enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: "The people of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows"—and no law shall be enacted except by bill.

SEC. 24. No lottery shall be authorized by the State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed.

SEC. 25. The Legislature shall establish a system of county and township government, which shall be uniform throughout the State.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Board of County Commissioners, in each county, and these County Commissioners shall jointly and individually perform such duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 27. Laws may be made to exclude from serving on juries all persons not qualified electors of this State, and all persons who shall have been convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, larceny, or other high crimes, unless restored to civil rights; and laws shall be passed regulating elections, and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influence thereon, from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

SEC. 28. No money shall be drawn from the State treasury as salary or compensation to any officer or employe of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, except in cases where such salary or compensation has been fixed by a law in force prior to the election or appointment of such officer or employe; and the salary or compensation so fixed shall neither be increased nor diminished so as to apply to any officer or employe of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, at such session; provided, that this restriction shall not apply to the first special and regular sessions of the Legislature.

SEC. 29. The first regular session of the Legislature under this Constitution may extend to ninety days, but no subsequent regular session shall exceed sixty days, nor any special session convened by the Governor exceed twenty days.

SEC. 30. A homestead not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land, outside of the limits of a town or city, or not exceeding one acre within the limits of any town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, of the aggregate value of five thousand dollars, shall be exempt from forced sale under any process of law, and shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists; but no property shall be exempt from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife; and laws shall be enacted providing for the recording of such homestead within the county in which the same may be situated.

SEC. 31. All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

SEC. 32. No law shall be passed authorizing married women to carry on business as sole traders.

SEC. 33. The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, County Recorders, who shall be ex-officio County Auditors, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, County Surveyors, Public Administrators, and other necessary officers, and fix by law their duties and compensation; provided, that in no case such compensation shall exceed in the aggregate, as salary and fees in office, the sum of four thousand dollars per annum, to any one of such officers, exclusive of the necessary expenses attendant upon the discharge of the duties of the office, except the Sheriff's, whose compensation in fees and salary shall in no case exceed the sum of six thousand dollars per annum, exclusive of expenses necessarily incurred in the discharge of the duties of said office. County Clerks shall be ex-officio Clerks of the Courts of Record in and for their respective counties.

SEC. 34. The members of the Legislature shall receive as compensation for their services, the sum of eight dollars for each day's actual attendance upon their legislative duties, at any regular or special session, and thirty cents for each mile traveled by the usual route in going to and returning from the place of meeting of the Legislature, and no further compensation or allowance shall be made to any member of the Legislature for the performance of his official duties; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of forty dollars for any general or special session, to each member; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant Governor, as President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

SEC. 35. In all elections for United States Senators, such elections shall be held in joint convention of both Houses of the Legislature. It shall be the duty of the Legislature which convenes next preceding the expiration of the term of such Senator, to elect his successor. If a vacancy in such Senatorial representation from any cause occurs, it shall be the duty of the Legislature then in session, or at the succeeding session thereof, to supply such vacancy. If the Legislature shall at any time as herein provided, fail to unite in a joint convention within twenty days after the commencement of the session of the Legislature for the election of such Senator, it shall be the duty of the Governor, by proclamation, to convene the two Houses of the Legislature in joint convention, within not less than five days nor exceeding ten days from the publication of his proclamation, and the joint convention, when so assembled, shall proceed to elect the Senator as herein provided.

SEC. 36. Every bill which may have passed the Legislature, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it originated, which shall enter such objections upon the journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it again pass both Houses by ayes and noes, by a majority of two-thirds of the members elected to each House, it shall become a law notwithstanding the Governor's objections. If any bill shall not be returned within five days after it shall have been presented to him, (Sunday excepted,) exclusive of the day on which he received it, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature, by its final adjournment, prevent such return, in which case it shall be a law, unless the Governor, within ten days next after the adjournment, (Sunday excepted,) shall file such bill, with his objections thereto, in the office of the Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the Legislature at its next session, in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor; and if the same shall receive the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, upon a vote taken by ayes and noes, to be entered upon the journals of each House, it shall become a law.

ARTICLE V.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The supreme executive power of this State shall be vested in a Chief Magistrate, who shall be Governor of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and places of voting for members of the Legislature, and shall hold his office for two years from the time of his installation and until his successor shall be qualified.

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, who is not a qualified elector, and who, at the time of such election, has not attained the age of twenty-five years; and who, except at the first election under this Constitution, shall not have been a citizen resident of this State for two years next preceding the election.

SEC. 4. The returns of every election for Governor, and other State officers voted for at the general election, shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of Government, directed to the Secretary of State, and on the third Monday of December succeeding such election, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Associate Justices shall meet at the office of the Secretary of State, and open and canvass the election returns for Governor and all other State officers, and forthwith declare the result and publish the names of the candidates elected. The persons having the highest number of votes for their respective offices shall be declared elected, but in case any two or more have an equal, and the highest number of votes for the same office, the Legislature shall by joint vote of both Houses, elect one of said persons to fill said office.

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Military forces of this State, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

SEC. 6. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of the Government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing from the officers of the Executive Department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 7. He shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

SEC. 8. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the next election and qualification of such officer.

SEC. 9. The Governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature, by a proclamation, and shall state to both houses, when organized, the purpose for which they have been convened, and the Legislature shall transact no legislative business except that for which they were specially convened, or such other legislative business as the Governor may call to the attention of the Legislature while in session.

SEC. 10. He shall communicate, by message, to the Legislature, at every regular session, the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 11. In case of a disagreement between the two houses, with respect to the time of adjournment, the Governor shall have power to adjourn the Legislature to such time as he may think proper; provided, it be not beyond the time fixed for the meeting of the next Legislature.

SEC. 12. No person shall, while holding any office under the United States Government, hold the office of Governor, except as herein expressly provided.

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves for a period not exceeding sixty days dating from the time of conviction, for all offences, except in cases of impeachment. Upon conviction for treason he shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. And if the Legislature should fail or refuse to make final disposition of such case, the sentence shall then be enforced at such time and place as the Governor by his order may direct. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of fine or forfeiture remitted, or reprieve, pardon, or commutation granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, its date, and the date of the remission, commutation, pardon, or reprieve.

SEC. 14. The Governor, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Attorney General, or a major part of them, of whom the Governor shall be one, may, upon such conditions and with such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments, and grant pardons after convictions in all cases, except treason and impeachments, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, relative to the manner of applying for pardons.

SEC. 15. There shall be a seal of this State, which shall be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called the "Great Seal of the State of Nevada."

SEC. 16. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and the authority of the State of Nevada, sealed with the Great Seal of the State, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 17. A Lieutenant Governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor, and his term of office, and his eligibility, shall also be the same. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, or be absent from the State, the President pro tempore of the Senate, shall act as Governor, until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

SEC. 18. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, and at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of the military force of the State.

SEC. 19. A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, a Controller, and an Attorney General, shall be elected at the time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor. The term of office of each shall be the same as is prescribed for the Governor. Any elector shall be eligible to either of said offices.

SEC. 20. The Secretary of State shall keep a true record of the official acts of the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all matters relative thereto, before either branch of the Legislature.

SEC. 21. The Governor, Secretary of State, and Attorney General, shall constitute a Board of State Prison Commissioners, which Board shall have such supervision of all matters connected with the State Prison as may be provided by law. They shall also constitute a "Board of Examiners," with power to examine all claims against the State (except salaries or compensation of officers fixed by law,) and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 22. The Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, Attorney General, and Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE VI.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The Judicial power of this State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. The Legislature may also establish Courts for municipal purposes, in incorporated towns and cities, and may, by a two-thirds vote of the members elect to each branch of the Legislature, establish a Court with original jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, and the persons and estates of minors and insane persons, in any county where the same may be deemed necessary.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two Associate Justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum; provided, that the Legislature, by a majority of the members elected to each branch, may at its second session, or at any time thereafter, provide for the election, at the judicial election, of two additional Associate Justices, and if so increased, three shall constitute a quorum. The concurrence of a majority of the whole Court shall be necessary to render a decision.

SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected at the judicial election, and shall hold office for the term of six years from the first Monday of July next after their election; provided, that there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office until the first Monday of July next after their election, and they shall continue in office thereafter for two, four, and six years respectively, and they shall determine, by lot, the term of office each shall fill, and the Justice drawing the shortest term shall be Chief Justice, and after the expiration of his term, the one having the next shortest term shall be Chief Justice, after which the senior Justice in commission shall be Chief Justice; and in case the commission of any two or more of said Justices shall bear the same date, they shall determine by lot who shall be Chief Justice.

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law in which is involved the title or possession of real estate or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine, or in which the demand, (exclusive of interest,) or the value of property in controversy amounts to two hundred dollars; also, in all other civil cases not included in the general subdivisions of law and equity, and also in all criminal cases amounting to felony on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself or the Supreme Court, or before any District Court, or any County Court in the State, or before any Judge of said Courts.

SEC. 5. The State is hereby divided into four Judicial Districts. The county of Storey shall constitute the first Judicial District. The counties of Washoe, Ormsby and Lyon shall constitute the second Judicial District. The counties of Humboldt and Lander shall constitute the third Judicial District; and the counties of Douglas and Esmeralda shall constitute the fourth Judicial District. For judicial purposes the county of Roop shall be attached to the county of Washoe, and the county of Churchill shall be attached to the county of Lyon, until otherwise provided by law. As the convenience of the public may require, the Legislature may, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, provide, by an alteration in the boundaries of the districts as herein prescribed, for additional Judicial Districts, and the election of District Judges therein for the term of six years from the first Monday of July succeeding such election. There shall be elected at the first election, by the electors in each of the respective districts, a District Judge, who shall hold his office until the first Monday of July next after such election, and for two years thereafter, after which said Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts at the judicial election which immediately precedes the expiration of the term of their predecessors, and shall hold office for the term of six years. The Legislature shall have no power to grant leave of absence to a judicial officer, and any such officer who shall absent himself from the State for upwards of forty consecutive days shall be deemed to have vacated his office.

SEC. 6. The District Court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property, or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand, (exclusive of interest,) or the value of the property in controversy amounts to one thousand dollars; also, in all other civil cases not provided for in this Constitution, and also in all criminal cases where the punishment may be death. And they shall have appellate jurisdiction to try de novo, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, all cases relating to the estates of deceased persons and of the persons and estates of minors. The District Courts and their Judges shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of their jurisdiction; and also shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus on petition by, or on behalf of any person held in actual custody in their respective Districts.

SEC. 7. There shall be elected, at the first election provided for in this Constitution in each of the organized counties of this State, a county Judge, who shall hold his office until the first Monday in July next after such election, and for two years thereafter. After which a County Judge in each county, shall be elected at the judicial election next preceding the expiration of the term of office of his predecessor, or succeeding the organization of each county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years from the first Monday of July succeeding such election. He shall hold the County Court, which shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases where the title, possession, or boundaries of land, or mining claims, are not involved, and the amount in dispute is a money demand, or personal property, and the amount of such demand, (exclusive of interest,) or the value of such property is over two hundred dollars and does not exceed one thousand dollars, and in criminal cases not otherwise provided in this Constitution. The grand jury shall be empaneled in and make their presentments and finding of indictments to the County Court; and indictments of which the County Court has no jurisdiction shall be transferred to the District Court for trial. The County Court shall also exercise jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, and jurisdiction of the persons and estates of minors and insane persons, until a Probate Court be created as herein provided. The County Courts and their Judges shall also have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody in their respective counties; and said Courts and the Judges thereof shall also have power to issue all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of their jurisdiction.

SEC. 8. The County Courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in Justices' Courts, and also such appellate jurisdiction from other inferior courts and tribunals as the Legislature may prescribe; but it shall have no original jurisdiction, except as provided in the last preceding section.

SEC. 9. The times and places of holding the terms of the Supreme Court, and the general and special terms of the District Courts, within the several Districts, County and Probate Courts, in the several Counties, shall be as provided by law.

SEC. 10. The Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected, and fix by law their powers, duties, and responsibilities; provided, that they shall have no jurisdiction in the trial of cases where the title or right of possession of real estate or mining claims is involved. It shall also determine in what cases appeals may be made from Justices' Courts to County Courts.

SEC. 11. No judicial officer, except a Justice of the Peace, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

SEC. 12. The Justices of the Supreme Court and of the several Districts, shall each receive the sum of seven thousand dollars per annum; provided, that after five years the Legislature may diminish said amount.

SEC. 13. The Legislature shall provide for the payment of the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme and District Courts quarterly, in cash, and shall provide for the setting apart from each year's revenue sufficient moneys to pay such salaries, but the Legislature shall have power to increase or diminish the salaries of said Judges as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 14. The salaries of the County Judges shall be paid quarterly, in cash, out of the moneys received in the county treasury in each year in their respective counties; and such salaries shall be as provided by law, but shall not be increased or diminished during the time for which they shall have been elected, except the salaries of the County Judges elected at the first election provided for in this Constitution.

SEC. 15. The Justices of the Supreme Court and the District Judges shall be ineligible to any office other than a judicial office, during the term for which they shall have been elected, and all elections or appointments of any such Judges, by the people, Legislature, or otherwise, during said period, to any office other than judicial, shall be void.

SEC. 16. Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

SEC. 17. The style of all process shall be, "The State of Nevada," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the same.

SEC. 18. There shall be but one form of civil action, and law and equity may be administered in the same action.

SEC. 19. There shall be a regular election for judicial officers at a judicial election to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday of May.

ARTICLE VII.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeaching, but a majority of all the members elected must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate, and when sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath of affirmation, to do justice according to law and evidence. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators elected.

SEC. 2. The Governor and other civil officers under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit or trust under this State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

SEC. 3. For any reasonable cause, to be entered on the journals of each House, which may or may not be sufficient grounds for impeachment, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the District and County Courts shall be removed from office on the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, and the Justice or Judge complained of shall be served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have an opportunity of being heard in person, or by counsel in his defense; provided, that no member of either branch of the Legislature shall be eligible to fill the vacancy occasioned by such removal.

SEC. 5. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.

ARTICLE VIII.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall pass no special act in any manner relating to corporate powers, except for municipal purposes; but corporations may be formed under general laws; and all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

SEC. 2. All real property and possessory rights to the same, as well as personal property in this State, belonging to corporations, now existing or hereafter created, shall be subject to taxation the same as property of individuals; provided, that the property of corporations formed for municipal, charitable, religious or educational purposes may be exempted by law.

SEC. 3. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law; provided, that corporators in corporations formed under the laws of this State shall not be individually liable for the debts or liabilities of such corporation.

SEC. 4. Corporations created by or under the laws of the State of Nevada shall be subject to the provisions of such laws until the Legislature shall pass laws regulating the same, in pursuance of the provisions of this Constitution.

SEC. 5. Corporations may sue and be sued in all Courts, in like cases as individuals.

SEC. 6. No bank notes or paper of any kind shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency under the laws of Congress.

SEC. 7. No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation be first made therefor.

Tuesday,]

[July 5.]

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide for the organization of cities and towns by general laws; and restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, except for procuring supplies of water.

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes; provided, that the State may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three million dollars, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line, connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi river; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people.

SEC. 10. No county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever, or loan its credit in aid of any such company, corporation or association.

ARTICLE IX.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

SECTION 1. The fiscal year shall commence January 1st.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the State for each fiscal year; and whenever the expenses of any year shall exceed the income, the Legislature shall provide for levying a tax sufficient, with other sources of income, to pay the deficiency, as well as the estimated expenses of such ensuing year or two years.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of enabling the State to transact its business upon a cash basis, from its organization, or for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, the State may contract public debts; but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars; provided, that the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII, of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for. Every such debt shall be authorized by law for some purpose or purposes, to be distinctly specified therein, and every such law shall provide for levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest semi-annually, and the principal within twenty years from the passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of said taxes to the payment of said principal and interest; and such appropriation shall not be repealed, nor the taxes be postponed or diminished until the principal and interest of said debts shall have been wholly paid. Every contract of indebtedness entered into or assumed by or on behalf of the State, when all its debts and liabilities amount to said sum before mentioned, shall be void and of no effect, except in cases of money borrowed to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the State in time of war, or if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense.

SEC. 4. The State shall never assume the debts of any county, town, city, or other corporation whatever, unless such debts have been created to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the State in time of war.

SEC. 5. No scrip, certificate, or other evidence of State debt whatsoever, shall be issued, for the payment of which there are no funds in the treasury, except for such debts as are authorized by the third Section of this Article.

ARTICLE X.

TAXATION.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, including mines and mining property; excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes.

ARTICLE XI.

SALARIES.

SECTION 1. The Governor shall receive an annual salary of six thousand dollars. The Secretary of State shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The State Controller shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The State Treasurer shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The Attorney General shall receive an annual salary of eighteen hundred dollars. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. Such salaries shall be paid quarterly. Said officers shall receive no fees or perquisites to their own use for the performance of any duties connected with their offices.

ARTICLE XII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. It shall provide for the election by the people (at such time as the judiciary may be elected) of a Superintendent of Public Instruction, whose term of office shall be two years from the first Monday of July succeeding such election, and until the election and qualification of his successor, and whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year; and any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect. The Legislature shall, within two years, pass such laws as shall make it compulsory with parents and guardians that all white children under their charge, between the ages of six and fourteen years, shall receive educational instruction for at least three months in each year, unless physically or mentally incapacitated; but no sectarian instruction shall be allowed at any public school established by them.

SEC. 3. All lands, including the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1841; and all proceeds of lands that have been or may be granted or appropriated by the United States to this State; all estates that may escheat to the State; all of such per cent, as may be granted by Congress on the sale of land; all fines collected under the penal laws of the State; all property given or bequeathed to the State for educational purposes; and all proceeds derived from any or all of said sources, shall be, and the same are hereby solemnly pledged for educational purposes, and shall not be transferred to any other fund for other uses; and the interest thereon shall, from time to time, be apportioned among the several counties, in proportion to the ascertained number of persons between the ages of six and eighteen years in the different counties. And the Legislature shall provide for the sale of floating land warrants to cover the aforesaid lands, and for the investment of all proceeds derived from any of the above-mentioned sources in United States bonds or the bonds of this State; provided, that the interest only of the aforesaid proceeds shall be used for educational purposes, and any surplus interest shall be added to the principal sum; and provided, further, that such portion of said interest as may be necessary, may be appropriated for the support of the State University.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, or Agricultural College, with a Mining Department, which shall be free to all white pupils between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one years, possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Board of Regents, and whose parents or guardians are citizens of this State.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide a special tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar of all taxable property in the State, in addition to the other means provided for the support and maintenance of said University or Agricultural College, and common schools; provided, that at the end of ten years they may reduce said tax to one-quarter of one mill on each dollar of taxable property.

Tuesday,]

SEC. 6. The Governor, Secretary of State, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall, for the first four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, be a Board of Regents, to control and manage the affairs of the University, or Agricultural College, and the funds of the same, under such regulations as may be provided by law; but the Legislature shall, at the expiration of that time, provide for the election of a Board of Regents, and define their duties.

SEC. 7. The Board of Regents shall, from the interest accruing from the first funds which come under their control, immediately organize and maintain the said Mining Department, in such manner as to make it the most effective and useful.

ARTICLE XIII.

MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the organizing and disciplining the militia of this State, for the effectual encouragement of volunteer corps, and the safe keeping of the public arms.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall have power to call out the militia to execute the law of the State, or to suppress insurrection or repel invasion.

ARTICLE XIV.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

SECTION 1. Institutions for the benefit of the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb, and such other benevolent institutions as the public good may require, shall be fostered and supported by the State, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. A State Prison shall be established and maintained in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and provision may be made by law for the establishment and maintenance of a House of Refuge for juvenile offenders.

SEC. 3. The respective counties of the State shall provide, as may be prescribed by law, for those inhabitants who, by reason of age and infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have claim upon the sympathy and aid of society.

ARTICLE XV.

BOUNDARY.

SECTION 1. The boundary of the State of Nevada shall be as follows:—

Beginning at the point of intersection of the forty-second degree of north latitude, with the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence running south on the said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude until it intersects the northern boundary line of New Mexico; thence due west along the northern boundary line of New Mexico until such line intersects the eastern boundary of the State of California; thence northerly along the eastern boundary line of the State of California until such line intersects the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence east with said forty-second degree of north latitude to the place of beginning.

And whenever Congress shall authorize the addition to the Territory or State of Nevada of any portion of the territory on the easterly border of the foregoing defined limits, not exceeding in extent one degree of longitude, the same shall thereupon be embraced within and become a part of this State. And furthermore provided, that all such territory lying west of and adjoining the boundary line herein prescribed, which the State of California may relinquish to the Territory or State of Nevada, shall thereupon be embraced within and constitute a part of this State.

ARTICLE XVI.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SECTION 1. The seat of Government shall be at Carson City, but no appropriation for the erection or purchase of capital buildings shall be made during the next six years.

SEC. 2. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, Executive, Judicial, and Ministerial, shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation:—

"I —, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State, Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel, during my continuance in office. And further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office of — on which I am about to enter; so help me God."

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector, or who has fought or been in any manner concerned in a duel since the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. The general election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November.

SEC. 5. The aggregate number of members of both branches of the Legislature shall never exceed seventy-five.

SEC. 6. The term of State officers elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall continue until the Tuesday after the first Monday of January, A. D. 1867, and until the election and qualification of their successors.

SEC. 7. The Sheriffs, County Clerks, County Treasurers, County Judges, and County Recorders, shall hold their offices at the county seats of their respective counties.

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of all statute laws of a general nature, and for such judicial decisions as it may deem expedient; and all laws and judicial decisions shall be free for publication by any person; provided, that no judgment of the Supreme Court shall take effect and be operative until the opinion of the Court in such case shall be given by the Clerk of said Court, and notice thereof filed with said Clerk in some newspaper published at the place of holding said Court, or nearest thereto.

SEC. 9. The Legislature may, at any time, by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch thereof, provide by law for increasing or diminishing the salaries or compensation of any of the officers (except judicial) whose salaries or compensation is fixed in this Constitution; provided, no such change of salary or compensation shall apply to any officer during the term for which he may have been elected.

SEC. 10. All officers whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for, shall be chosen or appointed as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. The tenure of any office not herein provided for may be declared by law, or when not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but the Legislature shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years.

SEC. 12. A State Printer shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, and for the same term, as the Governor. He shall do all the public printing for the State which may be prescribed by law. The rates to be paid him for such printing shall be fixed by law.

SEC. 13. The Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, and Clerk of the Supreme Court, shall keep their respective offices at the seat of Government.

SEC. 14. The enumeration of the inhabitants of this State shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature in the year 1864, and 1867, and 1875, and every ten years thereafter; and these enumerations, together with the census that may be taken under the direction of the Congress of the United States in the year 1870, and every subsequent ten years, shall serve as the basis of representation in both Houses of the Legislature.

SEC. 15. A plurality of votes given at an election by the people, shall constitute a choice, where not otherwise provided by this Constitution.

ARTICLE XVII.

AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution, may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly; and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals with the ayes and noes taken thereon, and referred to the Legislature then next to be chosen, and shall be published for three months next preceding the time of making such choice. And if in the Legislature next chosen as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe; and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

SEC. 2. If at any time two-thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to revise and change this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors at the next election for members of the Legislature to vote for or against a Convention, and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide by law for calling a Convention, to be held within six months after the passage of such law, and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature.

ARTICLE XVIII.

SCHEDULE.

SECTION 1. That no inconvenience may arise by reason of a change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, it is declared that all rights, actions, prosecutions, judgments, claims, and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies corporate, including counties, towns, and cities, shall continue as if no change had taken place; and all process which may issue under the authority of the Territory of Nevada, previous to its admission into the Union as one of the United States, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada, in force at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this Constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the Legislature.

SEC. 3. All fines, penalties or forfeitures accruing to the Territory of Nevada, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall inure to the State of Nevada.

SEC. 4. All recognizances heretofore taken, or which may be taken before the change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, shall remain valid, and shall pass to, and may be prosecuted in the name of the State; and all bonds executed to the Governor of the Territory, or to any other officer or court in his or their official capacity, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall pass to the Governor, or other officer or court, and his or their successors in office, for the uses therein respectively expressed, and may be sued on, and recovery had accordingly; and all property, real, personal or mixed, and all judgments, bonds, specialties, choses in action, claims and debts of whatsoever description, and all records and public archives of the Territory of Nevada, shall issue to and vest in the State of Nevada, and may be sued for, and recovered in the same manner, and to the same extent by the State of Nevada, as the same could have been by the Territory of Nevada. All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which may have arisen, or which may arise before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall then be pending, shall be prosecuted to judgment and execution in the name of the State. All offences committed against the laws of the Territory of Nevada before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall not be prosecuted before such change, may be prosecuted in the name and by the authority of the State of Nevada, with like effect as though such change had not taken place, and all penalties incurred shall remain the same as if this Constitution had not been adopted. All actions at law, and suits in equity, which may be pending in any of the courts of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the change from a Territorial to a State Government, may be continued and transferred to, and determined by, any court of the State which shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof.

SEC. 5. For the purpose of taking the vote of the electors of this Territory for the ratification or rejection of this Constitution, and for the election of all State officers—Supreme, District and County Judges, members of the Legislature and Representative to Congress—an election shall be held in the several counties of the Territory (at such places as may be designated by the Commissioners of each of the counties, respectively), on the third Tuesday of January, A. D. 1864. The judges and inspectors of said election shall be appointed by such county Commissioners, and the election shall be conducted, as nearly as practicable, in conformity with the existing laws of the Territory in relation to the holding of the general election—except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

SEC. 6. Each elector shall express his opinion by depositing in the ballot-box a ticket whereon shall be written or printed, "Constitution Yes," or "Constitution No," or such words as will distinctly convey the intention of the voter.

SEC. 7. At the close of the election, the judges and inspectors shall carefully count each ballot, and forthwith make duplicate returns thereof to the Clerk of the Board of County Commissioners of their respective counties, and said Clerk shall transmit an abstract of the same, by the most safe and expeditious conveyance, to the Secretary of the Territory (inclosed in an envelop, marked "Election Returns.")

SEC. 8. Upon the receipt of said returns, or within twenty days after the elections, if the returns be not sooner received, it shall be the duty of a Board of Canvassers, to consist of the Secretary of the Territory, and the President and Secretary of this Convention, to canvass the returns of said election, in presence of all who may choose to attend, and immediately publish an abstract of the same, in one or more of the newspapers of the Territory of Nevada; and said Board shall, after the adoption of this Constitution and canvass of said votes, issue certificates of election to such persons as were elected on said third Tuesday of January, A. D. 1864. And the Governor of this Territory shall, immediately after ascertaining that the Constitution has been ratified by the people, make proclamation of the fact, and thenceforth this Constitution shall be ordained and established as the Constitution of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 9. Until otherwise provided by the Legislature, the apportionment of Senators and Assemblymen in the different counties shall be as follows:—Douglas county, one Senator and two Assemblymen; Esmeralda county, two Senators and four Assemblymen; Humboldt county, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Lander county, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Lyon and Churchill counties, two Senators and four Assemblymen; Ormsby county, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Storey county, four Senators and twelve Assemblymen; and Washoe and Roop counties, two Senators and three Assemblymen.

SEC. 10. If this Constitution be ratified by the people, the President of this Convention, or in case of his inability, the Governor of the Territory of Nevada, shall, within thirty days after the result of the election shall be declared, convene the Legislature for the purpose of electing two United States Senators.

SEC. 11. A copy of this Constitution certified to be correct by the President and Secretary of this Convention, shall be published by them in one newspaper in each county of this Territory, (where a newspaper is published), as soon as practicable after the final adjournment of this Convention. Such President and Secretary shall forward a copy of this Constitution, certified as aforesaid, to the President of the United States, President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the delegate in Congress from this Territory.

SEC. 12. All debts and liabilities of the Territory of Nevada, lawfully incurred, and which remain unpaid at the time of the admission of this State into the Union, shall be assumed by and become the debt of the State of Nevada; provided, that an amount not exceeding the sum of twenty thousand dollars shall be assumed for such debts or liabilities contracted or incurred on and after the first day of January, A. D. 1864.

SEC. 13. The Senators to be elected at the first election under the Constitution, shall draw lots, so that the term of the one half thereof shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1864, and the term of the other half shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1866; provided, that in drawing lots for all Senatorial terms, the Senatorial representation shall be allotted so that the counties having two or more Senators, the terms thereof shall be divided as equally as may be between the long and short terms.

SEC. 14. At the general election in A. D. 1864, and thereafter, the term of Senators shall be for four years from the day succeeding such general election, and members of Assembly for two years from the day succeeding such general election, and the terms of Senators shall be allotted in long and short terms, as hereinbefore provided; so that one-half thereof, as nearly as may be, shall be elected every two years.

SEC. 15. The term of members of the Assembly elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1864.

SEC. 16. The first regular Session of the Legislature under this Constitution, shall be held at such time after the admission of this State into the Union as the Executive of the State shall by his proclamation direct; provided, such time shall not be less than twenty nor more than sixty days after such admission.

SEC. 17. The second regular session of the Legislature shall convene on the first Monday of January, A. D. 1865, and such regular sessions shall thereafter be held on the first Monday of January, biennially.

SEC. 18. All county officers, (except Probate Judges), and all township, city and town officers, under the laws of the Territory of Nevada at the time when this Constitution shall take effect, and whose offices are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Constitution, shall continue in office until their successors shall be elected and qualified. The time of such election and qualification shall be as prescribed by law; provided, that the time of such election shall not be postponed beyond the general election in A. D. 1864, and the time of the qualification of such officers shall not exceed thirty days after such election.

SEC. 19. At the first regular session of the Legislature to convene under the requirements of this Constitution, provision shall be made by law for the payment of the publication of six hundred copies of the proceedings of this Convention, in book form, to be disposed of as the Legislature may direct; and the Hon. J. W. North, President, and A. J. Marsh, one of the reporters, of this Convention, shall contract for and supervise the publication of such proceedings. Provisions shall be made by law at such first session of the Legislature for the compensation of the official reporters of this Convention for their services respectively; and they shall be paid in coin or its equivalent. The rates of compensation shall be as follows: to the official reporters jointly, forty cents per folio for reporting the same for publication, and to A. J. Marsh for supervising such publication, the sum of fifteen dollars per day during the time actually engaged in such service.

SEC. 20. After the admission of this State into the Union, and until the Legislature shall otherwise provide, the several district and county judges shall hold Courts in their respective districts and counties at such times and places as they may respectively appoint; and until provision shall be made by law for holding the terms of the Supreme Court, the Governor shall fix the time and place of holding such Court.

Done in Convention, at Carson city, the eleventh day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-eighth, and signed by the delegates.

Mr. KINKEAD moved that the Convention adjourn to meet at ten o'clock, to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHAPIN. Oh, no! Let us work an hour longer; let us fix the name of the State, at least.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes 13—noes 17.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. CHAPIN. I now move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole, and take up the subject before us—the Constitution.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Chapin in the Chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the preamble.

PREAMBLE—NAME OF THE STATE.

Mr. TOZER. I move the adoption of the preamble.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose the question should first be on adopting the name of the State.

Mr. TOZER. That is contained in the preamble.

The SECRETARY read the preamble, as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the State of Nevada, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, insure domestic tranquility, and form a more perfect Government, do establish this Constitution.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by striking out the word "Nevada" and inserting the word "Washoe."

Mr. BALL. I suggest that this is out of order, for the reason that the Enabling Act fixes the name as the State of Nevada.

Mr. BANKS. I do not read it so.

Mr. FITCH. The title of the act is, "An act to enable the people of Nevada to form a State Government," etc. Now what Nevada? It must be Nevada Territory; the people of Nevada Territory are to form a State government.

Mr. COLLINS. Read the second section.

Mr. FITCH. Very well—

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said State of Nevada shall consist of all the Territory included within the following boundaries"—

I do not consider that binding upon us.

Mr. COLLINS. I am inclined to think that Congress had really no definite idea or preference in regard to a name, but that, rather out of PRESIDENT—STURTEVANT.

deference to the Convention of last year, which had agreed upon the name of Nevada, that body gave it that name, calling it Nevada in the Act. I do not think, however, that that would prevent the President from proclaiming us as a State, if we should take any other State name. I do not imagine that there would be any serious objection, that is, in Congress, and the name of Nevada is certainly a misnomer, for, if it conveys any meaning at all, it is a great falsehood. I would be glad if we could select some other name. The State of Washoe would sound well, and everybody knows us by the name of Washoe, while, if we are christened Nevada, we are liable to be confounded with the city of Nevada, Nevada County, and the Nevada Mountains. Quite recently we sent some very handsome silver bricks to the East in aid of the Sanitary Fund, and I notice that the county of Nevada, in California, was given the credit for sending those bricks to St. Louis. I say, independent of its being a falsehood, it is too common. Those who understand the meaning of the word are aware that it is wholly inapplicable to us. When you hear it, you are inclined to button your coat, and shiver. Here we have an almost semi-tropical climate, and to call it Nevada is an outrage upon the people and the climate of almost the whole of the Territory. Almost any other name would be better than Nevada, and Washoe seems to be the most appropriate word. We are known everywhere, north and south, east and west, as Washoe, and why should we give people the impression that this is a species of north-pole climate? Why should we convey the groundless idea, that to make an expedition here a man is required to fit himself out with furs and moccasins, and everything else of that kind, to prevent his freezing? Therefore I hope, if it be possible, unless the Enabling Act is deemed to be absolutely binding upon us, that we shall christen the State by some other name.

Mr. JOHNSON (the President). Whilst I concur in the views presented by my friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins) in favor of adopting some other name for our State, yet at the same time I must say I think we are precluded from so doing by the language contained in the Enabling Act. We should not seek for information regarding the sense of the act, upon that subject, from the preamble, or from its title, but we shall find it in the body of the act itself. Section 2, which has already been referred to, provides that the said State of Nevada shall consist of certain specified Territory—"the said State of Nevada." Then reading farther, we find that Section 6 is as follows:—

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That until the next general census shall be taken, said State of Nevada shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representative," etc.

Then in Section 8 we have this language:—

"SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That provided the State of Nevada shall be admitted into the Union, in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this act, that twenty entire sections of unappropriated public lands within said State, to be selected and located by direction of the Legislature thereof, on or before the first day of January, Anno Domini 1868, shall be, and they are hereby granted, in legal subdivisions of not less than 160 acres, to said State, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the Capital of said State, for legislative and judicial purposes, in such manner as the Legislature shall prescribe."

Again, in Section 11, there is this language:

"SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That from and after the admission of the said State of Nevada into the Union, in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said State as elsewhere within the United States, and said State shall contain one judicial district, and be called the District of Nevada."

The terms of admission into the Union are predicated from the beginning upon the name, "State of Nevada." I think, from an examination of this act, we are clearly restricted to that name, and without that name there would be grave doubts whether there would be any authority by which we could obtain these public lands, and possibly there might even be some doubt as to our right to send a Representative to the Congress of the United States, without further Congressional action. To my mind it is quite obvious that we are precluded, by the action of Congress, from taking any other name.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I was not aware but that every State, if it be a State at all, has a right to be represented in Congress, and I think in that respect it would make no difference what we called our State. I think we can name it any thing we please, and still we should be entitled to everything that other States are entitled to, because we come into the Union on an equality. Now, every State which is admitted is entitled to certain grants of lands, and certain rights and privileges, and if we do not have the same as other States have, we do not want to be admitted. This same question was up in the Convention of last year. Then the Legislature had passed an Enabling Act, authorizing the Convention to form a Constitution and State Government for the "State of Washoe," but the Convention saw fit then to alter the name to Nevada. I think we have as much right to alter the name in this Convention, and it would be much better to call the new State Washoe than to make it a mere namesake of every stable and every peaynne liquor shop in the Territory. I hope we shall adopt the name of Washoe.

Mr. JOHNSON. Every State admitted into the Union is entitled to such rights, in the matter of representation in the lower branch of Congress, and grants of public lands, and like matters, as may be given to it by the act under which it is admitted, whether that act be an enabling act, authorizing the formation of a State Government and its admission by subsequent proclamation, or an act of Congress authorizing such admission when the State has been previously organized. There is an existing act of Congress establishing the ratio of representation, and under that act, as every member knows, our population is so meagre as to constitute but a small fraction of that which would entitle us to a Representative. But the rights we have as a State, in this particular, are such as Congress in its wisdom has granted to us. Congress has provided that a State called the State of "Nevada" shall be admitted after certain proceedings have been had, and the President is authorized to declare by proclamation the admission of the State of "Nevada" into the Union; and I conceive that no other name would comply with the terms under which we are to be admitted. It is true that the late Constitutional Convention did override the act of the Legislature by substituting the name of "Nevada" for "Washoe;" but that cannot be regarded as a precedent, because the Convention was held entirely without authority having previously been given by Congress. The entire action of that Convention depended upon the subsequent approval of Congress, for it rested with Congress to say whether we should be admitted under that Constitution or not, and we could just as well have been admitted by one name as by another. The people, however, refused to ratify the action of the Convention, and consequently Congress took no action upon it, but provided for the assembling of a Convention, by the passage of our Enabling Act. In that Enabling Act, as I conceive, Congress has specifically prescribed our name. By that name alone we acquire, not only the right of representation, but all the other rights referred to in that act. I think there are some objections to that name; but, if so, those objections should have been made known to Congress before the passage of this Enabling Act. Now the child is named; it has been baptized by the name of Nevada, and nothing short of an act of Congress can change that name.

Mr. TOZER. I shall leave the discussion of the point as to whether or not we are concluded by the Enabling Act in regard to the name, to others. But I have been heretofore, and am now in favor of the name of "Nevada," for this country. I think it is a beautiful and euphonious name. My colleague, (Mr. Collins,) says it is unpleasant and meaningless to him, and the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) urges that it is liable to be confounded with towns, cities, and mountains. It does not seem to me that there is more liability of confusion on that score, than there would be with almost any other name that can be suggested. We are already well known as the Territory of Nevada, and a great part of our Territory lies throughout its course at the base of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. I think it proper to call the State "Nevada," on that account alone. My colleague is in favor of the name of "Washoe," on the ground of euphony. I take issue with him there. In my opinion, it is a miserable, guttural, meaningless word, especially when it is pronounced by that half-clad, abject tribe of Indians who go by the name of "The Washoe." It is certainly a very harsh sounding word; and its meaning I have never yet been able to learn, either from the aborigines themselves, or from those who are acquainted with their language. For these reasons, if not for more potent ones, I am in favor of retaining the name of "Nevada."

Mr. BALL. There is another reason why the name of Nevada should be retained. In the last Convention, a motion was made to call the State Esmeralda, another to call it Humboldt, a third Washoe, and a fourth Nevada; and the latter was finally adopted. The discussion on that subject induced me to make inquiries of various gentlemen who came to this Territory for two or three months thereafter, either on pleasure or on business, and whose homes are in the East. Without exception, those gentlemen told me that they never heard the name of Washoe applied to this country at all, until they came to California, except by some of their friends who had resided in California, and who spoke of the mines of Washoe as being very rich; and they said they were surprised when they found that by Washoe they meant Nevada Territory. They each and all assured me that the name by which we are known throughout the East is Nevada. That is one great reason, to my mind, why we should adopt that name. Then we shall still be known as Nevada at home; and when there are any reports or statements made there in reference to Nevada, everybody will understand where it is at once. I think there is no good reason why we should change our name, and certainly very few persons in this Territory, or among my constituents, at least, desire to adopt the name of Washoe.

The question was taken on the amendment to strike out "Nevada," and insert "Washoe," and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the Preamble, as originally read, and it was adopted.

Mr. FITCH moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; and the Convention accordingly rose.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Preamble, Declaration of Rights, and other matters; had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FITCH. The Committee of the Whole have reported the Preamble, as I understand. I move that the Preamble be adopted by the Convention.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

HOURS OF SESSION.

Mr. CROSMAN moved that the regular hour of daily meeting hereafter, be nine o'clock, A. M.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have a resolution here in regard to that subject which I will offer, if the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. CROSMAN. Certainly; I withdraw it. The SECRETARY read Mr. Brosnan's resolution as follows:—

Resolved, That this Convention shall, until otherwise ordered, meet at nine o'clock, A. M., each day, (Sundays excepted,) and continue in session until noon, at which hour a recess shall be taken. It shall meet again at one, and hold its session until five o'clock, P. M.

The question was taken, and on a division, the resolution was adopted—ayes, 19; noes, 4.

On motion of Mr. CROSMAN, at twenty-five minutes before six o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

CARSON, July 6, 1864.

The Convention met at ten o'clock, A. M., and was called to order by the President.

In the temporary absence of the Secretary the Official Reporter called the roll, and twenty-eight members responded to their names, the absent members being Messrs. Belden, Fitch, Haines, Jones, Mason, McClinton, Morse, Warwick, Wellington, Wetherill, and Williams.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Riley.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. TOZER. I find there is a newly arrived member, my friend Mr. B. S. Mason, of Esmeralda; and at a proper time I shall propose that he be sworn in.

The PRESIDENT. Our order of business is "Reports of Standing Committees," but we have as yet no Standing Committees, and all the Special Committees, I understand, made their reports yesterday.

RULES OF THE CONVENTION.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise for information. I would like to ascertain from some gentleman from Ormsby County whether or not it is possible to obtain copies of the Rules of the last Assembly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have inquired of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and he informs me that he is unable to find them. I have, therefore, prepared a resolution to print them.

The PRESIDENT. Motions and resolutions are in order as the regular order of business.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I will send up my resolution. The Sergeant-at-Arms now informs me, however, that he thinks there is a desk in the County Clerk's office, in which there are a number of copies, and as soon as he can get into that office he will try to find them.

The PRESIDENT. If the gentleman desires, the resolution can be read and then withdrawn or laid over.

The SECRETARY read:—

Resolved, That this Convention order to be printed one hundred copies of the Rules and Order of Business of the Territorial Legislative Assembly, adopted by this Convention July 5, 1864.

Mr. HAWLEY withdrew the resolution temporarily.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES.

Mr. BELDEN offered the following, which was read:

WHEREAS, The people of the Territory of Nevada expect, and it is due to them, that the term of this Convention be made as short as possible; and whereas, considering the grounds upon which the Convention has based its proceedings for framing a Constitution for the coming State of Nevada, it is believed that the work can soon be accomplished; therefore be it

Resolved, That each member of this Convention shall be allowed fifteen minutes, and no more, for his own expressions upon any one subject matter that may come before this Convention during its term.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I second the resolution.

The PRESIDENT. Before I put the question on this resolution I desire to call attention to one of the rules which we have already adopted, because there may be some conflict between the resolution proposed and that rule. I refer to rule XII, which reads as follows:—

12. No member shall speak more than twice to the same general question, without leave of the House, until every member desiring to speak on the question pending shall have spoken.

That there may be no confusion in our rules, I simply suggest that the resolution be so framed as not to conflict with one of the established rules of the Convention. There may be some question arising hereafter as to the construction to be given to this resolution.

Mr. BELDEN. I believe the Convention owes it to itself to adopt this resolution as it is offered.

Mr. DUNNE. Do not the rules require that a notice of one day shall be given before changing one of the standing rules of the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. I have not a copy of the rules, but the Secretary informs me that there is such a standing rule.

Mr. DUNNE. I supposed there was, and I would suggest to the gentleman that he give notice that to-morrow he will move to amend that standing rule; I think the rule should be amended in that respect, and if the gentleman does not do so, I will give that notice myself.

Mr. BROSNAN. We might suspend that rule, and let the resolution be acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT. The rules which we have adopted provide that no standing rule or order of the House shall be changed, except upon a motion of which at least one day's notice shall have been given, stating the specific object of such change; and the amendment to be made must be distinctly specified. These rules, it occurs to me, do not all apply very well to this body. There seems to me to be a very wide difference between a Convention and a Legislature; and the rules which would properly be applicable to a Legislature would not always apply to a Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. I imagine not; but it seems to me, however they may be construed, that if two thirds of any parliamentary body wish to amend a rule, they may do so. And for the purpose of seeing whether or not this amendment can be made now, I move that that portion of the standing rule of the Convention which relates to the time that may be occupied by a speaker, whether it be embraced in one or two of the rules, be suspended, for the purpose of making an amendment, and as it requires to be distinctly stated, I offer this as an amendment:—

Resolved, That no person shall be allowed to speak more than fifteen minutes on any one subject, nor more than once upon that subject, so long as any other member who wishes to express his opinions has not been heard.

The PRESIDENT. I suggest that the gentleman from Humboldt should reduce his motion to writing, as it is intended to become one of our standing rules.

Mr. DUNNE. I will do so, sir.

The PRESIDENT. On examination of these rules, so far as I can discover, it is not necessary that one day's notice, or that any notice, shall be given; because I find that it is provided that any rule may be altered or changed by a two-thirds vote. It will be entirely in order, therefore—I address myself to the gentleman (Mr. Belden) who first offered the resolution—to move to amend the rule as it now stands, by substituting his resolution. And then, if the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) desires, he can offer an amendment in order.

Mr. BELDEN. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed to Rule XII.

The SECRETARY read:—

Each member of this Convention shall be allowed fifteen minutes, and no more, for his own expressions upon any one subject matter that may come before this Convention during its term.

MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. TOZER reminded the President that Mr. Mason, of Esmeralda, was present, and suggested that he be sworn in.

Mr. B. S. MASON, of Esmeralda, came forward, and after taking the oath of office, administered by Judge Wright, and subscribing to the same, took his seat as a member of the Convention.

THE RULES—AGAIN.

Mr. DUNNE. I now desire to offer my amendment to the standing rule; to add these words: "And in no case shall any member be allowed to occupy more than fifteen minutes at any one time." So that the rule as amended will read:

No member shall speak more than twice to the same general question without leave of the house, until every member desiring to speak on the question pending shall have spoken, and in no case shall any member be allowed to occupy more than fifteen minutes at any one time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would suggest that that rule would be likely to become rather obsolete, and I will ask the gentleman's permission to add the words, "unless by leave of the House."

Mr. DUNNE. The Convention seems to have varied somewhat from the opinion which prevailed yesterday against protracted discussion. I stated yesterday that I did not wish to set a bad example, therefore I limited myself to five minutes. I do not wish to see any such bad example set; but, at the same time, I do not wish to limit every man to five minutes, and therefore I say that no one shall speak more than fifteen minutes. It seems to me that that is long enough.

Mr. NOURSE. It seems to me that there might happen occasions where justice would require a prolongation of that time.

Mr. DUNNE. Then it can be done by a two-thirds vote suspending the rule.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to have inserted, "unless the House grants leave."

Mr. DUNNE. Do you mean by that, unanimous leave?

Mr. NOURSE. Certainly.

Mr. DUNNE. Very well; I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the position of the question: If the amendment be adopted, as proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, the rule will be, that a member may speak twice with the leave of the House, but not more than fifteen minutes in the aggregate, unless by leave of the House—unless the rule be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. TOZER. It is poor economy of time, it strikes me, to spend the whole day in fixing this rule, when we might be progressing with the work before us. I hope we shall come to some determination.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand the gentleman from Humboldt to accept my amendment to add the words, "unless by leave of the House."

Mr. DUNNE. The gentleman made that proposition, and I asked him if he meant it to be "unanimous leave of the House." He assented to that, and I accepted it in that language.

Mr. TOZER. I move to lay the whole subject matter of the amendment of this rule on the table.

The question was taken by a division, and the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to—ayes, 11; noes, 18.

Mr. DELONG. As I prefer the original to the substitute, I move to lay the substitute on the table.

The question was taken by a division, and the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to—ayes, 13; noes, 14.

Mr. NOURSE called for the reading of the substitute as modified.

The SECRETARY read:—

No member shall speak more than twice to the same general question without leave of the Convention, until every member desiring to speak on the question

PRESIDENT—DELONG—HAWLEY—STURTEVANT—CHAPIN—BANKS.

[July 6.]

pending shall have spoken, and in no case shall any member be allowed to occupy more than fifteen minutes at any one time, except by unanimous consent of the Convention.

The question was taken on the adoption of the substitute, and it was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The position of the question now is, that the substitute having been adopted for the amendment to the rule proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Belden,) the question recurs upon the adoption of that amendment to the rule, as amended, and upon that a two-thirds vote is required.

Mr. DELONG. Can the standing rules be amended without a preliminary notice?

The PRESIDENT. That inquiry was made a little while ago, and I could not find any standing rule requiring a preliminary notice.

Mr. DUNNE. I would ask that the Secretary read, for information, the rule in regard to amendment of the rules.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the substitute for Rule XII.

Mr. CROSMAN. I understand it is not a substitute, but an addition to that rule.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DELONG. I call for a division on adopting the amendment.

The question was taken by a division, and the vote stood—ayes, 19; noes, 9.

Mr. DELONG. I understand that the amendment is lost, because the affirmative side has not a two-thirds vote of all the members elected.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It seems to me that that would be rather a singular precedent to establish. Suppose there were not two-thirds of the members elected here?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Storey is correct; the amendment is lost.

Mr. FITCH. It occurs to me, Mr. President that we made a mistake yesterday, and one that we might just as well correct this morning. When the committee reported back the Preamble, I moved its adoption, and it is recorded as adopted, on the minutes. Now I have not read the rules, but I would suggest that the Preamble will require to receive three several readings; and I further suggest that we take it up and read it now.

Mr. DELONG. What is the regular order of business?

The PRESIDENT. Motions and resolutions.

Mr. HAWLEY. I learn from the Sergeant-at-Arms that he has been unable to find copies of the rules we have adopted, and they are entirely lost. I therefore renew my resolution—that the Secretary be required to furnish a copy of the rules to the printer, to be printed for the use of the members; but I do not know as he will print them without some promise of compensation.

The SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:—

Resolved, That this Convention order to be printed 100 copies of the rules and order of business of the Territorial Legislative Assembly, adopted by this Convention July 5, 1864.

Mr. FITCH. If any gentleman here thinks the printer will do it and take the rough chances of pay, I think we had better let him.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest that we call upon the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Crawford,) for information.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I wish to give notice of a motion to amend that two-thirds arrangement, [laughter] so that we shall be able to do business. We might perhaps be caught without any two-thirds of the members elected here, and then we should find ourselves in a tight place, not being able to do anything at all. I think that any gentleman who was a member of the last Legislature will understand pretty well what I mean. We were "tight up" there pretty nearly all the time, from the beginning to the end.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's notice will be entered upon the minutes.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope that this resolution to print will not be adopted, and for this reason: Those rules were prepared for another and different body entirely, and they are not at all appropriate to the government of the proceedings of this body. It would be a great expense to print them; it would occasion considerable delay; and they would be of no account whatever after they were printed. Now, I wish to avoid that expense and inconvenience, and I propose, as a substitute for that resolution, that we do as we did at the last Convention—adopt the rules prescribed in Jefferson's Manual, and let us be governed by them wholly, without going any further. I now make that motion.

Mr. BANKS. I apprehend that every practical difficulty will be avoided by common consent in regard to that motion. The reason why these rules were adopted by the Convention was the statement which has been repeated here, that we could probably find a hundred copies of them already printed. But for that supposition, the committee probably would have reported in favor of a proposition similar to that now made by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Chapin.) I hope, under the circumstances, that the motion will prevail, and that we shall adopt Jefferson's Manual as the embodiment of the rules for the government of this body. The rules laid down in Jefferson's Manual have become the common law in parliamentary matters. They are understood by all those who are accustomed to the deliberations of bodies of this character. And, then, with a few books, we can get along much better here than we could with a few copies of these rules. I hope the motion will prevail, and a number of copies of Jefferson's Manual can then be procured and passed around among the members, and we can get along much more economically than by any other course.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Chapin,) reduce his motion to writing.

Wednesday,] HAWLEY—CHAPIN—NOURSE—PROCTOR—DUNNE—DELONG—FITCH. [July 6.

Mr. HAWLEY. I merely introduced this resolution to get the matter before the Convention. I presumed myself that there would be difficulty in obtaining the printing, and I think there will be no opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Storey. I will therefore, with the leave of the Convention, withdraw my resolution.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will offer the following :

Resolved, That the rules prescribed in Jefferson's Manual be adopted for the government of this Convention.

Mr. NOURSE. I second the resolution, for the purpose of making a remark upon it. I suppose, as it stands now, the rules of the last House are the rules of this body, and they cannot be suspended, except by a two-thirds vote. Now, I find, by reference to those rules, that a motion to reconsider is in order, and I would inquire whether, if this resolution be withdrawn, and a motion to reconsider passed, it will not leave us where we were before adopting those rules. If so, then we could adopt Jefferson's Manual instead.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will withdraw the resolution for that purpose.

Mr. NOURSE. Then I move that the vote by which the Convention adopted the rules of the last Legislature be reconsidered, they having been adopted simply because it was believed that we had a large number of printed copies, and it now appearing that that was a mistake. I see no reason for adopting them whatever, as this is a different body altogether from a Legislature, and as the only reason given for adopting them has been found not to exist.

Mr. DELONG. As a question of order, I will state that a motion to reconsider can only be made on notice given.

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir; the rule says, simply, that a motion to reconsider shall not be made, except upon the same day, or the following day, and I will add, for the information of the gentleman, that I voted in the majority.

The question was taken, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I now offer my resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The vote having been reconsidered, the question now before the Convention is upon the adoption or rejection of the report of the Committee recommending these rules. That is open to amendment, and I understand the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) now offers this as an amendment to the report of the Committee.

The SECRETARY. The report is—first, the order of business; second, recommending the adoption of the rules, so far as applicable; and third, recommending the adoption of Jefferson's Manual in matters to which the rules of said Legislature may not apply.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment, then, applies only to that portion which relates to the rules.

The question was taken on the adoption of Mr. Chapin's amendment, and it was adopted.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules and Order of Business as amended, and it was adopted.

PRINTING.

Mr. PROCTOR offered the following resolution, which was read and adopted :—

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to make arrangements for the necessary printing for this Convention.

The PRESIDENT appointed as such Committee, Messrs. Proctor, Fitch, and Crawford.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES—AGAIN.

Mr. DUNNE. Now, Mr. President, while I cannot but admire the parliamentary tact of those gentlemen who are opposed to limiting the time of speaking, yet I cannot but notice their practical ingratitude, manifested by so soon rejecting the very means by which they carried their point. But, as the two-thirds rule is now out of the question, I offer this resolution, which I send up to the desk.

Mr. DELONG. I would ask if, under the Manual, it is in order to offer the same resolution twice on the same day, after a final vote upon it?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is in doubt about it; the Convention changes its rules so often.

Mr. DELONG. I submit, that after the action of the Convention, adopting Jefferson's Manual, a proposition submitted and voted upon on one day cannot on that day be again brought before the House.

Mr. DUNNE. Even admitting that to be the case, which I do not doubt, still it was not an original resolution which was formerly voted upon, but only an amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair conceives that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Humboldt embraces substantially the same subject matter as that which has already been voted upon. The Chair is therefore constrained to rule the point of order well taken.

THE PREAMBLE.

The PRESIDENT announced, as the order of business, the second reading and reference of bills.

Mr. FITCH. Now, I move that the Preamble to the Constitution, the adoption of which was carried yesterday, be taken up and read a second time. We committed an error, yesterday, in adopting it as a finality, and I want to get out of it as easily as possible. If we pass it to its second reading, I think it might be well to defer the third reading until the entire Article—the Declaration of Rights—be also considered and adopted. Then we can give them their third reading all together, and pass them as one bill.

Mr. DELONG. I think we made a mistake, yesterday, by adopting this Preamble, when it should have been only read a second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be there considered, and reported back again for the action of the Convention. It strikes me, that the only question now is, on the third reading and passage of the Preamble as reported back from the Committee of the Whole, and then we can order it to an engrossment.

Wednesday.] BANKS—STURTEVANT—FITCH—DELONG—PRESIDENT—NOURSE.

[July 6.]

Mr. BANKS. We have been guilty of an error in this matter, and now we wish to remedy it, so as to give the Preamble its three readings, and pass upon it three times, in regular course of business. The first reading is always for information, according to the rules, and no motion is then in order except, "shall the bill or resolution be rejected?" We should have read it yesterday, for information, but we indulged in the informality of referring it at once. Now we have read it once, and acted upon it in Committee, but we have not read it a second time. The proposition now is, to take it up, and read it a second time; and if we do that, we have complied with all the requirements of parliamentary law. It is not necessary that we should be guilty of any informality to-day because we were yesterday, and I hope we shall not discuss our errors of yesterday, to the detriment of our progress.

Mr. STURTEVANT. This motion looks to me like splitting hairs. If we desire to read the Preamble three times, we can do so; but it makes no difference whether we do or not, because it all has to go before the people of the country, and we can make nothing out of it, except by the vote of the people.

Mr. DELONG. Under our own rules, we shall have to refer it to the Committee of the Whole again, and I really think we may as well pass it now.

Mr. FITCH. I think we might do anything, rather than prolong this discussion. I am willing to read it three times now, or do anything else.

Mr. CHAPIN. Let us act upon it, and go to work.

The PRESIDENT. I think the gentleman from Storey is correct — that we will have to go over the same ground, if we take this up again; and the difficulty arises, possibly, from the exercise of undue haste in attempting to get through our business in a few days. I think if we adopt rules, we should try to conform to them, and if we want our rules simplified, we should devise such rules as will be calculated to meet our purposes. It is naturally supposed that the requisite time will be taken to comply with all the rules. The proposition now will be, as the Chair understands it, to place the Preamble upon its third reading.

Mr. FITCH. Is it desired to read the Preamble and Declaration of Rights all together?

Mr. DELONG. I understand it comes up as the report of a committee, and the question should be on adopting the report.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Preamble be placed on its third reading.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. DeLong,) raise any point of order?

Mr. DELONG. No sir.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be on the third reading of the Preamble. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the State of Nevada, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, insure domestic tranquility, and form a more perfect Government, do establish this Constitution.

Mr. NOURSE. It strikes me, Mr. President, that that should be the last thing we do. We do not want to establish this Constitution until we know what Constitution we have adopted, and are going to establish.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It appears to me it would be better to finish the thing up as we go along. Then the last day's work we do we have it all done, and done with it. If we go on and do not have the engrossing done till we have the whole finished, we shall have to adjourn over several days, and then meet for the purpose of adopting the whole Constitution. But if we finish the work as we go along by sections, then the moment we get through with the last of them, our work is all completed, and we can adopt it as a whole, and go home about our business.

The question was taken on ordering the Preamble to a third reading, and it was agreed to.

MODE OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. BANKS. In order to get information, so as to understand just what we are about, and where we are, I wish to ask the Chair a few questions as to what is the understanding of the Convention, and what the decision of the Chair will be, in reference to our mode of procedure. It occurs to me that it would not be improper to regard the adoption of this basis as the first reading of a bill, and to consider ourselves as a deliberative body about to proceed to the second reading of a bill. If we pursue that course, I think our way is plain. We can refer the instrument, or any parts of it, to the Committee of the Whole, and then, when they report it back, we have the question, shall the report be adopted? and if adopted, then comes, in the ordinary legislative course, the third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is not prepared to say that passing a resolution making this Constitution the basis of our action is equivalent to giving the whole instrument its first reading. The Chair considers that we have adopted it as our basis, but not that the whole instrument has received its first reading. It is competent for the Convention to take action now, or at any time, to give the Constitution its first reading, or consider it read a first time.

Mr. BANKS. It strikes me that that ruling is eminently proper; but as a matter of convenience, and I think it will meet the wishes of the Convention, I suggest that it would be proper to consider the whole Constitution as having been read a first time. I move, therefore, that this entire document be read a first time by title—this Constitution of the State of Nevada, as we have it here printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SECRETARY read the title—"CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF NEVADA."

Mr. BANKS. Now there is another point upon which I desire information myself. I wish to know whether we are to proceed with this matter as a whole bill divided into sections, or to regard each section or article as one bill.

The PRESIDENT. As the whole matter has been read once, the entire Constitution is before the Convention for its action, except the Preamble, which has already been adopted, and passed to a third reading; and the Chair will, upon each successive occasion, when going into Committee of the Whole upon any particular part of the Constitution, hold that only so much of it as is referred to the Committee, from time to time, is under consideration. The Chair may not be correct in this view, considering that we have already passed the whole instrument to the first reading; but perhaps it will relieve the matter of some difficulty if we understand that each article is to be considered separately and distinctly.

Mr. BANKS. With the explanation of the Chair, and with the decision, as I understand it, I am content.

Mr. DELONG. I think a little time wasted in considering this matter will be a saving of time in the end.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will be happy to hear any suggestions from the gentleman's experience.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

Mr. DELONG. This Constitution is divided into articles, and it is impossible that in any one day, or one half of a day—any one sitting—we should dispose of it in Committee. And we have, in addition, to report it back. Now why not treat it as if composed of separate bills? For instance, to-day we call up the first article, and refer it to the Committee of the Whole; then the Convention goes into Committee of the Whole to consider the first article. If they get through with it, or if they wish for further time, they report back to the Convention accordingly, and then they go into Committee of the Whole on the second article, in the same way, and we progress with our work in an orderly manner. For instance, if we agree in the Convention on the first article, as reported from the Committee of the Whole, and pass it through its several stages, there is no further amendment, but it is like a bill that has passed and become a law. We have now read that article for the first time to-day. The first reading is for information, but you can read it a second time on the same day, and refer it to the Committee of the Whole; but it is required to be read the third time on the next, or some subsequent day. Now, I move to suspend the rules so as to read the first article of the Constitution by title, the second time, and refer it to the Committee of the Whole, to-day.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SECRETARY read Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights, by title, and it was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MEMBER QUALIFIED.

J. H. WARWICK, of Lander County, having arrived, took and subscribed the oath of office, administered by Judge Wright, and took his seat as a member of the Convention.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS, AGAIN.

Mr. DELONG. I now move that the Convention consider itself in Committee of the Whole—the President remaining in the Chair—for the consideration of Article I, entitled, Declaration of Rights.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) for the consideration of Article I of the Constitution, entitled Declaration of Rights.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:—

SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

No amendment being offered to this section, it was agreed to.

PARAMOUNT ALLEGIANCE.

Section 2 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whenever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

Mr. BANKS. I propose the following amendment: after the words "Federal Government," where they first occur, insert the words, "in the exercise of all its Constitutional powers."

Mr. FITCH. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to add after the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, the words, "as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary." Also, to strike out the last clause of the section commencing:

Wednesday.]

BANKS—FITCH—NOURSE—PROCTOR—DELONG—BROSNAN.

[July 6.]

“The Constitution of the United States confers full power.” &c.

Mr. BANKS. I understand, from a cursory examination of this amendment, that all the change proposed to be made by the gentleman, is the insertion of those words: “as interpreted by the Federal Courts;” or substantially that.

Mr. FITCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. Presuming that that was implied in the language of my amendment, I did not insert it; but I most cheerfully accept the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to amend that amendment, by striking out all after the words, “due to the Federal Government.” It seems to me that we would then say, and say well, all that need be said by us, and anything more than that would be merely a gloss upon the Federal Constitution—a construction of ours, which would not affect the interpretation of that instrument in any manner whatsoever. When we say that paramount allegiance is due to the Federal Government, of course we mean, in its Constitutional powers only. Not to the men who happen to be at the head of the Government, but to the Government itself, is our allegiance due; an allegiance paramount to that which is due to the State Government. I think it would be the worst of errors to undertake to venture further than that, and to attempt to define the respective spheres of the State and National Governments, and I therefore have offered this amendment, to strike out all that concluding portion.

Mr. BANKS. I just wish to state, very briefly, what I understand to be the philosophy of this section, as amended by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) which amendment was accepted by myself. Now, the gentleman who has just addressed the Chair and myself very materially differ as to the theory upon which this Government was framed. I understand it to be, as we propose to express it by this section, simply this.—that in the first place, as we say, our paramount allegiance under the Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, is due to the Government of the United States. But, as a State, we also, in our Constitution, say, that whatever questions may be raised, we waive all claims to the following enumerated rights. However the Supreme Court may decide; however much they may be disposed to accede; we, as the State of Nevada, waive all our claims to any rights embraced in the following enumerated cases. No power, we say, exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to perform any act tending to impair, subvert, or resist the authority of the Government. Even if the Courts give that power, we disclaim it. Again, we say that the Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Government to maintain its existence:—

And whensoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

I understand, then, that we are just in this position: We recognize the Constitution of the United States as paramount; we yield obedience to that, as interpreted by the Supreme Court; and further, we disclaim all claim or pretension to any right or authority in the cases enumerated in the latter part of the section.

Mr. PROCTOR. I desire to offer an amendment to these various amendments: to strike out all the latter part of the section.

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting.) There is already an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. DELONG. The amendment to the amendment was offered by my colleague, (Mr. Fitch), and it was accepted by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks). Being now, therefore, a part of the original amendment, an amendment to that, I think, would be in order.

Mr. NOURSE. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The amendment of the gentleman from Storey being accepted, I moved to amend the amendment by striking out all after the words “due to the Federal Government.”

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer my amendment as a substitute. I move to strike out all after “may require it,” at the end of the second sentence, so as to leave the section reading as follows:—

Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise to a point of order. I apprehend that that is not a substitute for the amendments. It proposes to strike out those portions to which amendments are pending, and those amendments must first be acted upon.

Mr. FITCH. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we shall not forget, while we are desirous of expressing our individual and collective patriotism, that we have, at the same time, a duty to perform requiring calmness and deliberate consideration. I trust that we shall not cease to remember, while we are expressing our patriotic sentiments and feelings, that we are at the same time called upon to protect our own local rights.

The PRESIDENT, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will yield for one moment—there was a point of order raised by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan.)

Mr. FITCH. I thought that had already been decided.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that the point of order is not well taken. The gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor), offers his amendment as a substitute, and it can be considered as such.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nye is now before the committee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should equally oppose what I should regard as a manifestation of that lack of patriotism that would fail, in the formation of an organic law, to express a proper allegiance and devotion to the Government of the United States, and that enthusiastic zeal which would encumber our declaration of rights with ambiguity. We should be particularly careful to avoid either extreme, and especially should we be careful when the waves of revolution are surging over all this land, that we do not through a zealous, through what I may perhaps properly designate as an over-zealous devotion to political abstractions, permit ourselves to be led into inserting in our organic law provisions or expressions which may properly be classed as ambiguous, and which, perhaps, those who come after us may find it extremely difficult to understand or explain.

FITCH.

[July 6.

Now, sir, if we are wedded to this phrase "paramount allegiance"—a phrase which I may be permitted to say is an unhappy combination of terms at the best, because allegiance is the attribute of sovereignty, and sovereignty is supreme, an integral part of itself, an ultimate atom which cannot be divided, and therefore there can be no such thing as a paramount allegiance—I say if we are wedded to this phrase, why not explain in what it consists, and what we mean by the expression? As to the rest of the language of this original section—that the "Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government," etc., and that upon any "attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force," etc., I suppose no one will insist on its being placed in the section, because it follows by implication among the powers of Government. But if we insert the words, "but the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government," then I am in favor of adding the words, "in the exercise of all its Constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary."

I trust that no gentleman will misunderstand my position on this question. I yield to no man in my devotion to the Federal Union, nor in my abhorrence of the doctrines of secession and nullification. And I have no hesitation in avowing my belief in the full and complete right and Constitutional power of the Government to put down any and all attempts to subvert its authority by armed force. It has that power, and I believe it ought to and will continue to exercise that power, as it is exercising it now, until the last vestige of the rebellion is driven from the land. I believe that above all the flames of war, the groans of the dying, the shrieks of the wounded in battle, and above all the turmoil and strife of this wicked rebellion, the power and dignity of the Federal Government will stand unmoved, unsubverted, undestroyed. But, nevertheless, I believe that while we should express our loyalty at all proper times, and in all proper places, there is no necessity of making a useless parade of it. I do not think that by stopping here after the words "Federal Government," omitting what follows to the end of the section, and inserting instead an explanation of the paramount allegiance therein referred to, we shall either be bringing our loyalty into disrepute, or doing any injustice to those who are to come after us, and who may not, and certainly will not, with such ambiguous expressions as are here contained, be able to explain exactly what we meant in this Declaration of Rights.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the allegiance, and not only the allegiance, but the property, the life, and all that he has, of every citizen is due to his Government; but I believe there is no such thing as a "paramount" allegiance. If the Congress of the United States shall pass a law which is unpleasant, odious or repulsive to any portion of the people of the United States, and that law shall be declared constitutional by the Federal Judicial tribunals, I believe it is our duty to obey it, without any attempt at resistance. And if the local Legislature passes a law that is unpleasant to the people of the United States, and that local law passed by the local Legislature be declared constitutional, also, by the Federal Judicial tribunals, we owe just as much allegiance to that law as we do to any law passed by Congress. A constitutional law, enacted by Congress, declared constitutional by the Federal Judicial tribunals, and a constitutional law enacted by the Legislature of the State of Nevada, declared constitutional by the Federal Judicial tribunals, are equally binding, and equal allegiance is due to both. There can be, therefore, no such thing as a paramount allegiance, because "paramount" implies superior, and the allegiance due to one constitutional law is not superior to the allegiance due to another. The allegiance of the citizen is equally due to either, whether it be a Federal or a State law.

I should be sorry, Mr. Chairman, while I am earnestly desirous that the loyalty of the people of Nevada shall be properly expressed in her organic law, to see her come limping and halting, and bound, into the Union. I should be sorry to see her come into the sisterhood of States hampered by an ambiguity. I should be sorry to see her enter the Union tied hand and foot, when such a thing is odious to the self-respect of the citizen, and is uncalled for by the necessities of the times, or by the requirements of the Enabling Act, which gives us the right to form a State Government, and become a State. I do not intend, and indeed I would not have the right to use the time of the Convention by opening up a discussion of the relative rights of the Federal and State Governments, and the relative allegiance due to the Federal and to the State Constitutions. We all understand that where the local laws come in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, the latter over-ride and blot out the former, and therefore no paramount allegiance, nor any other allegiance, is due to the State law in such case, because all allegiance is due to the one, and none to the other. But, at the same time, when our Constitution and laws are in accordance with, and not hostile to, the letter or spirit of the Constitution and laws of the United States, we owe just as much allegiance to the laws passed by the State Legislature, as we do to the laws passed by Congress.

FITCH—EARL—DELONG—PROCTOR.

Why, Mr. Chairman, what do gentlemen want? Is not this language strong enough, and loyal enough? It says that our paramount allegiance is due to the Federal Government. How? What does it mean? Clearly that it is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of its constitutional powers. Gentlemen surely do not mean to say that our allegiance is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of unconstitutional powers; because if we say that, we reduce all government to anarchy. We place ourselves at the absolute mercy of any despotic government which may chance by the exigencies of the hour to obtain the control of affairs. When we say "paramount allegiance," we should define what we mean, and say that the "paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of all its constitutional powers." Is there any objection to that?

Now, who is to define those Constitutional powers? I do not advocate the theory that the State Judiciary, the Legislature of the State, or the Executive, or the people of the State, should be allowed to judge of the Constitutionality of an act of Congress. If I were to say that, I should be advocating a wrong. I should be advocating, or at least giving my influence, to the theory of nullification,—a theory which I condemn and reprobate. But I say, "the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of all its Constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary." That is the tribunal by which they are to be defined. Surely the most uncompromising loyalty, the most intense and unmitigated devotion to the Government, can ask no more than that. Will gentlemen consider this question? Why should we wish to fetter the people who will come after us with an ambiguity? Why not define what we mean? The most intense patriotism cannot, certainly, object to our saying that we mean only that our allegiance is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of its constitutional powers as defined by the Federal Judicial tribunals. I trust that gentlemen will consider that it is a fundamental law that we are framing,—not a political platform, nor the resolutions of a mass meeting. I trust that we shall exhibit a decent, respectful, and proper patriotism; a patriotism that shall be in accordance with the ideas and wishes of our constituents; and at the same time, that we shall frame an organic law that may be explained and understood by those who come after us, and not engraft in it a wild, Jacobinical creed.

We enter the Union, sir,—if the people shall decree that we enter it at this time—under circumstances most peculiar. Our young State will be battle-born, but she will live and grow when the civil strife surrounding us shall have become only a memory. The organic law we are creating will be a rule of action, I trust, for a great people, when the gates of eternity shall have closed upon the old age of our grand-children. Our functions are higher than those of any body legislating only for the immediate future, and our sense of responsibility should be so much greater. Let us try and be prudent, if we cannot be altogether wise. Let us not mar the symmetry of the structure we hope to erect by the language of extravagance, even if it be the extravagance of loyalty, or by the insertion of an uncomely surplusage of what those who come after us may designate as questionable, and indistinct patriotism. In a word, let us keep our political extravagances for our political platforms, and make our Constitution an enduring chart of government, rather than a string of glittering and unexplained generalities.

Mr. EARL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, or substitute pending. My amendment is, to strike out the third sentence, or paramount allegiance clause, altogether; and I will ask the Secretary to read the section as it will then stand.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whosoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

Mr. EARL. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is all we want.

Mr. DELONG, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. It is a disagreeable duty, and especially so in the case of my colleague, but it must be done, because if the violation of the rule is tolerated in this instance it must be again. My point is, that an amendment to an amendment is as far as we can go in the way of amendments. We have tolerated a substitute beyond that, but we certainly cannot amend a substitute, under any rules, or under the most liberal construction of any rules.

Mr. PROCTOR said he would accept of Mr. Earl's amendment in the place of his own substitute.

Mr. DELONG contended that still Mr. Earl's amendment was not in order, under the rules as laid down in Jefferson's Manual.

Mr. PROCTOR said he would withdraw his substitute altogether, to allow Mr. Earl's to come in.

Wednesday.]

EARL—PRESIDENT—DELONG—HAWLEY.

[July 6.]

Mr. EARL offered his amendment as a substitute.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now comes up whether or not a substitute is in order, an amendment, and an amendment to an amendment being pending. The Chair has heretofore been led into error in its ruling on this point, because we have ordinarily been governed by the rules adopted by legislatures, and what of experience the Chair has had has mostly been in the California Legislature, in which, under the rules, or at least under the prevailing practice, substitutes have been recognized. But upon examination of Jefferson's Manual, which now governs us, I can nowhere find substitutes recognized at all. I think we can go no further than an amendment to an amendment, under the rules we have adopted, and the substitute is therefore not in order. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks). The apparent confusion has arisen from the frequent changes of the rules; we have this morning fallen back upon Jefferson's Manual as embodying our only rules, and if we understand and adhere to these, there will be no confusion or difficulty in the future.

MR. DELONG. The pending amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, I understand, is to strike out all after "Federal Government," where those words occur in the section. Now, Mr. Chairman, I like this language which it is proposed to strike out—

No power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whosoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

It may be considered as surplusage, possibly, but in no other way, I think, can that language be deemed objectionable, at least by persons who are presumed to be of the proper way of thinking politically, that is, by men who disbelieve in the doctrine of the right of secession, which class includes the major portion of our community at the present time. I would like very much to see the amendment adopted which was offered by my colleague (Mr. Fitch,) or by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) and amended by my colleague, but striking out the balance of the section might give dissatisfaction to some of our Union brethren, and really I do not know but they would have good reason for dissatisfaction.

MR. HAWLEY. I trust, most sincerely, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe will not prevail. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) stated a moment since that the only possible objection which he imagined could be urged against this latter portion of Section 2, now under consideration, was that of surplusage. I have examined it carefully, very frequently before I came to this Convention, and quite frequently since, and I am utterly at a loss, taking into consideration the present condition of our national affairs, to perceive that there is anything like surplusage, or anything like tautology in the section. There is not a word in it, in my opinion, which can possibly be objectionable to a man who stands firmly and squarely upon that platform which every man who loves his country ought to stand upon at this time.

It is generally understood and conceded that all rights and powers not delegated to the Government are reserved. Now, Mr. Chairman, we delegate, negatively, certain rights to the Federal Government. We insert in this section, if it be adopted, a declaration that the Federal Government has a right to compel the obedience of all its subordinate members, if any attempt is made to set aside any enactment of the Federal Government. And that, sir, is a doctrine to which every loyal man ought to be willing to subscribe. It is a doctrine which every true man ought to be willing to see written in letters of fire upon the firmament, that he who runs may read. There is one objection, however, which might possibly be urged to this Section 2, leaving out the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) but it is an objection which would probably only be raised by men who are tainted with the heresy of State Rights. And the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey covers that ground precisely and exactly. He who is unwilling to subscribe to the doctrine that the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of its constitutional powers, as prescribed, and direct d, and exemplified by the decisions of the Federal courts, certainly cannot, I think, claim to represent fairly and correctly the loyal sentiments of the people of the Territory of Nevada.

And, sir, I trust, in view of the position of our national affairs—in view of the duty which rests upon this Convention to place themselves fairly and squarely upon the record, that any motion to strike out this language, so eminently proper, just, and correct, may be overruled by the Convention, and that the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt, as amended by the gentleman from Storey, may prevail by the unanimous voice of this Convention. That action will do more to give confidence to the loyal people of this Territory—more to satisfy them that their delegates are men who do not shrink from their duty—than any other course which we might pursue. By incorporating the amendments proposed into this section, we shall render our meaning clear and plain to every man who can read and properly construe the English language. And not only that, but we shall silence every argument which could be made against this section when presented to the loyal people of Nevada—arguments which would be employed by those men who, whether openly or covertly, are acting in sympathy with that party which has plunged this country into rebellion and war, and made a Golgotha of many a beautiful valley in the East.

NOURSE.

[July 6.]

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to state very briefly my reasons for moving the amendment which I offered. If no amendment had been offered, I should have been content to let the section stand; but if it is to be amended at all, I would like, of course, to have it so fixed as to satisfy my own ideas, as no doubt other gentlemen would like to amend it so as to suit their own peculiar views.

On one side of the House the objection is taken, that by striking out what my amendment proposes to strike out, the section would be left too loyal, while, on the other hand, the gentleman who last spoke seems to think it would not leave it loyal enough. Perhaps the true medium is just between the two extremes—in medio tutissimus ibis. It leaves, as the only clause in the Constitution on this subject of paramount allegiance, the clause already there—“But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government.” That clause—precisely that, no more and no less—is in the Constitution of the United States. It may not be necessary to insert it here in our Constitution; but in these days of secession heresy it has been thought best that Nevada should recognize that doctrine fully in her fundamental law—that she should assert it full out, flat-footed; and I think she should. Other States have not done so in their Constitutions, it is true; but that is because the question has not been raised heretofore practically on that point, as it has been during the last few years, under the clause in the Constitution of the United States. I understand that what we mean to express is no more and no less than that the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of the United States, and all treaties made by the United States under the authority of the Constitution, shall be the supreme law of the land. The Constitution of the United States says that. The language of that instrument is:—

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding,

Now if there were no compact or agreement of this kind in the Constitution of the United States, then the people in each of the sovereign States would, as the secessionists claim, owe paramount allegiance to that State. But the bargain is made. It is written down in the Constitution of the United States, and it is a bargain that nobody has any right to secede from, any more than the maker of a promissory note can secede from his promise to pay, without paying the note. We say the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the United States. No matter if the State does undertake to withdraw its allegiance, the allegiance of the citizen is still due to the United States. That means, that he is a citizen of the United States all the time—that he owes all allegiance and duty to the United States, and the United States in return owes protection to him, no matter what the State may do. And if the laws of the State come in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, then the question comes up under which sovereignty the citizen is to act. Then there must be a paramount allegiance, because it must be that one has a higher claim than the other, for if not, how is the conflict ever to be decided? When that question comes up, then we say the citizen must go where the United States leads. It does not mean merely that you submit to that law of the United States, but that you owe service to the United States, as in feudal times the vassals and serfs owed allegiance and service to the liege lord. That is what it means. And the portion of the section proposed to be cut off is merely surplusage, as it seems to me. I would not disturb it, if nobody else did, because it does no harm; but when the question comes up—when we have begun to amend and improve—then, I say, let us do it thoroughly.

The language of the section goes on, and gives a gloss, or construction, to this first clause—as to the seceding of States, and the power of the Government to use force, if they undertake to secede. Why should it not go on just as well to say, that under the Federal Constitution the Congress of the United States has power to return fugitive slaves; that it has power to make the judicial records of one State legal proof in another State? Why does it not go on to enumerate the whole list of the powers vested in Congress, and give our gloss and construction to the entire instrument? It seems to me, while I admit the truth of this portion of the section perfectly—the whole of it—that that one clause, “the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government,” covers the whole thing, and expresses it ten thousand times more forcibly, more clearly, and indisputably, than we can express it. I fancy, by the addition of all this surplusage.

Now, as I have said, I would very much prefer that no question should be raised, but that we should let the section stand as it is. I only say that if the Convention is in a mood for amendment, then we should allow this one clause to stand there alone. It is sharp, clear, decisive; it expresses just what we mean, and it is more impressive than it would be to have the addition of all this which I propose to strike out.

I do not like the other addition, proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks.) I am not prepared to say, at this moment,

Wednesday.]

FITCH—NOURSE—EARL.

[July 6.

whether or not I would like the addition proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) in regard to the matter of decisions by the Federal Judiciary. Exactly to what extent it is to go I am not prepared to say. I think, however, that there are two other coordinate departments of the General Government besides the Judiciary; and I think, possibly, we should recognize the fact, that some questions the Legislative and Executive departments must decide for themselves. I am not prepared, therefore, to vote for that amendment. I am not prepared, certainly, to say that every decision of the United States Supreme Court is to be accepted as indisputably right. Of course, any decision of that tribunal is the law, in the case in which it is given, and must be obeyed as the law in that case. But I remember that the Federal Judiciary decided that the fugitive slave law was constitutional; and I should be sorry to think that I was precluded from raising that question again, in every way I could, convinced as I am that that decision was a most flagrant and gross abuse of power. It may be that, upon examination and reflection. I shall come to the conclusion that this addition, as regards decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States, is all right, but I am not now prepared to say it is, and it strikes me that it might bring about confusion.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Do I understand him to say that each of the three coordinate branches of the Government have a right to pass upon the constitutionality of the laws enacted by Congress?

Mr. NOURSE. Certainly not. But they are, nevertheless, the powers which must decide by their action, in some cases, whether their course is constitutional or not. I judge from the tone of the gentleman's remarks that he is rather too much inclined, as I look upon it, to favor certain doctrines of the old Whig school. Now, I wish to state that I was brought up in the strictest school of State Rights Democracy, and I continued with that party until it ran pretty nearly into secession, when I left it. I believe that General Jackson was right when he said, when the question came before him either to sign or to veto a bill establishing a United States Bank, that, notwithstanding the Supreme Court had held in prior cases, and in more than one instance, that Congress had the power to pass such a law, he conscientiously believed it to be his duty to veto that bill, because he must judge for himself as to its constitutionality. What I mean is this—that the Executive, in his action, must judge for himself what is constitutional and what is not. And when a question comes up in a Court of law, in a case at law, and is brought to the United States Supreme Court, as the Court of last resort, then the decision of the United States Supreme Court is the law in that case. There is no doubt about that. If the law is held to be constitutional by the Court, it is constitutional and binding in that case, and if it is held unconstitutional, it is unconstitutional in that case. Let the decision be on the one side or the other, the decision is law in that case. But the question may be raised again in a new case, and a future Supreme Court may decide it the other way. Hence I am not prepared to say, Mr. Chairman, that this would be a wise addition.

It seems to me that we have stated, in what this section says down to that point, all that need be stated, and then this addition, in regard to constitutional powers and the decisions of Federal tribunals would be mere gloss. The Constitution of the United States was very carefully prepared, and that Constitution, so carefully prepared, and so often and thoroughly discussed, in Congress, and in the Courts all over our land, must be the best interpretation of itself, and the best interpretation of this Constitution which we are framing. So far as the power of the United States Courts goes, I have no doubt that the sections of the Constitution which establish and define the powers of the United States Courts are the best interpretation. And the Constitution of the United States is the best definer of what the extent of our allegiance is. That we owe paramount allegiance to the Federal Government—that, whatever happens in our State, we are still subjects or citizens of the United States, and owe to the United States our service, rather than to our State—is all we say or need to say. That is all that our language can be twisted into when we say that we owe paramount allegiance to the Government of the United States. Though I am, for one, in favor of leaving the section as it stands down to "Federal Government," yet I have no feeling in the matter, and if I am voted down shall submit cheerfully.

Mr. EARL. I have at one time handed in a substitute which was not considered as being in order at the time, and as the matter seems to create considerable talk, I shall not press it, nor offer any other amendment, because it appears to me that the proposition of my colleague, (Mr. Fitch,) clears up the whole matter. I regarded this paramount allegiance clause as entirely surplusage, and I still think it is not necessary at all; but we find it here already, and since it is possible, if we strike it out, that we may be considered as being tender-footed on the question, I think the propriety of that course is at least doubtful. Therefore I am disposed to leave it there, although it is true that it makes the section a little longer than is really necessary. The amendment I proposed was to strike out this portion:—

But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States.

If that were taken out we should still have all that is necessary. We recognize the powers

HAWLEY—PROCTOR.

conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon the Government, and the right to enforce its authority, and that would be sufficient. But, at the same time, we find these lines in the document which we have adopted as our basis, and I fear that the attempt to strike them out at this time would be construed as a sign of weakness on the part of the Convention not at all in harmony with its known proclivities. I, for one, do not wish to have any one doubt my position on that score at all. Now, to avoid any further talk on the subject, I propose that we take the amendment which was offered this morning by my colleague, (Mr. Fitch.) That clears up the meaning of the whole thing, and, as it stands now, it is certainly ambiguous. If we do not do that, I hope we shall adopt the original section.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say one word further. I should not have felt called upon to say anything more if the argument of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), had not been so carefully worded. I think we occupy an extremely responsible position here. Everybody knows that in the contest pending now for the possession of the civil government of the United States for the next four years, there is a party thoroughly organized on this coast, watching every move, and seeking some "coign of vantage" from which more effectually to promulgate their peculiar views. And I do assure gentlemen, from what I know of their purposes and designs, that the very act of striking out these declarations which follow the sentence—"but the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government"—would prove a tower of strength to that party. And if it did not result in a triumph for the so-called but terribly misnamed Democratic party, I believe it would at least tend to make an immense difference in the vote of the Pacific coast as compared with the last two elections, and thus do more, when the result of the election shall be known, than we can readily conceive of, to strengthen the hands of those who are in arms against the General Government. Why, sir, it would be said at once that this Convention was disposed to pander to those men who are asking the Federal Government to lay down its arms and submit to a dishonorable peace. I believe that to be the fact, and I believe, moreover, to be as brief as possible, that if we insert at the proper place the words proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch), and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks), all those men who would go upon the stump and attempt to convince people, who perhaps think little and read less, that we are bound hand and foot to the Federal Government, and have left to us only such rights as are usually accorded to municipal corporations, would find their mouths stopped. Those words would do more to condemn them than any other language we could use, because every man must know and admit, that he who refuses to subscribe to the doctrine that every citizen owes allegiance to the Federal Government, in the exercise of its functions as prescribed and defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, thereby stamps himself plainly and ineffaceably with the brand of—call it what you will—Copperheadism, State Rights-ism, or any other ism that can be found in the ranks of that party and among those men who have plunged this country into the war that is now desolating its fair fields and its once happy homes. Therefore I trust that these amendments will be adopted, no man contradicting. They will be a tower of strength to the Union party, while on the other hand, their rejection would be the occasion of weakness to that party, and a tower of strength to those who are opposed to it and its principles.

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch), will not prevail, but perhaps for different reasons than have been given by any who have heretofore spoken. It is a question of expediency as much as of anything else. I, for one, am in favor of a State Government, and I hope a Constitution will be adopted here which I can support. Now it is a well known fact that this clause—this paramount allegiance question—had more to do with the defeat of the last Constitution than any thing else in it, and I am satisfied that if you send it back to the people again to be voted upon with that clause in it, the result will be the same as it was at the last election. It seems to me that if you are going to adopt a clause which has already been decided on and rejected by the people, you might as well at once adopt the resolution which was offered yesterday by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne), and adjourn your Convention and go home. If you take that course I do not see any necessity of our spending further time here. Not that I do not myself recognize the principles contained in that clause to a very great extent, but I regard their incorporation in the section as surplusage entirely. I think they are fully covered by the Enabling Act. That requires us, in the first place, to adopt the Federal Constitution, and we did that in the outset. Now, the allegiance we owe to the Federal Government is a natural allegiance, and it must be well understood, or at least it is sufficiently defined in the Constitution of the United States which we have already adopted. At all events, such a clause has never been inserted before in any other State Constitution, so far as I can discover, and there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States nor in the Enabling Act requiring it. The gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), read a clause from the Constitution of the United States declaring that the Constitution and laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution and laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. Well, we have adopted that already, and it seems to me that

FITCH—DELONG—BROSNAN—WARWICK.

[July 6.

is sufficient. I hope, for these reasons, that the amendment may be rejected, and I trust, in order that we may be able to prepare such a Constitution as the people will willingly in-dorse, that all matters relating to this question of paramount allegiance will be stricken out.

Mr. FITCH. I think the reason given by the gentleman from Nye, who has just taken his seat, for the defeat of the last Constitution, cannot be exactly correct. He is of the opinion that it was defeated because of the insertion of the Paramount Allegiance clause. Now, sir, he has a much higher estimate of the strength and influence of the party of which he is the sole and able representative on this floor than I have, if he entertains that opinion. I do not think the late Constitution was defeated for any such reason. That may have been the reason why he, and others of his political faith, voted against it, but he must have fed upon some mighty Cæsarian diet if he thinks that his party in this Territory could adopt or defeat anything. I think that Constitution was defeated by a combination of fortuitous circumstances. Some charge its defeat upon the Mining Tax clause; others to the Paramount Allegiance clause; some lay it to one thing, and some to another. I think myself that it was defeated because the bolting delegation from Storey County was not admitted into the Union State Convention. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a little account to settle in connection with that matter.

Mr. FITCH. I do not think we are framing a Constitution for six months or a year merely, but we are framing a Constitution to last when we are in our graves; and for that reason I am in favor, without particular regard to the effect upon the fall elections, of defining exactly what we mean. I differ from the views of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) most essentially. That gentleman is opposed to inserting the words "in the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary," not because Congress or the Executive have any right to construe the law, but because they must be judges of their own powers in certain contingencies; and he cites in illustration the case of General Jackson and the United States Bank. Now, I do not think that case applies at all to this sentence, as it is worded here. We say: "The paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary." Now, while I concede that each department, the Executive and Legislative, as well as the Judicial, may be its own judge of the constitutionality of laws coming within their respective spheres, I do not allow that the private citizen has the right to be his own judge of the constitutionality of an act of Congress. The only way in which he can oppose such an act is in the courts, and if it is decided to be constitutional by the courts, it is his duty to obey it till the decision is reversed or the law repealed. Although it is true that the decision may be reversed, still until it is so reversed it is his duty to obey it. I would insert the words "in the exercise of all its constitutional powers," not out of any desire to cater to any disloyal sentiment, nor with the idea that they will have any such effect, but simply to define what we mean, to let those who are to come after us understand what we mean when we say "the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government." Of course it is not due to unconstitutional acts of Congress, but only to those acts that are constitutional.

Mr. DELONG (interrupting). I would suggest that the hour of recess is approaching, and unless we get to a vote now on this question and get it out of Committee, we shall have to discuss it all over again.

Mr. FITCH. I will not detain the Convention further. I ask that the question be stated.

Some discussion took place as to the priority of pending amendments under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN decided that the vote must first be taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, (as modified at the suggestion of Mr. Fitch,) and then on the amendment proposed by Mr. Nourse, to strike out the latter part of the section.

Mr. BROSNAN. The question seems to have taken a different course from what I expected. I had proposed to myself to have an opportunity, after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe should be disposed of, to submit an amendment to that of the gentleman

(Mr. Banks); but if the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt I may be precluded.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not; the section can still be amended in any other respect.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, as modified at Mr. Fitch's suggestion, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN. Now a further amendment is in order, I suppose. I merely present it, and do not propose to discuss it. It is an amendment which I offered in the last Convention, and I repeat it now, believing that it would obviate all the difficulties which have been apprehended. I will ask that the section be read as it will stand if my amendment shall be adopted.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

Section 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or to do any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States.

Mr. WARWICK. Notwithstanding that the clock has been stopped, and our thanks may be due to our modern Joshua for arresting the wheels of time, still time rolls on, and the time for our recess has arrived. I, therefore, move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DELONG. That would leave our business unfinished in the Committee.

Mr. EARL. I hope the motion will not prevail; we are in a condition now to come to a vote.

Mr. DELONG. I hope it will not prevail, for the members of the Committee cannot come back after recess with the subject fresh in their minds. Let us vote.

Mr. BROSNAN. To relieve the Committee from any embarrassment, I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The question was taken on the motion that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights; had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was received, and leave granted accordingly.

The hour (12 o'clock,) fixed by resolution for recess having passed, the President declared the Convention at recess until one o'clock, P. M.

ARTICLE I.

The Convention, July 6, 1864,
P. M., and was adjourned.

ORDINANCE.

Mr. COLLINS. I have the honor to read the clause of the fourth section of the Enabling Act, Mr. President, you will observe that it is required of this Convention to establish by ordinance certain provisions in regard to slavery, in regard to religious toleration, and in regard to the public lands, yielding all right and title to them to the Federal Government. In obedience to that requirement, I have drafted an ordinance, which, with your permission, I will read:—

ORDINANCE.

In obedience to the requirements of an act of the Congress of the United States, approved March 21, 1864, to enable the people of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, this Convention, elected and convened in obedience to said Enabling Act, do ordain as follows, which Ordinances shall be irrevocable, without the consent of the United States and the people of the State of Nevada:—

First—That there shall be in the said State of Nevada neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment for crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Second—That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Third—That the people inhabiting said Territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within said Territory, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States; and that the lands belonging to the citizens of the United States residing without the said State shall never be taxed higher than the land belonging to residents thereof; and that no taxes shall be imposed by said State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States.

Mr. BANKS. Is it proposed to pass this independent of the Constitution? It occurred to me, from the reading of the Enabling Act, that the design was to have something of this kind incorporated in the Constitution, although I admit that the language—"on behalf of the people," and so on, would tend to lead one to an opposite conclusion. The reason why I thought so, was that in the first part of this Section 4 of the Enabling Act it is provided that, after the organization, the Convention "shall declare, on behalf of the people of said Territory, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States. Whereupon the said Convention shall be, and it is hereby authorized to form a Constitution and State Government for said Territory." And then follows the requirements for the disclaiming of these things here enumerated. I think, from the connection and order in which these things occur, that this proposition should constitute a part of the Constitution, but upon that point I would like to hear from gentlemen who have reflected more upon it than I have myself.

The PRESIDENT. If the Convention will please rise to the Chair to make a suggestion—I have had some consultation with the framer of that Ordinance, and it seems to me to be anticipated in the Enabling Act that something in this kind should be introduced, and become a part of the Constitution, under the name or in the name of an Ordinance. And for the action proposed here a precedent in one State, at least, where there has been, previously, similar action,—for instance, in the State of Kansas, where the Ordinance, in the Constitution as published, is made to precede all other matters, under the name of "Ordinance."

Mr. COLLINS. I have it here. It is headed, "The Constitution of Kansas, adopted July," etc., and then follows the "Ordinance."

Mr. BANKS. Connected with, and following the heading of the Constitution? That covers the whole ground.

Mr. COLLINS. Then follows the Bill of Rights, and then the different Departments.

The PRESIDENT. I suppose it is perfectly competent for the Convention to make that arrangement.

Mr. BANKS. I suggest, then, that the Ordinance take its second reading by title.

Mr. CHAPIN. I suggest the propriety of incorporating with the Ordinance the resolution adopted yesterday. We are getting too many separate and distinct documents. We have been required to pass a resolution adopting the Constitution of the United States, and

Wednesday,]

CROSMAN—COLLINS—PRESIDENT—TOZER—DELONG—STURTEVANT.

[July 6.

I would like to see that resolution incorporated with this Ordinance.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suppose that can be arranged hereafter. I move that the Ordinance be read a second time by title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Ordinance was read a second time by title, and referred accordingly.

RESOLUTION ADOPTING THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

Mr. CHAPIN. Now I move that the resolution adopted yesterday, be also referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. That resolution has already been adopted by the Convention, and it would seem superfluous now to refer it.

Mr. DELONG. We might reconsider the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BROSNAN. I suppose all there is to be done, is to give the resolution a place in connection with the Constitution. Its adoption is all that the Enabling Act requires.

Mr. COLLINS. I suppose it should be adopted with all the formalities. If through inadvertence or haste we have adopted it in an improper manner, I hope we shall reconsider it.

COL. CRADLEBAUGH.

Mr. HAWLEY. I observe that there is a distinguished gentleman in the House, whom I am sure we all delight to honor, and I move that Col. Cradlebaugh be invited to take a seat within the bar of the Convention. [Applause.]

The PRESIDENT. I suppose to that motion there is no dissenting voice. Col. Cradlebaugh will please take a seat inside the bar.

Col. Cradlebaugh came forward within the bar and was provided with a seat.

THE RESOLUTION—AGAIN.

Mr. COLLINS. To facilitate matters, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Convention yesterday passed the resolution adopting the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT. The first duty of the Convention was to adopt that resolution. That was required to be done before the adoption, even, of any rules; and the records of the Convention show that it has been done. That is all, in the opinion of the Chair, that devolved upon the Convention to do; and that having been done, and evidenced by the records of our proceedings, it stands in a position different from any other subject matter before the Convention. If, however, it is the opinion of the Convention that anything more is necessary to perfect the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the Chair will be happy to put any motion which may be made.

Mr. TOZER. The Enabling Act itself, I was about to observe, prescribes the time when this act was to be done—the adoption of the Constitution of the United States—namely, immediately following the organization of the Convention; and now, after the lapse of a day or two, to reconsider the vote by which we complied, at the proper time, with the requirement of the Enabling Act, seems to be out of place, at least, if not out of order. I oppose the motion on that ground.

Mr. COLLINS. As the reconsideration does not meet with the approbation of the Convention, I withdraw the motion.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CHAPIN in the Chair,) for the consideration of the Ordinance just previously introduced by Mr. Collins, in relation to slavery, religious toleration, and the public lands.

ORDINANCE CONCERNING SLAVERY, ETC.

The Ordinance was read by the Secretary.

Mr. DELONG. I move that the Committee rise, report the ordinance back to the Convention, and recommend its passage.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would inquire if this ordinance would not conflict with our right to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of the public lands, which belong to us, under the Enabling Act.

Mr. COLLINS. In answer to that suggestion, I will say that the Enabling Act provides that the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township, or their equivalents in other lands, where such sections have been otherwise disposed of, shall belong to us for common schools; and, in addition to that, there are numerous other grants of public lands. Further than that, we are to be admitted on an equal footing with all the other States, which gives us the swamp and overflowed lands within our limits. This ordinance will not conflict with those rights and grants at all.

The question was taken on the motion that the Committee rise and report the ordinance back to the Convention, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Ordinance relating to slavery, etc., and had instructed him to report the same back to the Convention without amendment, and recommend its passage.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, the report was received and the Ordinance placed on file.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the chair), for the further consideration of Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights.

PARAMOUNT ALLEGIANCE.

The question was stated on agreeing to section two, which was read by the Secretary, as heretofore amended, as follows:—

Wednesday.]

BROSNAN—DELONG—SECRETARY—FITCH—BANKS.

[July 6.

Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government in the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BROSNAN. I now offer my amendment I propose to amend section two so as to read as follows :—

Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have a right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or to do any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DELONG. I rise for information in regard to the section as it now stands. As I understood the Secretary to read it, we have already stricken out the latter part of the printed section—all after the words "Government of the United States"—but I did not so understand the action of the Convention.

The SECRETARY. I so understood it.

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; nothing was stricken out. Only the words were inserted—"In the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary."

The SECRETARY. I understood that the proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch), was not only to insert certain words, but to strike out the latter part of the section; and that it was accepted by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks).

Mr. FITCH. My motion was that we leave off there—at the words "Government of the United States"—striking out that latter portion of the section. I regarded it as entirely unnecessary.

Mr. DELONG. Well, then, most certainly there has been a misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. If that was the amendment, I voted under a misapprehension.

[Several voices—"So did I?"]

Mr. BANKS. When the gentleman from Storey offered his amendment, I asked what he intended by it, and he said he intended nothing more than to add, after my amendment, the words, "as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary." It was with that understanding that I accepted the amendment.

Mr. FITCH. It is true that I stated that as my object, but at the same time my amendment went further, as will be seen by examination. It was read as I offered it, and in my remarks I referred to the concluding portion of the section as unnecessary or surplusage. I supposed it was understood by the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. The words I sent up were simply these: "Amend by adding after the word 'Government,' in line seven, the words 'in the exercise of all its Constitutional powers.'" And to that was added these words: "As the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary." These words were inserted, and I certainly voted under a most monstrous misapprehension if anything was stricken out.

Mr. DELONG. I will ask my colleague nearest me, (Mr. Brosnan), to consent to withdraw his amendment for a moment, in order that we may get this misunderstanding straight. I will then move to amend the section as it now stands by adding the portion which has been stricken out through a misapprehension.

Mr. BROSNAN. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. DELONG. I now move to amend Section 2 by adding the words which follow "Government of the United States," in the Section as printed, to wit :

"The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whensoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority."

Mr. FITCH. I am willing to accept the amendment. I am not tenacious about it, but I do not think the language is necessary.

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROSNAN. I now renew my amendment.

The SECRETARY again read Mr. Brosnan's amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I wish, Mr. President, to say a word or two in regard to my position, in offering this amendment. I acknowledge perfect adherence to and belief in the truth of the section as it now stands in the old Constitution. There is not an idea or a word in it to which I do not yield implicit credence and obedience. I consider, however, that the last part of the section, commencing with the words—"The Constitution of the United States confers full power" might very well be left out, because all expressed therein is necessarily implied as one of the first principles of governmental existence. Every government must have that vital element of power, or it is no government. It must necessarily be able to enforce obedience to its authority in all respects. Hence, upon the ground of its being superfluous, I would have that portion omitted. And inasmuch as some gentlemen have expressed dissatisfaction with the term "paramount allegiance," I have omitted those words also, in order that we may unite as speedily as possible upon the idea, or upon a section which shall accord all the vitality and power to the Government that could be embodied in it by the use of those words, and at the same time not give offense to any person. In this way, I trust, we may come to a vote speedily, and dispose of this difficult question.

Wednesday,]

STURTEVANT—DELONG—CHAIRMAN—FITCH—HAWLEY—BANKS.

[July 6.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I desire to ask whether this is a substitute for the whole section or an addition.

Mr. BROSNAN. If it is adopted as I offer it, it will be a complete section of itself.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Brosnan, and upon a division it was not agreed to—ayes, 6; noes, 20.

The question recurred upon the adoption of Section 2, as amended.

Mr. DELONG. I move, instead of adopting the section by a vote, that when the Committee rise they report Section 2 back to the Convention, as amended. I think that would be a more proper course.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to me that we had better adopt the sections as far as we go, and then when we get through with the Article the motion to report back will apply to the whole. After the Committee has amended and adopted the sections as a Committee we can go back into Convention and adopt the amendments of the Committee, or further amend.

Mr. DELONG. Very well. I will ask for the reading of the section as it now stands, before the vote is taken on its adoption.

The section, as amended, was read as follows:—

"SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government, in the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert, or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whosoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority."

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, as read, and it was adopted.

TRIAL BY JURY.

Section 3 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 3. The right of trial by jury shall be secure to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties, in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law; and if three-fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict notwithstanding this provision,

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend the section by striking out all after the words "prescribed by law."

Mr. DELONG. As an amendment to the portion proposed to be stricken out, I move to insert after the word "jurors," the words "in civil cases," so as to read "and if three-fourths of the jurors, in civil cases, agree upon a verdict," etc.

Mr. CHAPIN. You will find that, "in all civil cases," a line or two above.

Mr. DELONG. That only applies to waiving a jury.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will give way for a moment I will offer an amendment which I think will cover the case as he desires. I will move to insert after the words "upon a verdict," the words "in civil cases."

Mr. DELONG. That only puts it in a different place. My object, and I presume the object of the gentleman from Douglas is the same, is this: I am willing to allow a three-fourths verdict in civil cases, but I want to require a unanimous verdict in all criminal cases. As it now stands, three-fourths of a jury may convict a man of a criminal offense, the wisdom of which innovation I doubt.

Mr. HAWLEY. We cannot be too explicit in cases of so much importance, where the construction of the constitutional provision might be difficult, and perhaps disputed.

Mr. DELONG. I think the amendment will come in better after "jurors" than after "verdict," although I have read it hastily. Or suppose we insert it between "and" and "if," so as to read "and, in civil cases, if three-fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict," etc.

Mr. BANKS. That will make it good language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will accept that as my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the question will first be on the amendment of the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) as modified by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong).

The question was taken, and on a division the amendment was agreed to; ayes, 22—noes, 6.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Fitch, to strike out all the section following the words "prescribed by law."

Mr. BANKS. I have an amendment which would be in order now, but I prefer that the vote should first be taken on the proposition now before the Convention.

Mr. FITCH raised a question of order, that after a vote striking out or refusing to strike out a portion of the section, it would not be open to amendment.

After some discussion, the Chairman decided that it would be necessary to perfect the clause before taking the vote on the proposition to strike out.

Mr. BANKS. Then I will offer my amendment now, as it proposes to perfect that portion which the gentleman from Storey desires to strike out. I move to insert after the word "if" the words "the number prescribed by law, which shall not be less than;" also, to strike out the whole of the proviso following the words "the whole jury;" so that the section would read:

SEC. 3. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law; and in civil cases, if the number prescribed by law, which shall not be less than three-fourths of the jurors, agree upon a verdict, it shall stand, and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury.

What this amendment affects, or what I propose to accomplish by it, is simply this: To provide that the Legislature shall, in its discretion, prescribe by law that any portion of a jury above and including three-fourths shall decide a civil case. That is the proposition embraced in my amendment, and nothing else. As this section now stands there is a provision to the effect that the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of each house, may require a unanimous verdict; so that, as it now stands, there is a discrimination in favor of allowing three-fourths to render a verdict, while I propose by my amendment to make a discrimination against the three-fourths verdict.

Mr. FITCH. I will not detain the Convention two minutes, but here is as good a place as any to express my opposition to this whole theory of a three-fourths verdict. I consider it an innovation, and nothing else but experimental legislation, and I think an organic law is the last place in the world in which experimental legislation should be permitted or tolerated. I know that there are arguments against compelling an entire jury to agree before returning a verdict, but I think it is better to —“bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of.”

And I think this thing has never been attempted in any other State in the Union. It is an experiment taken from the jury system of Scotland, and I believe it would be about as illy fitted to this State as to any other in the world. I have no doubt that the proposition will pass, but I desire to enter on the record my opposition to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not knowing what the action of the Convention was likely to be on this subject, I favored the amendment which was first proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) and for which my amendment was afterwards substituted. But my mind is decidedly made up in opposition to the innovation which has been referred to by the other gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch.) I cannot conceive that any good can possibly result from it. It is a well known fact to all attorneys and counsellors-at-law that very frequently parties litigant, availing themselves of the right given to them by the statute, choose to have their cases tried by a smaller number than twelve jurors. Frequently five jurors, or seven jurors, perhaps, are selected to try a case; and in either of these cases it would, of course, be impossible to get a three-fourths vote of the jury; and then the result would be that the case would have to be remanded for a new trial, an event now of very frequent occurrence in the case of a jury's failing to agree. I cannot for the life of me see how any good is to result to our judicial system from this innovation. I voted for the amendment because I did not know whether this part of the section would be ultimately stricken out or not; but I intended to move to strike it out myself, if nobody else had done so. I sincerely trust, in view of the difficulties which would surround the experiment, if adopted, and in view of the facts that experimental legislation is dangerous, and that the jury system of our country, as at present organized and established, furnishes sufficient protection to life and property, that the motion of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) will prevail, and that all relating to this three-fourths experiment will be stricken out by the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. If I feared that the adoption of this article, or the defeat of the amendment of my colleague, (Mr. Fitch), would ever produce such a disastrous result as to compel a District Judge to divide a man up into fractions in order to get an exact three-fourths vote of a jury, I should certainly vote for the amendment. But I have such an abiding confidence in the intelligence and humanity of the judges, that I do not believe they would ever allow a case to go to a jury of twelve, or of any less number, in such a way that it would be necessary to cut anybody up in order to get a fractional verdict. Now I will state that, as my colleague has said, it is true that this is an innovation upon our present jury system, but we find a precedent for it in the Scottish law, and the experience of that country, for many years, has been favorable to its operation. It is just such an innovation, it strikes me, as we need in this country. In my experience as an attorney, I find it is the man that has a bad cause, rather than he who has a good one, who, as a general thing, asks for a jury, with the hope of getting upon that jury at least one man of his way of thinking, in order to “hang” the jury.

The CHAIRMAN. Then that one juror would be less humane than the judge you referred to; the one would divide up one man only, while the other would hang the whole jury. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELONG. Well, I know a great many jurors that, no doubt, ought to be hung. But, in all seriousness, Mr. Chairman, I do think that this would be an innovation which would be indorsed by the people. I remember that, last fall, when this Constitution, which we are now seeking to alter and improve, was earnestly assailed by men exceedingly desirous and anxious to find something in it which they could find fault with before the people; when they came to that clause, the only objection they would venture to urge was, its applicability to criminal cases. They referred to the hardships which might result to persons unjustly accused of crime, and cited cases where one man alone, on a jury, had stood out, with apparent obstinacy, against a verdict of guilty, and the event had proved that he was correct, and by his firmness had saved an innocent man from the scaffold or the dungeon. And they insisted that such sacred rights as life and liberty should be carefully guarded, and not be allowed to be put in jeopardy by anything less than the unanimous verdict of twelve of a man's peers—that unless a jury of twelve impartial men all agree that he is guilty, the man shall not go to the scaffold or the dungeon—that the case should be so clear as to convince the minds of the whole twelve, or that mercy should intervene with a doubt, and snatch the accused from the impending danger. But no one questioned, during that canvass, the propriety of the three-fourths verdict in civil cases, because it is well known that there is no place under the canopy of Heaven where, in the experience of men, it has been found so difficult to prevent one man at least, on a jury, from being tampered with, as in this country; and especially in these mining cases, involving immense interests. One man stands out, and thus enables a company to continue in possession of a rich mine, administering its proceeds, and enjoying its revenue, to the detriment of the proper owners, all through the trickery, and dishonesty, perhaps, of that one man, until, in the course of time, perhaps a year or two, the case comes up on the calendar for a new trial. I think this is an innovation to which the people will consent, and that the verdict by three-fourths or more of a jury, will be found in practice fully as safe, and even more likely to be right, than where one single juror has the power to stand out and “hang” the jury.

EARL—WARWICK.

Mr. EARL. I hope the section will be allowed to remain as it is. I have heard in Virginia City of cases of this kind, where men have been known to say in advance that such and such cases could never come to trial, because, as they said, “we can hang the jury.” I think it is necessary for the general interest and good of the country, and for the progress and development of our mines, that we should retain that section as it now stands. The civil cases which come before our Courts are of great importance, differing in that respect from those of California, or of any other State in which we have had any experience. I think we certainly should adopt this provision for a three-fourths verdict.

Mr. WARWICK. I perfectly agree with the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) in regard to the amendment proposed, providing that a unanimous verdict shall be required in all criminal cases. But there is surely less danger of injustice being done by a two-thirds verdict of a jury in civil cases than there would be under the requirement of a unanimous decision. As the gentleman has urged upon the Convention, it is the easiest matter in the world, in cases pending before the Courts with probably a million of dollars, more or less, in the balance, to get at least one individual on the jury who can be improperly influenced. It would certainly be easier to do that than it would if a verdict could be rendered by eight or nine out of the twelve. The object, undoubtedly, of all trials in the Courts is to secure justice to all parties, and that being done, it is all the law requires. The important point is to get at the readiest and surest means of securing justice, and if any gentleman can prove to me that a unanimous verdict will be more likely to secure that end than a two-thirds or three-fourths verdict would, then I certainly should vote for the former proposition.

Still, in a criminal case, where the life of an individual may be trembling in the balance, I should be in favor of requiring a unanimous verdict, preferring rather to allow ninety-nine guilty men to escape than that one innocent man should suffer. But in a civil case, and, sometimes, perhaps, one of the utmost importance, involving millions, or, at all events, hundreds of thousands of dollars, I certainly think that a three-fourths verdict would be more apt to secure justice to all parties than a unanimous verdict would be likely to do. I suppose that there is no gentleman, either exercising any judicial functions or engaged in practising law in Nevada, but is fully aware of the manifest injustice which time and again litigants are subjected to, and the sometimes immense expense to which they are put, on account of there being some improper persons on the jury. Perhaps, while the party thinks that he has carefully guarded every avenue of approach, he finds that still, by some means or other, some one man out of the twelve has been secured to the adverse interest, and he loses the verdict. The man who is thus secured by the artful policy of one or other of the litigants, is enabled to defeat the ends of justice. I hope the proposition contained in this section will carry, however much it may be deemed to be or proved to be an experiment.

But, sir, it is not altogether an experiment. I believe that it has been tried in the State of Louisiana, or elsewhere, and that it is not, certainly, altogether confined to Scotland. Of this, however, I will not be positive. But, whether it is or not an experiment, I do not believe in sacrificing to any time-honored evil, simply because it has the sanction of time. If our present circumstances demonstrate to us that a new condition of things would be better for us, that a new system would work better in our country than the system of injustice to which we have submitted in the past, I am not, for one, certainly, afraid to try the experiment. Any melioration you might attempt to make, either in law or ethics, would meet with this same opposition in behalf of anything which has the sanction of time. You are always met with this old-time cry of “innovation!” No, sir! although I am in favor, where right guides the way, of treading in the beaten path, still, if innovation is necessary, I am not afraid to innovate. Why, sir, our government was an experiment in the past, but it has now the sanction of a great nation.

Wednesday.]

CHAPIN—NOURSE—FITCH—DELONG—BROSNAN.

[July 6.]

I hope in this case we shall not fear to innovate where the ends of justice demand the adoption of this change in our judicial system.

Mr. CHAPIN. The amendment proposed by my colleague, (Mr. Fitch), is to prevent this experiment, or this innovation, and to adhere to the old law, or rule of practice, of requiring a full verdict by a jury of twelve men. I hope that amendment will not prevail, because I want to try that experiment, or that innovation. This is the very country to try it in. Our circumstances are not like those of any other people in these United States. We are, as my friend from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), remarked yesterday, mostly immigrants here. We are from all parts of the world, unknown to each other. We have our juries sitting upon cases where millions of dollars are at stake, and we are obliged to take men for such juries who are unknown to us, whose integrity has never had a test; and we know that it has been proved, time and again, that some of those men can be approached—that they can be bribed to stand out—and verdicts have, in that manner, been prevented in cases where the greatest injustice has thereby been done. I have resided more than four years in this Territory, and I can go out into this community and count up scores of men who have been ruined in that very manner; simply because twelve men were required to find a verdict, and perhaps one single man who stood out would prevent it. The result has been, that where poor men have been engaged in litigation with rich companies, they have been utterly unable to come into Court to try their causes over again. I see a great deal more safety in depending upon a verdict of three-fourths of a jury, than in requiring a unanimous verdict from twelve men whom you do not know. Therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down, and we shall adhere to the section as it stands. It will not apply to criminal cases, but to civil cases alone. And again, there is another safeguard in the fact that we leave it to the Legislature, so that if they, in their wisdom, think that the experiment does not work well, they can, by a vote of two-thirds, at any time alter the law, and require a unanimous verdict. I say, let us try it.

Mr. NOURSE. I am opposed to the amendment, for the reason that I like exceedingly this provision for a three-fourths verdict in civil cases. The reason for my objection to the present system is, that where interests of enormous magnitude are in litigation, it is quite easy to tamper with some one of the jurymen; but where a verdict can be rendered by three-fourths, it make the number to be tampered with larger, and therefore increases the difficulties in the way of such tampering. I can see no great difficulty or danger in it, for when we go into the Supreme Court, and two judges out of three decide against us, we do not complain.

But the gentleman from Douglas. (Mr Hawley), presents an argument against it on the score of humanity. Now I suppose that if a verdict by three-fourths of the jury is required, and a larger number than three-fourths should agree to it, it would not vitiate the verdict. The gentleman seems to think it would, and that, in such a case, instead of juries being "hung," they would have to be drawn and quartered. [Laughter.] I would like to know, if in the Scottish authorities, there are any cases mentioned of the division of jurymen in that way.

Mr. FITCH. Men who are engaged in the profession of the law do not naturally respect the jury system. They come so much in contact with the evils of that system that they are willing to do anything in order to mitigate them. But, nevertheless, the people are wedded to the jury system, and I do not think we could adopt any clause which would be so hurtful to the chances of the adoption of our Constitution as this proposed innovation. My colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) called our attention to the fact that nobody objected to this three-fourths verdict modification of the jury system, except in so far as it applied to criminal cases. Now, the gentleman's memory is certainly very much at fault. I can remember of hearing the gentleman's eloquent and most sonorous periods, and his loftiest flights, during the last canvass, over in Dayton, and Silver City, and Como, where he made speeches, in which he called particular attention to this terrible innovation upon our jury system; a system, he said, which had been handed down to us from King John, from whom it was wrested in magna charta by the barons of Runnymede. That sacred guarantee of our liberties, he told us, had been interfered with by the Constitutional Convention of Nevada, and that innovation on our chartered rights he repudiated and denounced with all the force of his invective and sarcasm. Now, while I did not altogether indorse the entire accuracy of all my colleague's historical allusions, I do think that this is an innovation of at least doubtful propriety. So far as bribing jurors is concerned, I presume that if a man can "hang" a jury by bribing one man, he can, with a little more effort, accomplish the same thing by bribing three or four men.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? I do not remember the rounded periods and lofty flights to which he refers [laughter]; but if I did indulge in that style of argument, I must be pardoned for acting on the same principle as the man up in Kentucky, who, as the story runs, turned his jacket in order to save his life. But, Mr. Chairman, as all the delegates here are supposed to be politicians, I imagine that nobody is going to hold me to account for not recollecting all that I ever said on the stump. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSNAN. I am not disposed to say much on the question now before the Convention, but I cannot see, for the life of me, why men are so wedded to the system of requiring a unanimous decision by twelve men. In the last Convention I introduced this innovation, as it is called, and I suppose I may be considered, to some extent, bound to give the reason why I did so. I am, however, relieved from that necessity by the full explanations given by gentlemen who favor the section as it now stands.

Wednesday,]

BANKS—HAWLEY—FITCH—WARWICK.

[July 6.

Still, I would ask gentlemen who are opposed to the section, at what time or period of time in the history of the world it became necessary to dispose of questions of interest between man and man by the unanimous decision of twelve men? As to the origin of juries, if history is not at fault, I believe they commenced with the Goths, long before the Saxons had anything to do with them. There were two juries, the extraordinary, and what was called the grand assize, or ordinary. This extraordinary jury was composed in this way: A summons was issued by the Sheriff of the county to four knights, who, upon meeting together, had the privilege of electing twelve others to act with them. Then these sixteen knights sat in judgment, and when any twelve of them agreed, their decision became a verdict. Then complete unanimity was not required, and we have no authority at all for requiring it, if we go back to the origin of the jury system. So, in cases before the High Court of Parliament, where the peer was tried by his peers upon the principle of the jury system; it was not necessary there that all should agree in the judgment. It was required that twelve should agree—a majority—but never less than twelve. So, in the Court of the Lord High Steward of England, it was only required that a majority should decide, but that majority must not be less than twelve. The particular number appears to have been a mere matter of fancy, but in no case was it requisite that there should be a unanimous verdict of the jury. And the practice was similar in an inquiry into a case of lunacy. A jury in a case de lunatico inquirendo was composed of seventeen, but the concurrence of twelve only was necessary to find the fact that the man was non compos mentis. And next we see further that in cases of coroners' inquests, twelve was necessary to render a verdict, and the practice came at length to be to summon only twelve upon such juries; and thence, I suppose, was the origin of the jury of twelve. When twelve only were nominated, of course they must unanimously agree upon a verdict. But one of the most learned annotators has said, Mr. Chairman, that it is strange that any such unanimity should be required of twelve men, where their passions and education are different, as well in respect to their passing judgment upon rights between individuals as in regard to any other of the ordinary questions of life. In the determination of any other question of business, or otherwise, a majority is competent to determine either the right or the wrong of the question to be determined.

Another learned commentator says:—

"The unanimity of twelve men is so repugnant to all experience of human conduct, passions and understanding, that it could hardly in any age have been introduced into practice by a deliberate act of legislation."

With these comments upon the question, I hope, sir, that the motion of my colleague will not prevail, and that we will maintain and adhere to the plan of a three-fourths verdict of juries in civil cases.

The question was stated on Mr. Banks' amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I will withdraw my amendment so as to get a direct vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the vote upon that amendment would preclude any further amendment of that portion of the section.

Mr. BANKS. Undoubtedly so.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Fitch, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Inasmuch as this innovation prevails in the Convention, and inasmuch, too, as the learned gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan), has virtually attacked the principle that twelve men should constitute a jury; and, furthermore, inasmuch as it becomes our bounden duty to be as explicit as possible in expressing our meaning, and to leave no room for misconstruction, I move that this section be further amended by inserting after the words "unanimous verdict," the words "in such civil cases," so that the proviso will read:—

Provided, The Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, in such civil cases, notwithstanding this provision.

Mr. FITCH. There is no necessity for that amendment, I think.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well, I will withdraw it.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to move to amend that proviso by striking out the words "two-thirds," and inserting "a majority," so as to provide that the Legislature, by a majority vote, may require a unanimous verdict.

It may be that I am entirely wrong, and that this innovation in our jury system is entirely right. If that be the case, then of course the State Legislature will indorse the proposition and reject mine. But I think we should be willing to leave all those matters to the people, so far as possible. And if we provide here that the Legislature may abrogate this provision, we give the people an opportunity to express their judgment upon it. I am in favor of doing that whenever it can be done without inconvenience.

The question was taken on Mr. Fitch's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend, by inserting, after the words "civil cases," where they first occur, the words, "in all criminal cases where the offense amounts only to a misdemeanor."

My reason is this: as it stands at present, a

Wednesday.]

JOHNSON—NOURSE—EARL—DELONG.

[July 6.

person charged with a small offense, as assault and battery, for example, has no right to waive a jury, even though he may be willing to plead guilty to the offense. Therefore I offer the amendment with a view to expedite the administration of justice.

The question was taken, and on a division, the amendment was not agreed to—ayes, 9—noes, 14.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one matter here, in regard to which I desire to make a remark, and it is a matter which I discussed and thought of much in the previous Convention. This section seems to establish a different rule for the passage of a law than is contemplated in other parts of the Constitution, and I suggest whether it would not be well to have uniformity in that respect. The Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, may over-ride the veto of the Governor, and it occurs to me that this provision, allowing the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, to make the change, would differ with the general system adopted for the passage of laws by the Legislature.

Mr. NOURSE. If it is passed by a two-thirds vote originally, then of course, if it is vetoed, the Legislature will pass it again.

The CHAIRMAN. But it might happen that the bill would pass by a two-thirds vote, and then after it is vetoed it might not receive a two-third vote. The question is, then, under the language of the proviso, would the bill, notwithstanding, become a law? It seems to me that it will be better to give a definite meaning and construction to our labors, as we progress, so that if hereafter any question should arise, it may be determined by a reference to the reported Debates and Proceedings of the Convention.

Mr. EARL. I understand, from the reading of the section, that a two-thirds vote of the Legislature is all-sufficient to make the change.

Mr. DELONG. I think that the plain construction of the article is, that the bill shall be passed by two-thirds of the Legislature before it can become a law by the signature of the Governor, and then it must be signed by the Governor and returned in order to become a law. In any event, if the Governor should veto it and return it, although it is passed by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, it could not be contended that it became a law unless it was again passed by a two-thirds vote, over the Governor's veto. For instance—in order that I may be clearly understood—if it is passed by a majority vote, and approved by the Governor, it is not a law that would affect a change in the jury system. It must be passed, in the first place, by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, and then it is immaterial whether it is approved by the Governor or not, because if it is returned with his veto, the same vote can pass it again, and it becomes a law over his veto. That is my construction.

[Mr. CHAPIN in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. The construction which I was disposed to place on this provision—a little out of place, perhaps, when occupying the Chair—was intended to obviate any difficulty which might possibly arise hereafter, in view of differences of opinion in this body. Now, as I understand the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) he contends that such an enactment would require the approval of the Governor, or if not so approved, would need a two-third vote of the Legislature to pass it over his veto. And my other friend from Storey, (Mr. Earl,) seems to entertain a different opinion. It is for this reason that I now call the attention of the Convention to the subject. I want the language so framed that there can be no possible misconception as to what we do mean. Here are two diverse views, or constructions, given by members of this body—and to my mind, that fact is suggestive of the great need of changing the language of the section in such manner that our views may be harmonized, so that hereafter there may exist no misconception of our meaning. Now, sir, I differ entirely with the gentleman from Storey who last spoke to this question, in the construction he has given to this proviso. As a proposition of law, it must be conceded that it is competent for this body to lodge the law-making power solely in the Legislative branch of the Government; and if we possess this unlimited power, is it not most assuredly within the province of the Convention to confer on them a part of this authority? Most assuredly so.

Mr. DELONG. If the Chair will excuse the interruption, I will ask if this amendment will remove the doubt,—to insert after the word "Legislature," the words, "by a law passed;" so that the proviso will read:—

Provided, The Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision.

Mr. JOHNSON. Any words will do, that will render definite our meaning. If we require it to be done by an act requiring the same formalities that are observed in reference to other laws, then let us express it in such language as shall leave it certain. That is all I desire. I do not suppose it was the intention of the Convention to bestow the power solely on the Legislature. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Storey will obviate all difficulty. I have no objection to the section, as it is proposed. I know that the reasons urged, in the late Convention, for the incorporation of this proviso, were, that it might possibly be found, being but an experiment, unadvisable to retain the three-fourths verdict clause, and that power should be lodged somewhere, otherwise than in the general mode pointed out for amendments to the Constitution, to reinact the old rule of requiring a unanimous verdict. It was thought that the experiment might prove a failure, and if so, then the requisite two-thirds vote of the Legislature could be readily obtained to effect the change. Something has been said about a majority; but that having been voted down, I think it is not advisable to lodge the power with a mere majority of the Legislature to change a prominent feature in our Constitution.

Wednesday.] COLLINS—DELONG—BANKS—BROSNAN—PROCTOR—NOURSE—FITCH.

[July 6.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

The question was stated on Mr. DeLong's amendment, to insert the words, "by a law passed," and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to offer a mere verbal alteration. I move that between the words "jury," and "agree," be inserted, by way of amendment, the word "shall," so as to read, "if three-fourths of the jury shall agree upon the verdict." I think the propriety of the amendment will suggest itself to every mind.

The question was taken, and, on a division, the amendment was not agreed to,—ayes, 10—noes, 10.

Mr. DELONG. I move that the section, as now amended, be adopted.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.

Section 4 was read, as follows :—

Section 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.

Mr. COLLINS. I will, state that we have had before us an ordinance drawn by authority of the Enabling Act, which embodies the same general principles in regard to religious liberty and toleration. It appears to me to be entirely unnecessary, therefore, to incorporate this in the Constitution itself. I do not see that it will add any strength or force whatever to the Constitution, or to the principles set forth in this section.

Mr. DELONG. It shuts up the bars, though, against polygamy.

Mr. BANKS. It seems to me that wherever else this provision belongs, it ought certainly to be here, in the regular order of constitutional arrangement. That ordinance is something which we are not likely to be very familiar with in the examination of the Constitution, but as it seems to have been required separate and apart from the Constitution, it may be well to pass it separately, as an ordinance; but, at the same time, it seems to me very well to pass this provision in this section just as it is, in the regular order of arrangement.

Mr. BROSNAN. There is a further reason why it should be retained, and that is, there is a provision here in relation to the competency of witnesses, and also a prohibition of acts of licentiousness, etc., neither of which are provided for in the ordinance referred to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I do hope the section will pass as it is.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was adopted.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Section 5 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 5. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have an amendment to offer. I move to add to the section these words: "and then only by the Legislature, who shall be the judges of that necessity."

Several voices—"No, no!"

The PRESIDENT. The amendment is not seconded.

No other amendment being proposed, the question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was adopted.

Section 6 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 6. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor shall cruel nor unusual punishment be inflicted, nor shall witnesses be unreasonably detained.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 7 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties; unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

No amendment being proposed, the section was adopted.

THE GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

Section 8 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for capital or otherwise infamous crime, (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of the militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny, under the regulation of the Legislature,) except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and in any trial, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel, as in civil actions. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made or secured, except in cases of war, riot, fire, or great public peril, in which case compensation shall be afterwards made.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to inquire as to the effect of that first clause. It would seem that that might shut out the authority for binding over by a justice by a preliminary examination, and yet my recollection is that it is the wording of the Constitution of the United States. If so, it is all right.

Mr. DELONG. It is the language of the California Constitution.

Mr. NOURSE. I guess we can trust it, then.

Mr. FITCH. I would like to inquire in what portion of the Territory—I ask for information—we are likely to find men engaged in the "naval forces of the United States."

Several voices—"Carson river!" "King's Cañon!" "Humboldt Lake!" "Lake Tahoe!" [Laughter.]

Wednesday.]

FITCH—PROCTOR—DELONG—NOURSE—BANKS—JOHNSON.

[July 6.

Mr. FITCH. Oh! I did not know; I simply inquired for information. There might possibly be naval forces over in Humboldt or Lander, somewhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer the following as a substitute for Section 8:—

SEC. 8. All criminal offenses (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of the militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny and other offenses as may be regulated by the Legislature,) shall be tried upon written complaint or accusation to be made by the prosecuting attorney of the respective counties of this State, without the intervention of a Grand Jury, unless the Legislature shall otherwise provide. Laws shall be enacted to regulate the proceeding and to give effect to this provision. And in any trial in any court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel, as in civil actions. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made or secured.

That section embodies the substance mainly of the original section, with the exception of doing away with the grand jury system. Whilst innovations on the jury system seem to be the order of the day, and as it has been a question in my mind for many years whether grand juries should not be abolished, I have thought proper to introduce this amendment. I may state, from my own experience in regard to the jury system, that the burdens of taxation imposed upon counties in this Territory, and in California, have arisen mainly from the extraordinary manner of trying cases before a grand jury. It seems to me, therefore, that some amendment of that kind ought to be adopted, or that the experiment should be tried, at least, if we are disposed to change the jury system at all. For that reason I have submitted the amendment for the consideration of the Convention, but I do not propose to argue it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

SECURITY FOR PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to call attention to one thing in the last few lines of this section. It says:—

“Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made or secured, except in cases of war, riot, fire, or great public peril, in which case compensation shall be afterwards made.”

We can easily imagine a case where it is essentially necessary for the public good that private property should be taken for public use, and yet the party owning it might refuse to allow it to be taken; and in that case it strikes me there should be a sufficient guarantee of compensation, if it is taken. Would it not be proper to make use of the words “made, secured, or tendered,” instead of as it now stands, “made or secured?” I do not see how it could be “secured,” although I can see how it might be “tendered.” I will move to amend, so that it will read “made, secured, or tendered.”

Mr. NOURSE. I think the Constitution of the United States has that language.

Mr. DELONG. I do not think it has the word “secured.” The language of our Constitution is different from that of the Constitution of the United States in this respect. The Constitution of the United States reads: “Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation”—and stops there. This Constitution, going on from that point, reads, “having been first made or secured.” All that is additional to the language in the United States Constitution, and if we insist upon retaining that additional language, thus altering the sense of the clause, I would suggest that it would be better to use the language “having been first made, secured, or tendered,” so as to prevent any party from withholding the property until he obtains the security.

Mr. CHAPIN. I second that motion.

Mr. NOURSE. I think we had better amend it so as to make our Constitution, wherever we can, like a Constitution which has been already adjudicated authoritatively. I would like to strike out the words “having been made or secured,” altogether.

Mr. BANKS. I would object very much to that amendment, because it has been decided in California that the security must be made before the transfer, and we know how improvements have been kept back by that decision. I hope that the idea suggested by the gentleman from Yuba, or rather the gentleman from Virginia, [a laugh] will prevail, and that we shall adopt the words “made, secured, or tendered;” so that it will be held sufficient to either secure the compensation to a party, or to tender him compensation.

[Mr. COLLINS in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. We have already, in pursuance of the Enabling Act, adopted the Constitution of the United States. Now, the inquiry I am going to make is, whether it would not be an inconsistent act on our part to incorporate or to interpolate language in the Bill of Rights which is seemingly at variance with the language employed in the Constitution of the United States. If it imports anything more than the language contained in the Constitution of the United States, we have no right to place it there; if it means nothing more, then it is unnecessary. Therefore, my opinion is, that we should, in this relation, use simply the language contained in the Constitution of the United States. For that reason, I am adverse to the addition proposed by the amendment, and, even further, I am in favor of striking out the additional words already there, and leaving the language exactly as contained in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DELONG. I disagree with my friend,

Wednesday.]

DELONG—NOURSE—HAWLEY.

the President, in this. In passing that resolution adopting the Constitution of the United States, we did not adopt the Constitution of the United States as our Constitution. All we did by that act was simply this: we adopted it so far as to make it the paramount law of the land—so far as to signify our willingness that in case there should be anything in our Constitution which conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, then our Constitution shall yield, and the Constitution of the United States shall govern. But to say that we adopt it as our Constitution, would be incorrect. We have no right to adopt anything at all as our State Constitution, but only to prepare a Constitution to submit to the people. But that Constitution must not be at variance with the Constitution of the United States, which says that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation therefor. We can easily imagine a case, when in time of war or public peril, or even in time of peace, there may arise a necessity for the appropriation of private property for public purposes—a case which may happen unforeseen; as, for instance, the taking of building lots on the line of streets in a city, for the purpose of a public improvement, which would benefit not only the public, but even the owners themselves. The owners of such lots, conceiving that they had an advantage, might stubbornly refuse to sell without receiving an immense compensation, entirely inordinate in its amount. In such a case I think it would be a sufficient guarantee of the man's rights, if he would take such an advantage of the public necessities, to have the money—an amount sufficient to be a fair compensation—tendered to him. Then, if he refuses to accept the tender, what is the result? He brings his suit, or presents his bill for relief from the State, and the jury, or the Legislature, as the case may be, will assess and determine the value of the property, and if they find that he was tendered as much as it was worth, he will be obliged to take the money and pay all the costs; and if they find that the tender was too little, they will award him the additional amount, and the costs with it. I think there is more danger of an individual taking advantage of the Government when he has an opportunity, than of the Government taking advantage of an individual. I can see nothing in conflict with the language we propose to use, in the Constitution of the United States.

I think there is a case in Peters' Reports in which the same decision was made as has been made in California—that the compensation had to be made first, before the property could be taken. Now, if that is the case, how does it work? Why, public improvement is stopped—all work is stopped by some dog-in-the-manger, who cannot himself eat, and is bound not to let others eat if he can prevent it. He cannot eat the property, and he will not let the Government have it until they first make compensation. Now a tender is not compensation.

Perhaps the Government agents and the owner cannot agree, and they have to condemn the property under the right called "eminent domain," which exists in the Government—the right to condemn property for public use in case an individual refuses to sell or give possession of it.

We had an illustration of this subject in California, in the case of the grounds around the State Prison. Estell and the old managers of that concern had succeeded in selling to the Government a tract of land encircled within an area of land owned by themselves, which they had reserved from the sale. They then built the walls of the prison partly on the Government property and partly on their own, and having got what they wanted, what did they do but set to work and enjoin the Government, and they refused to allow a thing to be done till compensation was first made. A tender of a reasonable amount did not relieve the matter, and everything had to be held in abeyance, until finally the State was compelled to submit to all the exactions of those men. Not a thing could be done upon the work until such time as a jury could assess and award the damages and those men were satisfied. I should not like to see the State of Nevada get into such a fix as that, and I think that when a tender is made, if the party refuses to take it, the State should be allowed to go on and use the property the same as one man might that of another in certain cases. The party could then bring his action, if the case is that of a municipal corporation, or the like, or his claim before the Legislature for relief, if his property has been taken by the State, and then justice could be done.

Mr. NOURSE. It seems to me that the insertion of the word "tendered" will not remedy the fault which the gentleman seeks to remedy; if it is made to read, "made, secured, or tendered," then the question would be, what would be considered a good tender? Would it be sufficient to tender a certain amount for an unascertained debt? And if the tender is good before the amount is ascertained, then you could give security before the amount is ascertained. But my impression is that we cannot provide for giving security, nor for a tender, until the amount is ascertained to be tendered, or to be secured. I do not think we can improve the wording of the Constitution of the United States in this matter, upon which laws have been based, and upon which decisions have so often been rendered. I should rather trust to that wording than to make a new wording, and for that reason I am in favor of retaining the language as it is in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would merely remark, to use the language of common pleading, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong), is, to say the least, vague, unintelligible, and uncertain. For if we provide that no property shall be taken for public use unless just compensation has been first "made, tendered, or secured," we leave the question open as to who that tender is to be made by. That matter, I think, could more appropriately be attended to by the Legislature. The language proposed does not settle the question at all, and I think myself we could hardly employ any better language by which the Legislature is to be governed in this matter than that of the Constitution of the United States. Therefore, I hope that the words "having been first made or secured," will be stricken out, and I will move to add instead, these words:—

JOHNSON—NOURSE—BANKS—DELONG.

[July 6.]

And the Legislature of the State of Nevada, at its first regular session, shall prescribe the means by and the terms on which private property shall be taken for public use.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to hear that amendment again. If it covers the ground, I will accept it.

The SECRETARY read the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. From all I have heard, I am constrained still to entertain the same views which I have before presented to the Committee. Now, sir, I recognize the public necessity which exists, in many cases, for the taking of private property for public use. I know that instances of such necessity occur frequently in our Territory. But my objection goes further. As I before said, if this clause means more than the Constitution of the United States implies, we have no right to put it there. To us is not given the power of amending the Constitution of the United States; such is not the purpose for which we are convened. I repeat, that if the clause is meaningless, it is unnecessary to place it there. We ought not to cumber our fundamental law with meaningless and useless verbiage. My proposition is this, that if the Constitution of the United States does not give to the public authorities, municipal or State, the power of taking private property for their own use without first making compensation, then it is not competent for this Convention to interpolate words in the State Constitution which will give them the power of doing so by securing the payment of the valuation of such property. It is giving a judicial construction not intended. By interpolating these words in our Constitution, we assume authority which legitimately belongs to the judicial power. We have already declared that the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, and if it is paramount, as we have already enunciated, if it exceeds in jurisdictional power the Constitution we are proceeding to frame, then, unquestionably, whenever the question arises in the courts, they will have to give such construction as will conform with the Federal Constitution. If the Constitution of the United States conflicts with the Constitution of the State, the latter must yield. In that view I do conceive that the adoption of the amendment proposed, or of any of the amendments proposed, is entirely unnecessary and useless.

At some proper time, if no other member proposes the amendment, or if it is not already pending among the multifarious amendments now before the Committee, I will move to strike out that which follows the word "compensation," and leave the subject as we find it in the Constitution of the United States, thereby reserving it as a matter of judicial construction, as it undoubtedly must be, whatever words we may employ in this instrument. I hope all the amendments will be voted down, and that action will be taken by the Convention which will be consistent with its previous action,—that we shall do nothing which is obviously in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Hawley, and it was not agreed to.

The question was next taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish now to renew my motion to amend the section, by striking out the words, "having been first made or secured," and all thereafter; making the provision exactly like that in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BANKS. I am convinced that we are compelled to take that course, much as I might desire to insert the other words here incorporated. I am satisfied it will be better to avoid litigation, by adopting the language of the Constitution of the United States, which has been passed upon in the State of California, the decision there being to the effect that compensation must be made before the citizen can be divested of his property right. That is to say that A, B, C, and all the rest of the twenty-six letters, can each of them hold on to his property until the compensation is made. Now suppose we in this Constitution say that if compensation is secured, that is sufficient—will not there then be clearly a conflict between the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that of the United States? The latter would say that a citizen shall not be deprived of his property until a certain thing is done, and the former would say that he may be deprived of it, when something short of that thing is done. There will plainly be a conflict, and at the very least, the provision would be more injurious than beneficial.

Mr. DELONG. The Constitution is inoperative of itself, until there is legislation; it looks to legislation. If, under such a Constitutional clause, the Legislature goes on and says that private property may be taken legitimately for public use, on the tender or payment of compensation, all the Supreme Court has to do is, to examine and see whether there is a conflict or not between the legislative enactment and the Constitutional provision. I think there is not. And I think we would be placing a stumbling-block in our own way, if we were to say that a man should only be considered as compensated when the amount he demands is actually paid, although in many cases the party may refuse to take any price, except an exorbitant one, and so the wheels of progress must stop. I think we can reach such a case, and it is important to do so, if we can. I would like to see it remedied right here.

NOURSE—DELONG—BANKS.

[July 6.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and on a division, it was not agreed to,—ayes, 11; noes, 16.

No further amendment being proposed, the section was adopted.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND THE PRESS.

Section 9 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions and civil actions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted or exonerated; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to amend this section, by striking out that last clause—"and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." It strikes me as being the most absurd thing in the world, that twelve men, drawn from the different walks of life, should be empowered to determine nice questions of law. You might just as well set an attorney to mending a watch. By this absurd proposition, you take away the proper occupation of a Judge, and leave him merely to exercise the functions of a chairman of a town meeting.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

There being no further amendment, the section was adopted.

Section 10 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 10. The people shall have the right freely to assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

EQUAL PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

Section 11 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 11. The Legislature shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all persons.

Mr. DELONG. I ask some gentleman who understands this section, to explain it. It is entirely new to me, although I have compared this Constitution with the Constitution of California. Let us consider it a moment—

The Legislature shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all persons.

I want to know if, under that provision, the Legislature can pass a toll-road franchise, or authorize the construction of a bridge, by certain parties, and then pass an act prohibiting other parties from building a road or bridge a certain distance from them? I think they cannot, under this section, and the consequence would be, that you could have none of those improvements. A man would have no guarantee that the moment his bridge is built, or his road completed, another bridge or road will not be constructed, right by his side. The provision is entirely new to me, and I confess that I do not understand its object. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand that the object of the section is, to prevent such disgraceful proceedings as occurred in the last Legislature. (I hope, if there are any members of that body here, they will not take offence.) We then proceed to provide, by general laws, for the formation of corporations, and to establish the rights of corporations, instead of allowing the Legislature to grant special favors and valuable privileges to Tom, Dick, and Harry. I must say that I approve of the section. It may cut down the rights and privileges of the Legislature; I know it is open to that charge; but it is simply, as it seems to me, a prohibition of special legislation—that you shall not grant to John Smith and his associates, a charter to build a road here or there, but you may pass a general act, providing that persons who wish, may incorporate so and so, and thereupon, if you choose, may have the right of way across private property—may have the power to have it condemned to their own use by such course as may be prescribed by the Legislature; leaving the whole thing open to public competition, and not tied up to any right given specially, and irrevocably, to any favored corporation, like, for example, the Camden and Amboy Railroad in New Jersey. That is just such a monopoly as we desire to guard against here. I do not know as the section is drawn in the best manner, but I should be sorry to see our Constitution go out from our hands without some such clause contained in it.

Mr. BANKS. I should perfectly agree with the gentleman from Washoe, but for another, and more explicit section in this instrument, which is Section 20. of Article IV, in which are enumerated certain things, in relation to which the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws. It seems to be the intention to provide against this class of dangerous legislation in that section, and it occurs to me that if we adopt the section under consideration, we go too far, leaving it, perhaps, dangerously vague and indefinite. I think we had better leave this matter for Article IV, and in that, provide against just such things as we desire to exclude from special legislation. I hope the section will be stricken out.

Mr. DELONG. Section 1. of Article VIII, provides against the same class of laws which the gentleman speaks of. It says:—

The Legislature shall pass no special act in any manner relating to corporate powers, except for municipal

Wednesday.]

NOURSE—EARL—DELONG—BALL—JOHNSON.

[July 6.]

purposes, but corporations may be formed under general laws, and all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

Now I submit that there is not a man in this room that can tell what this section, which we are considering, means, to save him. It is a clause which cannot be found, word nor line, in the Constitution of California, and, I venture to say, in no other Constitution in the world. I do not know what it means. It says :—

The Legislature shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all persons.

I never knew or heard that they had passed any such acts, upon any such terms, except that when the franchise expired it should revert to the State. Those are the only terms I ever knew of. But this would seem to imply that franchises were to be bought, as they were in the days of Henry IV, when a valuable part of the State's rights was the sale of franchises.

Mr. NOURSE. I am willing to strike it out; I had not looked over those other clauses.

Mr. EARL. I think the section is designed to leave all these privileges and immunities equally open. For instance, if I desired to build a toll-road alongside of another, I have that privilege; or to place a ferry within a given distance of another ferry; or a store, if you please, alongside of another man's store. It is certainly a correct idea. We have seen in California the detriment of this special legislation. We there find that a ferry cannot be established within one mile of another ferry, nor a road within a certain distance of another road. Those things should be left equally open to competition, as we leave the competition of farm against farm, or merchant against merchant. We want roads, and bridges, and ferries, and we need not fear but that people will build them, if they are allowed to do so and there is a public necessity for them. No man will invest his capital unless he thinks it is going to be a good investment, and if there is already one good road made, he will not be so foolish as to build another alongside of it, and, if he does, the public will have the advantage of cheap tolls. I should regret very much to have the section stricken out. It seems to me clear in its meaning, and I think I can very readily understand it. It prohibits the Legislature from granting to one citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which are not equally open to all other citizens. That is, if one man is allowed to build a road or a bridge, another must be allowed to do the same. I, for one want to see that section retained.

Mr. NOURSE. I only want to say that while my ideas in regard to such a provision remain unchanged, still, in my opinion, it is better to place it in that part of the Constitution which limits the powers of the Legislature; though I do not think there is anything now in that article which covers the ground. I shall vote to strike it out here, with a view to inserting it in its proper place.

Mr. DELONG. We certainly do not want it in the Declaration of Rights.

Mr. BALL. If I recollect aright, this section was introduced in the old Convention at the time the Bill of Rights was reported, not knowing then what provision would be made in the subsequent articles of the Constitution. It was an inadvertence, I think, on the part of the Convention not to strike it out here, since it is provided for in other sections.

Mr. EARL. Now it strikes me that this provision is certainly in its proper place, among the declarations of rights. It is a right which I have, and you have, and every individual has, to make roads to travel on, or other improvements of a public nature. I think the provision is in the proper place, and if it is obnoxious in its form, let gentlemen amend it. Now is the proper time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I well remember the circumstances under which this section was introduced. It was offered by a very worthy gentleman, now no more, who found it, I believe, incorporated in the Constitution of Kansas, and thought there was some merit in it. I refer to Judge Ralston. He was one of a committee of which I had the honor to be Chairman, and the provision was the subject of considerable discussion in committee, and finally it was acceded to by the other members, in order to make the report unanimous. It was introduced, and it was deemed to have sufficient merit to receive the indorsement of the Convention at a time anterior to the action of the committee to which had been intrusted the subject matter of incorporations, and long before any action of the Convention on that subject matter. It will be found, I think, by referring to the article in relation to corporations, that there is matter sufficiently prohibitory in that article to guard against the evils which the gentleman has foreshadowed, even if we strike out the section now under consideration. The prohibitory matter which I refer to will be found in Section 1 of that Article, which I believe has already been read. It says:—

SEC. 1. The Legislature shall pass no special act in any manner relating to corporate powers, except for municipal purposes; but corporations may be formed under general laws; and all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

This section, coupled with the other provisions in Article IV, the guards and restrictions which are thrown around the Legislative Department, cover, I think, the entire ground. It may be said, perhaps, that I am anticipating the action of the Convention, in foreshadowing what may be their wish as to continuing those restrictions and guards which the old Convention deemed it necessary to incorporate in the Constitution; but, be that as it may, we have it in our power to retain those beneficial provisions relating to the Legislative Department, as well as that which I have read, contained in the Article on Corporations, and these, I am sure, will prevent all the evils of which gentlemen seem to be so apprehensive.

BROSNAN—EARL.

[July 6.]

Now, sir, I defy any two gentlemen upon the floor of this Convention to give constructions to this section under consideration which shall completely agree. I do not think any two gentlemen here can possibly agree in opinion as to what it means. I want nothing of that kind in our Constitution. I want nothing that is not susceptible of plain construction; nothing that is not to be comprehended by the most ordinary mind; and I am sure that the retention of this section will give rise to controversy and discussion to an extent which we cannot now anticipate, except that we can clearly foresee that it will be a troublesome question for the courts. All the restrictions necessary to guard against the evils of special legislation are found subsequently in this instrument, and if the Convention will do what accords with my judgment, they will retain those beneficial provisions, and thus avoid the evils apprehended from special legislation; but we might work a great injury and detriment to works of internal improvement, to railroad enterprises, if you please, if we should incorporate this section in our Constitution, coupled with that which is contained in the article in relation to corporations. The section in that article which I have read goes as far, I conceive, as any people in this progressive age ought to be willing to go in restricting the powers and operations of corporations. No power is given, but on the contrary, it is inhibited to the Legislature to grant special corporate powers, except for municipal purposes; but by general enactments, provisions for the formation of corporations may be placed upon the statute book, granting rights and privileges to one as well as to another. Under such enactments, all persons will have the privilege of availing themselves alike of those provisions of law. That, I conceive, is quite far enough for us to go. Certainly it is too far to go, to incorporate in this, our fundamental law, language in the construction of which no two gentlemen in the Convention can be found to agree. This uncertainty of construction of itself would be a sufficient reason to induce me to vote in favor of striking out the section.

Mr. BROSNAN. I regret very much that the state of my health will prevent me from saying anything in extenso upon this subject. I do not agree with some of the gentlemen who have spoken, certainly not with my friend who has just taken his seat, in regard to this section. In the first place, this subject is not provided for elsewhere as it is in the section before us. The section in relation to corporate powers which has been read, applies only to corporations, and this was inserted, I take it, ex industria, to prevent special legislation, or to prevent the passage of acts giving to individuals, powers and privileges individually, which they might exercise for a time themselves and afterwards transfer to associates, thus evading, if you please, that which is secured by the provisions of the article touching municipal and other corporations, as contained in Section 1, of that Article; and also the provisions in Section 20 of the Article on the legislative department. I think it would be well enough to retain those articles, but they do not cover the whole ground. In these, we should observe, are express cases, and the rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius, would apply. Inasmuch as a recital of acts prohibited is made, of course it is to be understood that acts not prohibited from special legislation in that recital are permitted. I think the intention is to guard against the formation of large monopolies like that which has grown up in California in connection with navigation, and it would make no difference whether the power were given to one man, or granted to a large corporation. In my opinion it does not harm the Constitution to have the section there, although I think the language does not, with sufficient clearness, express what is meant. If you strike out the words "class of citizens," I think it would be better. It would then provide that no one citizen should have privileges or immunities to which no other citizen is entitled. The provision, as I before remarked, was put there ex industria, to guard against special legislation.

Mr. EARL. I stand where I did before on this question, because I have seen the fruits of granting privileges to these great monopolies. It is true, there have been some isolated instances, where monopolies have been a benefit. Where a country is new, and the development of enterprises of a public nature is much needed, it may be unwise to have a clause of this kind enforced in all cases; but, certainly, I think the provision, as a general thing, is a wise one, and if gentlemen do not understand this language, they can amend it. Gentlemen say that the prohibition comes in hereafter, where the matter of special legislation is regulated, and I think there can be no objection to that, but this is among the rights which we wish to assert; and I, for one, want it to remain there, and hope it will not be stricken out.

The question was taken on the motion to strike out the section, and on a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 18; noes, not counted.

Mr. BROSNAN. I give notice, that when we get into Convention, I shall move to reinstate this section.

Section 12 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 12. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be maintained by this State in time of peace, and in time of war no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 13 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 13. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war except in the manner to be prescribed by law.

JOHNSON—NOURSE—EARL—BROSNAN.

[July 6.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 14 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 14. Representation shall be apportioned according to population.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 15 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 15. The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale for payment of any debts or liabilities hereafter contracted; and there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 16 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 16. No bill of attainder, ex-post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 17 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 17. Foreigners who are or who may hereafter become bona fide residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights, in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property, as native-born citizens.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

PROHIBITION OF SLAVERY.

Section 18 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 18. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crimes, shall ever be tolerated in this State.

Mr. JOHNSON. This, I believe, is the same language as is employed in the ordinance which we have adopted. I am in favor of the proposition; but is it not subject to the same objection which was raised against the section in relation to religious toleration? This section is, I think, in words identical with those embraced in the ordinance before the Convention, and I will call attention here to the language which there occurs, so that we may compare it with this section:—

That there shall be, in the said State of Nevada, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment for crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

This section reads:—

Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for punishment of crimes, shall ever be tolerated in this State.

It is only a transposition, and the verbiage is almost identical. I do not see the necessity of having the same matter in two distinct portions of the Constitution.

Mr. NOURSE. Does the gentleman refer to the ordinance proposed by Congress? I like the wording of that better than this section, and I move that the wording of that clause be substituted for this section—that is, the substance of it. I like the language better than this, a good deal. Then it will read:—

There shall be in this State, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit to the consideration of the Convention, whether the ordinance, although it is known by the name of an ordinance—being one of the terms and conditions under which we are authorized to form this Constitution—has not the same binding force and obligation as the Constitution itself? In other words, whether it does not become part and parcel of the Constitution when adopted?

Now, I think it will be found, by reference to the Constitution of Kansas, which State came in under the provisions of a law of Congress prescribing certain ordinances, that in the adoption of those ordinances they used language not materially differing from that which we find in this ordinance, and I believe it is not repeated in any other part of that Constitution. I submit, therefore, whether it is necessary, indeed, is it advisable for us to incorporate the same matter in the body of our Constitution which we have already adopted in an ordinance which becomes a part of the same Constitution? Now, I am in favor of the proposition which this section embodies, but I do not want it repeated. It is unnecessary so to do, since it has the same binding force in that ordinance as it would have if found in any other part of our fundamental law.

Mr. EARL. I may be wrong, it is true, but I understand that ordinance to be one thing, and our Constitution quite another. The Enabling Act provides how we are to get up a Constitution, and if we wish to prohibit slavery in our Constitution, I think it will do no hurt to have the prohibition in the instrument itself. Then, certainly, there can be no dispute about our having excluded slavery. It is true, we have adopted an ordinance to exclude slavery; but that only seems to anticipate a section of this kind in our Constitution, and I cannot see any harm in allowing the section to stand as it does.

Mr. BROSNAN. I call the attention of the Convention to Section 4 of the Enabling Act. It seems by that section that the ordinance cannot be revoked "without the consent of the United States and the people of said State" of Nevada. Now, this Constitution will undoubtedly provide for its own amendment, whenever it may be necessary to amend it, and unless we have retained this present section in some part of the Constitution, independent of the ordinance, we cannot well amend it. We cannot change the ordinance, but we might desire to put this prohibition in some different shape.

Mr. NOURSE. It is clear, to my mind, that the Enabling Act is not a part of the Constitution itself. It is simply to enable us to form a Constitution. It is a statement by the United States of the terms upon which we may go to work to form a Constitution. I should be exceedingly sorry, for one, to have a Constitution go forth from us which should be silent on this subject. I wish it to say something about it, at least.

Mr. DELONG. I agree with the gentleman; good things will bear repetition.

Mr. WARWICK. I wish to inquire whether the Enabling Act does not say to us that we shall engraft in our Constitution such a provision—whether it is not mandatory upon us to engraft in our Constitution this very provision, and in about the same form, substantially, as we see it here? Now, that Enabling Act, simply says, as I understand it, that the people of Nevada shall adopt such and such provisions, and we are about to adopt this as one of those provisions. It is in the right place, and therefore I would like to see it adopted just as it stands, without any amendment whatever.

Mr. BANKS. So would I.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and it was not agreed to.

No other amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 19 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 19. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons and things to be seized.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

TREASON.

Section 20 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 20. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies, or giving them aid and comfort.

Mr. DELONG. I will make a motion to amend that section. The Constitution of California has, in addition to what is provided in ours, this language:—

No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open Court.

The Constitution of the United States says:

Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open Court.

Now, whilst our Constitution defines what treason is, it does not, like the Constitution of the State of California, define how a person shall be convicted of treason. I think it would be safe to follow the rule adopted in California with perhaps one exception. It says there, that "no person shall be convicted, except on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act." I would like to leave out the words "to the same overt act," so that it would read: "No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses, or on confession in open Court." I will move to amend by adding those words. I never could see the object of requiring two witnesses to the same overt act. Under that provision a party might commit treason and escape punishment for a lifetime. There might be a thousand witnesses, each one of whom could testify to the commission of some one overt act of treason, but it requires that there shall be two witnesses to the same act.

Mr. FITCH. I hope the amendment will not prevail. Neither the Constitution of the United States nor that of California has been found equal to the emergency which has come upon the country during the last four years. I think we should leave it to the Legislature to decide what is and what is not necessary to constitute evidence sufficient to convict a man of the crime of treason. I am in favor of leaving it for the Legislature to define.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would like to ascertain why there is a necessity of two witnesses to prove a man guilty of treason, when one witness would be competent to prove him guilty of murder. If the gentleman will answer that, possibly I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. In case a question of that kind should come up in Court, what would be the effect, if the attorney should appeal to the Constitution of the United States, and read that to the jury? It would be rather a stumbling-block to anything in the way of conviction, I should think. That says that there shall be two witnesses to the same overt act, in order to convict of treason, and it will be a hard matter, in my opinion, for the Legislature to make a law which will repeal the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DELONG. One answer is this—that the clause requiring two witnesses to the same overt act, applies only to treason against the United States. Now upon what basis, or by what rule, would you say that a person should be, or might be convicted of treason against the State of Nevada, upon the testimony of one witness, when it requires two witnesses to convict him of treason against the United States, or against any other State in the Union, the same clause being in the Bill of Rights, in every other State in the Union?

The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) has asked me to give him my reasons for thinking that it should require two witnesses to convict a man of treason, while one is sufficient to convict him of murder. The only reason I can give him is simply this: that from the earliest time, down to the present, with the wise and good of every people and nation which have claimed civilization, the crime of treason has been ranked and considered as the most odious of all crimes which a man could be convicted of; and on account of its very odium, which, in all lands and nations prior to our own time, inflicted upon the subject the attainer of blood—for it was not only a conviction of the man convicted, but it attainted his blood, and the crime descended to his children, depriving them of the freedom of subjects, and the rights of citizenship—the laws have universally guarded, with special care, the rights and privileges of the person accused of such an odious crime. From the very circumstance of the crime of treason being so regarded, it has been deemed necessary to require extraordinary proofs, to secure a conviction of that crime. That has been the rule in all civilized nations, and it is in order that we may not be looked upon as adventurers and innovators in making such a change in regard to the rights and privileges of persons accused of so grave a crime, that I propose we should follow the beaten path which has been marked out, and recognized as proper and sufficient, by the wise men of every civilized nation.

DELONG—FITCH.

[July 6.

As my colleague, (Mr. Fitch,) has said, the laws have been found insufficient to punish the crime in the United States; but the reason is, that it requires two witnesses to the same overt act, before a conviction can be had. It is very seldom that a man can be convicted, where the evidence of more than one person is required to the same act, and that has been the great stumbling block in the way of convictions of treason. But had the clause read a little differently, I think there would have been no difficulty in convicting many of those villains and traitors, who, since this rebellion began, have been arrested, and released, for want of evidence. Now if we provide that they may be convicted by two witnesses, one of whom may have seen the party in one place committing an overt act, and the other in another place committing another overt act, there would be no difficulty in securing convictions. But from the fact that this is a crime which works not merely the attainder of blood, but works also the ruin of all concerned, pecuniarily and socially, as must be its effect if the crime is stamped upon them, as it will be, by public condemnation, after this war is passed, I think we should provide the additional safeguard of requiring two witnesses to convict of treason.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? What does he mean by an overt act?

Mr. DELONG. Well, sir, I will give the gentleman my understanding of it. It is an act committed in furtherance of the crime of treason.

Mr. FITCH. Does my colleague hold that a man can be tried and convicted of treason under this provision requiring two or more witnesses, unless each and every act, or the act constituting the crime of treason is proved?

Mr. DELONG. I do not understand the question, but I hold this: The Constitution says that no person shall be convicted of the crime of treason except upon the testimony of two or more witnesses to the same overt act, and I say that under an indictment framed in the courts of the United States for treason, you could not convict a man by proving by one witness that he committed an overt act of treason here, and by another witness that he committed an overt act of treason there. You would have to prove by two witnesses the commission of the same overt act. And this has been the stumbling-block in the courts of the United States, which has prevented convictions of treason. That is my answer. I say, if you adopt the amendment which I propose, a man may be indicted for treason before the State Courts, and tried, and if two witnesses come forward and testify, one that he has committed treason in one place, and the other that he has committed treason in another, he may be convicted. That is all I am laboring for; to remove this stumbling-block.

Mr. FITCH. *That is not my idea of an overt act; I understand that it is the crime charged itself; the act of treason.

Mr. DELONG. I will endeavor to define more clearly my idea of what constitutes an overt act; it may be that I have too much of the Fourth of July left in me to make myself clearly understood. [Laughter.] It has been said by some that perhaps the South would have been justified in their rebellion if they had waited for Mr. Lincoln to commit some "overt act" against the rights of the South. Now, what does that mean? It means some act violative of a right. In that sense, and in that sense only, is it used in the Constitution. Inasmuch as treason consists in levying war against the United States, or giving aid and comfort to its enemies, if you give aid and comfort, or levy war, or proceed to do either, you commit an overt act of treason. That is what I understand to be the meaning of the term "overt act." Now, a person may do both. A person may give aid and comfort to the enemies of the Republic, and he may, besides aiding and comforting them, himself rise in arms against the Government. And you may not be able to prove by but one person that he rose in arms, and by one person that he gave aid and comfort. And what I propose is, that upon the evidence of those two facts, established by two witnesses, he may be convicted of treason. That is what I am laboring for. Does my colleague understand me?

Mr. FITCH. Yes; but I think, though, that the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. DELONG. If the gentleman has got so that he understands me, I do not care what his opinions are.

Mr. FITCH. I may, perhaps, have a little of the Fourth of July left in me, too, inasmuch as I was not able readily to understand my colleague; but it seems to me that his conclusion bears about the same relation to his premises as did the wagon to the horse, in an illustration of a faulty argument made. I think, by Tom Hood—when the horse ran away and went down the hill, getting detached from the wagon—it don't follow. If a man is indicted for treason, for murder, or for any other offense, he can only be tried at one time for one offense charged. For instance, John Smith is indicted for the murder of Peter Jones and William Hopkins, but he can only be tried for the murder of one of them. So in cases of treason, the party can only be tried for the overt act which is charged in the indictment, and that overt act is, therefore, the offense with which he is charged at that time.

DELONG—FITCH—WARWICK—TCZER—NOURSE.

[July 6.

Mr. DELONG. Is not treason, like any other offense, a compound proceeding, made up of various acts, which may be alleged in an indictment? You may allege a felony, for example but you may prove more than one act constituting that felony. So you charge treason, and then you go on to prove the various acts, which taken together, constitute the crime of treason.

Mr. FITCH. No; for you cannot charge grand larceny and then go on to prove that the defendant stole one thing in one place and another thing in another place. So in case of indictment for treason, you must allege when and where the treasonable act was committed and the prisoner cannot be tried for more than one act.

Mr. WARWICK. On a trial for treason, would not the prosecution be allowed to prove circumstances other than those laid in the indictment? For instance, hurrahing for Jeff. Davis at another time? Would not the prosecution be allowed to prove any single fact which would go to show or to substantiate the main charge?

Mr. FITCH. The prosecution might be allowed to prove that, for the sake of proving the animus, or as a part of the res gestæ; but they could not be permitted to produce testimony to prove that the defendant hurrahed for Jeff. Davis in Virginia, when in the indictment it is alleged that he did it in Carson.

Mr. DELONG. Nobody pretends that.

Mr. FITCH. Well, my colleague is in favor of altering this section so as to read: "No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses, or on confession in open Court." Now, if he be convicted on the testimony of two witnesses of the overt act, then that overt act must be the crime with which he is charged, for you cannot try him on more than one charge at a time.

Mr. DELONG. The difference between us is, that I understand that a man is to be indicted for treason, and not for any overt act, as levying war or aiding and assisting the enemy who are levying war. If the indictment charges that, it must be alleged by a separate count—that in the Territory of Nevada, in 1864, or at some other given date, the act of treason was committed, by levying war against the Federal Government, or giving aid and comfort, etc., by which overt act the accused committed the crime of treason. When you charge that in your indictment, then you will be allowed to prove either one of the charges, which are overt acts in themselves—either that the prisoner levied war, that he conspired with others to do it, or that he gave aid and comfort to those who did do it. Those overt acts, or as many of them as are proved, are compounded in the one term of treason when they are proved.

Mr. FITCH. I do not think that such an indictment would hold water. I believe the indictment would have to be particular in stating that at such a time, and at such a place, the defendant committed an act which constituted the crime of treason, and it would be necessary to prove that particular act.

Mr. TOZER. I wish to call these gentlemen to order. I do not think that any long winded speeches in regard to the meaning of the term "overt act" will add one scintilla to the information of the Convention on the subject. I would like to see these long discussions brought to an end. Let us take a vote, and not spend our time listening to long harangues from those who seek to enlighten us, without effect.

Mr. NOURSE. At the risk of displeasing the gentleman from Storey who last spoke, I wish to say that the reason I think two witnesses are desirable in a case of treason is, that it is purely a political crime. It is more easy, perhaps, to indict a person and convict him of a conspiracy for treason in times of high political excitement than it should be. I know that now, as the saying is, the boot is on the other leg; but I have seen the time when the Administration funkies talked lustily about us, who would not acknowledge the Dred Scott decision, and turn in to catch runaway darkeys, and threatened us with indictments for treason and all that sort of thing. Those times have changed now, but they may come again. I do not think we should be carried away by our desire to convict those who have been guilty of treason, and I do think that in a case of treason there is more necessity for two witnesses than there is in a case of murder, where, of course, men's minds are not so likely to be influenced by political or any undue excitement.

Now, in regard to this amendment, why should those words be left out here—"to the same overt act?" It seems to me there is no good reason for it whatever. I am very sure, as a matter of law, that the gentleman from Storey farthest from me, (Mr. Fitch.) is correct. Certainly, I think that an indictment charging that a man is guilty of treason, without specifying the act which constitutes the treason, would not, as the gentleman says, "hold water." and, to use a rather common expression, you could drive a six-horse coach through it. I think that an indictment for treason must charge, as an indictment for perjury or any other felony must, the time, place and circumstance. It must charge some "overt act," in contradistinction from the old doctrine of constructive treason. That is what it goes upon. The word "overt" comes from "ouvert," which simply means "open." And in old times, those familiar with the history of the law will recollect the case wherein a man was indicted for treason for wishing that the horns of a stag were in the belly of the king. Now, it is in contradistinction from that kind of doctrine, which was the doctrine of Great Britain at that time, that this doctrine was settled upon, that there should be no constructive treason, so that one man could no readily charge another with a crime which was regarded as so infamous, at a time when there was so much disposition to pander to the ruling power—that is, to the king. It was provided in England, therefore, that there should be two witnesses to the same "overt act," which act must be alleged in the indictment to constitute treason, or else there could be no conviction. If we are to have any change at all, I should prefer that the section should be made to correspond with the provision on the same subject matter in the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California.

DELONG—FITCH—BANKS.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Because, as I understand him, he must have misunderstood me. He says that my understanding was that an indictment for treason, drawn without specifying where and when the offense was committed, would be valid. I did not state that. I stated only that such indictment might contain a statement of more than one thing constituting the crime of treason, as, for instance, both that the party had levied war, and that he had aided and abetted others in doing the same thing, and that the proof might establish the crime of treason, if consistent with the indictment, on either count. Then, I say, that there might be a witness to prove that the party aided others, and also another witness to prove that he himself waged war.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. DeLong, and on a division it was not agreed to—ayes, 10; noes, 16.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Mr. DELONG. I give notice that I shall insist on my amendment in the Convention.

Section 21 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 21. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Mr. FITCH. As we have now passed through the article, I move that the Committee now rise and report it back to the Convention, with a recommendation that it be passed.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights; had made some amendments thereto, and had instructed him to report the same back to the Convention, with a recommendation that the article be passed, with the amendments.

The report was accepted, and the article was placed on the general file for a third reading.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BANKS. I move that Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, be read a second time by title and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to, and the article was read a second time by title and referred accordingly.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion of Mr. BANKS, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) for the consideration of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:—

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States, (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

RESIDENCE OF VOTERS.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend Section 1 of this article by adding the following:—

"This section shall not be so construed as to permit the exercise of the right of suffrage on the ground that the person proposing to vote started to come to this State six months or more from the time at which he proposes to cast his vote."

The members of the Convention are aware that there has been a construction put upon this constitutional provision, as it exists in the Constitution of California, by which persons are admitted to the right to vote who started to come to that State, or to go somewhere, six months previous to the election, notwithstanding that they may not have been in the State more than three days. The practice of allowing such men to exercise the privilege of voting, I believe, grew out of a decision or construction placed upon this clause by the Attorney General of the State of California. I do not know that that construction has ever received any judicial sanction, but I do know that very great abuses have grown up under that construction of the law. I hope, therefore, that we shall debar persons from the privilege of voting in our State, unless they can show that they have actually resided within our borders for the length of time prescribed. At any rate, I hope we shall define it, so that the question shall not arise at every election. At the election last fall, I knew of persons who had crossed the plains recently, and were too conscientious to exercise the right of suffrage, although they were told they might do so, while at the same time, no doubt, there were many others less conscientious—whose consciences sat more loosely upon them—who did exercise the right of suffrage, claiming it under that construction given by an Attorney General of California. I think, therefore, that we should construe this provision so as to require persons to actually reside here for the length of time prescribed, before they are entitled to vote.

Mr. DELONG. A person must have a residence somewhere, I suppose, and it has been held, in all the States, that a person loses his residence immediately upon leaving the State. In the language of Chief Justice Marshall, a man cannot be made a human balloon, but he must be in some place all the time. Now, after a man leaves New York, he has not a right to exercise the right of franchise there, and I do not know where he should be permitted to exercise it, unless it is in the land to which he has emigrated. It strikes me that a person should not be disfranchised just for travelling from one place to another.

Mr. BANKS. Many persons leave a State, to go to some place or other, without having settled upon any place, in particular, to go to; and yet, because they happen to come here, and are landed on our shores, should we give them credit for residence for all the time since they left the State they came from?

Mr. DELONG. You must recollect that the party has to be sworn to the fact that he started at such a time with the bona fide intention of making this State his residence. If he is a man who would perjure himself, you cannot prevent him from doing so by a constitutional provision. He has to swear that he started within six months previous to the election, from the place of his former residence, with the bona fide intention of becoming a citizen here.

Mr. NOURSE. I cannot give my adhesion to such a mysterious doctrine as that. I think a man may lose his residence. If he chooses to make a caravan of himself, he does cease to be a citizen of the State he leaves, or of any State, though still a citizen of the United States. Here he is obliged to be thirty days in the district, and ten days, I suppose, before the election, in the precinct where he is to vote. Now he moves from Carson to Virginia within that time, and he has no right to vote in Virginia, although he has gone, bag and baggage, from Carson, and has no right to vote there. Should he be allowed to vote in Virginia, on the ground that he must vote somewhere? It seems to me it is very clear that a man may lose his right to vote, and that is one of the privations which a man must suffer, upon coming here, or upon travelling from any one place to any other. He must endure the deprivation of being denied the privilege of voting anywhere, until he gains a residence; and how a man can be said to have a right of residence, except by living in the State, passes my understanding.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the views taken by my friend and colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) certainly carry on their face a very great absurdity.

Mr. DELONG. Thank you.

Mr. COLLINS. I am glad the gentleman feels grateful. The idea that a man cannot lose his vote, is a monstrous absurdity, because men do lose their votes. Men, when they commit crime, lose their votes. In States where they have registry laws, if a man fails to "come to time" in getting his name registered, he will lose his vote. I might name a hundred cases, where a man may lose his right to vote, and it is the most absurd doctrine ever presented, that because a man starts from New York six months previously, though he may have spent all the intervening time on the passage, yet, on his arrival, he may claim six months residence here. What is the object of requiring this residence? Why, that the man may become acquainted with the usages, customs, and wants of the people. That is the reason; and unless he resides here long enough to fulfil that requirement, it is the purest absurdity to exact any residence, in any case. A man might come into the Territory and know nothing about its people, its condition, its resources, or its wants, and yet, under this doctrine, he would be entitled to vote. Therefore, the remarks of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) are just in place, and some provision should be made here, by which those men, who are less scrupulous than others, coming here from the Eastern States, shall be prevented from claiming, under this sweeping provision, the right to vote, while the better, or more conscientious class, are kept away from the polls, leaving them to be controlled by the less conscientious class of men. I do hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, or some modification of it at least, will be adopted. I think, however, that the insertion of those four or five lines may be avoided, by simply amending the clause as it already stands, so as to read something like this:—"who shall actually have resided in the State six months," or, "who shall have personally resided in the State six months." I will move the first as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. FRIZELL. It seems to me that the amendment would operate rather harshly upon a class of persons upon whom, certainly, we do not want to place any additional hardship. If we can readily give the right to vote at once to the overland emigrants who may settle in our State, I would rather be inclined to favor it. I will propose this amendment: to insert the word "actually" before "resided," so as to read, "who shall have actually resided in the State six months." I think the insertion of that one word is all-sufficient.

Mr. BANKS. It occurred to me to insert the word "actually" in that connection, and, if any qualifying word is to be inserted there, that is, no doubt, the word which should be selected; but upon reading it, it seems to me that the language is already so clear that there should be no possibility of misconstruction. How can a man reside in a State and not actually reside in it? How, by any possibility, the language could have been construed or understood as it has been construed, I cannot conceive. The language is, "who shall have resided in the State six months." Now, if I had been framing that section in the first instance, those are the very words I should wish to use. They seem to me perfectly plain and clear, and if we use the word "actually," I do not see that it strenght-ens the meaning at all. It seems to convey the same idea; and yet, as the language has been misconstrued, I think it desirable to place at the end of the words, language which shall be beyond the power of misconstruction. We must remember that it is not a question of literal meaning, but a question of construction. It is to avoid the difficulty arising from the possibility of misconstruction, and not on account of any want of appropriate words, that I add this proviso, so that the section shall be construed in a particular way—so that whatever the words actually mean, or whatever be their want of meaning, they must be construed so and so. I put it in that way in order that there may be no possible mistake as to our intention.

DELONG—FITCH—NOURSE.

Mr. DELONG. It seems that I am unsupported in my views by any member, and I should probably sink under the sarcasms of my colleague, (Mr. Collins), were it not that I am sustained by a greater man than either he or myself. I refer to the language of Chief Justice Story, of the Supreme Bench of the United States, and to that of the illustrious Marshall, to which I have often had occasion to refer, and more especially in the contested election case, so well known in California, of Doctor Duncombe, of Sacramento, where the whole question was fully and fairly considered. Justice Marshall, in the case cited, used that language, so preposterous to the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), that a man could not be a human balloon, but must be a citizen and resident of some place at all times. He is always a subject or citizen of some country. If the gentleman from Washoe thinks his view in that matter is right, I would ask him what he thinks would be the effect in the case of a draft, if a man had left Iowa six months ago? He is not, surely, a resident of Iowa; and if, in the meantime, a draft had been ordered, would he be subject to enrollment here and not there? If he owes allegiance and duty as a subject, in the sense of the word by which the subject and the alien are distinguished, he should be compelled to be enrolled and drafted in one place or the other; and if he is liable to be enrolled and drafted, why should he be deprived of the right of franchise? I think he should not, and I am surprised to hear my friend from Washoe taking a position which bears so severely upon this immigrant population when he claims himself to be one of that sort. [Laughter.] I am surprised at that. I think I have committed no offense whatever, when I have left California with the intention of becoming a resident of the State of Nevada; and I think most certainly, that I have committed no such offense in so doing as ought to deprive me of the right of the elective franchise. I am deprived of the privilege of voting there; why should I not vote here? Certainly I should have the right somewhere, because I am a native-born freeman, and citizen of the United States. I am a citizen over twenty-one years of age, and I am deprived of the privilege of voting by the common law which precludes me from voting anywhere but here. I think I should have the right, and gentlemen may insert "actually," or any other qualifying word, till they are blind, and yet, if we leave that clause to the examination of the Supreme Court, following the line of jurisprudence marked out by those greater lights which never will be dimmed, they will decide that a man is an actual resident here from the time he left home with a bona fide intention of taking up his residence here. They will decide that to be the construction, unless the provision suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) is incorporated. "Actually" makes no difference, but if you wish to carry out those views and say that a man shall have been living within the limits of the Territory for six months previous, then you will have to adopt the other words which have been suggested. Otherwise the courts will say, as it has been decided in California and elsewhere, that the man has been an actual resident here, because he has been a resident nowhere else, and therefore, so far as exercising all the privileges which the laws give him is concerned, he is actually a resident here.

Mr. FITCH. The learned authority of Story and Marshall may suffice to prove that a man is a citizen, but it seems to me that though a man may be a citizen, still he may not be a voter. A man may be a citizen, and, notwithstanding, lose the right of suffrage; and it is not contemplated by his section to say that he is not a citizen until he has been an actual resident here for six months.

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman from Storey, over the way, [Mr. DeLong] cites authorities with which I do not happen to be familiar. Chief Justice Story I do not know, but Chief Justice Marshall I have heard of. They claim that we must say that the party seeking to vote has actually "lived" in this State six months, in order to keep out this idea of constructive residence. Now, we do say "resided." Is there a distinction between "resided" and "lived?" If there is, it seems to me a distinction without a difference. I shall oppose the amendment for the simple reason that I do not like to attach to a clause of the Constitution other clauses explanatory of it. It seems to me that when we have put in the words "actually resided in the State six months," that means only one thing, and there can be no two constructions. The doctrine that a person who started from the East to come here has a right to date his residence here from the time he started is a doctrine of constructive residence, in contradistinction from the doctrine of actual residence which the amendment proposes to insert in the Constitution.

Mr. DELONG. The Supreme Court of California now so decided.

Mr. NOURSE. So much the worse for the Supreme Court of California. I thank God we are not in the way of being controlled by the decisions of the Supreme Court of California.

Wednesday.] FITCH—EARL—WARWICK—BROSNAN—NOURSE—DELONG—HAWLEY. [July 6.

Mr. FITCH. I think my colleague is mistaken; I think the question was never decided by the Supreme Court of California.

Mr. EARL. I hope we shall come to a vote, and let this discussion be ended.

Mr. WARWICK. Is it in order to offer an amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; there is an amendment now pending.

Mr. WARWICK. Will it be in order as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; we have ruled them all out.

Mr. WARWICK. Will it be in order after the amendment is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly, if it is of a proper character.

The SECRETARY read the amendment proposed by Mr. Collins, to insert the word "actually" before the word "resided."

Mr. EARL. I hope that amendment will be voted down, as I do not think it strengthens the language.

The question was taken on the amendment, and on a division it was agreed to—ayes, 18; noes not counted.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to offer a further amendment. I move to amend by inserting after the words "next preceding any election," the following:—

"Who shall have paid his State and Federal poll tax, and whose name shall have been registered in the district in which he is residing, by some person appointed by the County Commissioners, at least ten days previous to the election."

Now, sir, there are various reasons why this amendment should be adopted. In the first place, it would secure to the State its proper revenue; and, far above that, sir, it would assure the purity of the ballot-box. There is, probably, no law that can possibly be enacted that would do more to secure the rights of the people of the new State, which I hope is about to be born, than this amendment which I here propose, and which involves the adoption of a registry law. It is well known to those who have had experience in the State of California, that from the fraudulent manner in which elections have been conducted there, men have been inducted into office, in the election of whom the people—that is, a majority of the respectable portion of the people—have had scarcely any voice whatever. It has been the desire of all good men there, who have reflected on the subject, to secure in some manner the purity of that palladium of our liberties, the ballot-box, beyond all peradventure, if such a thing is possible to be done. We have looked on every side for some ark of security, and the only thing which I can think of for effecting that purpose is the amendment which I have suggested, namely, the registration of voters, at least ten days before the election, in the districts in which they reside.

Mr. BROSNAN. The gentleman will find the same thing provided for in Sec. 9 of this article.

Mr. WARWICK. I had not had an opportunity to examine this article; but, as I see it is provided for, I withdraw the amendment: and, as my friend here on my left, (Mr. DeLong,) suggests, I quietly subside. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to make one motion here, which I suppose will be voted down, but I will not occupy much time with it. I move to simply strike out the word "white," in the first line. I think it is pandering to an old and disgraceful prejudice—and none the less disgraceful. I will say, because I myself have partaken of it—against that race which is certainly doing grand work for the Union now. I suppose that here this is not in reality a practical question, and while I would not be in favor of the proposition in a population where there would be a great many of those ignorant people to turn loose at the polls, still I think here it is a mere theoretical matter. I offer the amendment, therefore, although I presume it will be voted down, simply because I think it my duty to do so.

The amendment was not seconded.

No further amendments being offered, the session was adjourned.

Mr. DELONG. As the time fixed for adjournment has nearly arrived, I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the subject referred to them, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave so sit again.

The report was received, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. FITCH. I move that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn to meet at seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. DELONG. We cannot do it; we have a standing rule to the contrary.

Mr. FITCH. Oh, we rescinded all our rules, and adopted Jefferson's Manual only.

Mr. DELONG. We only rescinded the rules of the Legislature, but the resolution fixing the hours of session was not rescinded, and that resolution, when adopted, became a standing rule of the House.

Mr. FITCH. Very well. Mr. President, I hereby give notice that to-morrow I will move to reconsider or rescind that resolution, so as to meet hereafter in the evening.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am informed that there is a young man in the house here, Master Ashim, who is studying phonography, and wishes to avail himself of facilities for practising the art here.

Thursday,] FITCH—DUNNE—TOZER—BANKS—PRESIDENT—DELONG—BROSNAN.

[July 7.

The PRESIDENT. I would suggest that there is another already here, Master Lewis.

Mr. FITCH. I do not suppose that any motion is necessary in regard to them; they can undoubtedly come in, and sit at the reporters' table with the others.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, at five o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

CARSON, July 7, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and twenty-nine members responded to their names; those who failed to respond being Messrs. Ball, Earl, Haines, Jones, McClinton, Morse, Parker, Sturtevant, Wellington, and Williams.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr Nims.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES.

Mr. DUNNE offered the following resolution, which was read and adopted:—

Resolved, That no member of this Convention be allowed to speak more than twice upon any question pending, without a two-thirds leave of the Convention, if objection be made, and not longer than fifteen minutes at any one time, without a like consent of the Convention.

COMMITTEE ON ENGROSSMENT.

Mr. TOZER. I move that a committee of three be appointed on engrossment, whose duty it shall be to see that these articles which are adopted, from time to time, in Committee of the Whole, be properly engrossed for the consideration of the Convention. If I understand the ruling of the President correctly, this business now goes on the general file, and if it is allowed to pass over for several days without further action, the minds of members of the Convention are likely to become somewhat oblivious as to the condition of the several articles as they are passed. They should, therefore, be engrossed from day to day, or from time to time, to see that they are correct, and to prevent any confusion which might otherwise arise towards the close of the session, or, when, at a subsequent time, we take these matters again into consideration.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to the appointment of such a committee at this time, but does the gentleman contemplate the engrossing of these articles before they are ordered engrossed by the Convention? They are still open to amendment, until the question is taken on ordering them to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDENT. I presume they will all be ordered engrossed, but the Convention may, from time to time, consider an article as having been engrossed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as such Committee on Engrossment, Messrs. Tozer, Frizell, and Crosman.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. FITCH. In accordance with notice given yesterday, I move that the vote be reconsidered by which the Convention adopted the rule in respect to the hours of meeting and adjournment, with a view to offering an amendment, as follows:—

Resolved, That hereafter, the Convention meet daily at nine, A. M. and adjourn at twelve, M.; that it meet again at one, P. M., and adjourn at five, P. M.; that it meet again at seven, P. M., and adjourn at such time thereafter as a majority of the members may determine.

Mr. DELONG raised a question of order, that the motion could not be entertained, because notice had not been given in writing, specifying the particular amendment to be made in the rules.

The PRESIDENT, after discussion, and frequent reference to Jefferson's Manual, sustained the point of order, but held that it would be in order to move to rescind the resolution referred to by Mr. Fitch.

Mr. FITCH moved to rescind the resolution.

Mr. DELONG raised another question of order on this motion, and the subject was further discussed at considerable length.

Mr. BROSNAN moved to lay the whole matter on the table.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and upon a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 14; noes, 13.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BROSNAN. I wish to make a motion for the appointment of a committee. I make it thus early, in order that, if the motion prevail, the committee it proposes to raise can be prepared to report as soon as the Convention shall reach, in its regular course, Article VI of this Constitution, entitled "Judicial Department." That article, in my judgment, will have to be materially changed, and perhaps it will be necessary to make copies of such report as the committee may agree upon, and have them ready for distribution among the members of the Convention. I therefore move that a committee of five be appointed by the President to report an article, or amendments to the article on the Judicial Department, and that the Committee be instructed to make their report by the time the Convention shall reach the consideration of that article in the regular course of proceeding.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the gentleman from Storey will so frame his resolution as to require the committee to report as soon as possible. If they can report before we reach that article, it will be an advantage to the Convention. For one, I should like the privilege of examining the report before it is to be acted upon.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have no objection to accepting any amendment to that effect.

Thursday,] BANKS—BROSNAN—NOURSE—DELONG—WARWICK—CHAPIN—KENNEDY. [July 7.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend the motion so as to instruct the committee to report "on or before" the time when Article VI shall be reached.

Mr. BROSNAN. Very well; I will accept that amendment, and in order that as many of the members of the bar here as practicable may have an opportunity to aid in preparing the report, and examining it before it reaches the Convention, I will further modify the motion so that the committee shall consist of seven members.

Mr. NOURSE. If the gentleman gets too many on the committee, I fear they will not be able to make rapid work.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's motion as modified, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as such Committee on the Judicial Department, Messrs. Brosnan, Nourse, DeLong, Collins, Dunne, Fitch, and Kennedy.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLMENT.

Mr. DELONG. I move the appointment of a committee of five on enrollment. Of course, after we shall have passed the various articles, everything will have to be enrolled properly.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as such Committee on Enrollment, Messrs. Hawley, Gibson, Hovey, Mason, and Lockwood.

THE RULES.

Mr. WARWICK. I offer the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the House of Representatives of the United States, as reported in Jefferson's Manual, be adopted for the government of this Convention."

Mr. FITCH. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table, and, upon a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 13; noes, 7.

Mr. NOURSE. I propose the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That the term 'Jefferson's Manual,' shall be deemed to include the Rules of the House of Representatives of the United States, included within the book published under that title, no less than that portion of said book compiled from English Parliamentary practice."

This is a mere question of interpretation. There is a difficulty as to what shall be deemed and taken to be Jefferson's Manual, so far as our resolution adopting it refers to it, and I offer this resolution for the purpose of clearing away all doubt on the matter, that we may avoid these long discussions.

Mr. DUNNE raised a question of order on the resolution, that a proposition to the same effect had once been voted down to-day, and could not be renewed on the same day.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move that the matter go upon the table, with the balance of the propositions on the same subject.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table, and, upon a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 17; noes, 7.

COMMITTEE ON STATE SEAL, ETC.

Mr. CHAPIN. It occurs to me that there is another matter requiring some little labor, upon which a committee might very well be appointed. I therefore move that a committee of seven be appointed on a State Seal and Coat of Arms, in order that we may have that subject in readiness when we get to it.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Subsequently the President appointed as such Committee on State Seal, etc., Messrs. Chapin, Warwick, Tagliabue, Earl, Wetherill, Folsom, and Hudson.

EVENING SESSIONS—AGAIN.

Mr. KENNEDY. I give notice, that, on tomorrow, I will move that the Convention hold evening sessions hereafter, commencing at seven o'clock.

Mr. DELONG. I move that that be laid on the table, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKS. I move that when this House adjourn, it adjourn to meet at seven o'clock, this evening.

Mr. DELONG. Now that is really out of all order. [Laughter.]

Mr. NOURSE. I understand that that would dispense with the afternoon session.

Mr. BANKS. Not at all; we take only a recess at noon, and do not adjourn till five o'clock, under our rule.

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is amending a Standing Rule by a simple motion. There is no parliamentary authority for that.

The PRESIDENT, after some discussion, overruled the point of order.

Mr. NOURSE moved to lay the motion of Mr. Banks on the table.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 11; noes, 15.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. Banks.

Mr. NOURSE. I would ask whether a certificate from this body to those gentlemen who are making these motions, testifying to their extraordinary diligence, and that they are extremely anxious to get through in a short time, would not answer every purpose.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to say a word in reply to the insinuation of the gentleman from Washoe. Now, sir, I have been opposed to all the motions made here for the purpose of cutting off debate, and I never in my life voted for the previous question. I do not wish to curtail the time allowed to any gentleman in speaking upon any proposition before us; let every gentleman have a reasonable opportunity to present his views. But I am anxious that we may get through speedily, and get home to our legitimate business, and to that end I am willing to work night and day. I do not see any reason why we should stand around the streets here, or spend our time in comparing views on general topics, as most of us perhaps will, unless we meet in the evening. I think we ought to attend to our duty during all the time we can possibly have, and by that means we can secure more thorough discussion, and, in consequence, a better Constitution.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman from Humboldt has discovered the thought in my own mind, and well expressed it. It occurs to me as being reasonable and proper that we should hold evening sessions. As a general thing large deliberative bodies are divided up into committees, and the consequence is, that the evenings must be devoted to the meetings of those committees; but here we have no committees, save two or three, which were appointed this morning; and the report of one of those committees is, I believe, already drafted. It becomes, therefore, a binding obligation upon us to hold evening sessions, and I hope the motion will prevail.

Mr. TOZER. The action of the Convention, on the first day — or rather, the second day, the first being Independence Day — has done away with most of the labor which usually and necessarily devolves upon a Convention of this kind. — I mean, the long and laborious work of framing and preparing a Constitution, every part of which shall be suited to all the other parts. That labor has been almost wholly done away with, by the action of the Convention in adopting the Constitution which was prepared, after great labor and long deliberation, by the former Convention. Nevertheless, the tedium, or the labor of going through with the work of this former Convention, section by section, carefully looking over and criticising each provision, necessarily devolves upon us, and that labor will, of course, take some time; but it can just as well be performed by lengthening out our sessions into the evenings, as not. For one, I am anxious to finish our labors, and get away as soon as possible, and therefore I hope the motion will prevail, and that we shall sit an hour or two, if not a longer time, every evening.

Mr. FITCH. I move the previous question.

Mr. CROSMAN. I wish to ask a question, for information as to the operation of this motion. It is, that when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet in the evening — I wish to know whether that will cut off the afternoon session.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I am opposed to evening sessions generally, but I observe a little notice in a Virginia paper here, which says that the Storey delegation are endeavoring to expedite matters, and rather intimating that the Ormsby delegation are opposing them in that laudable purpose. For that reason, I shall vote for the motion.

The PRESIDENT. This discussion is all out of order, the previous question having been moved and seconded.

Mr. DELONG raised a question of order, that the demand for the previous question had not been seconded.

The PRESIDENT, after some discussion, overruled the point of order.

The question was taken — "Shall the main question be now put?" — and, on a division, the vote was — ayes, 10; noes, 13.

So the demand for the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. DELONG raised a question of order, that the motion of Mr. Banks — that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn till seven o'clock, in the evening — could not be entertained, as such a motion could only be made for an adjournment to a particular day.

The PRESIDENT overruled the point of order, holding that though it might involve a change of the rules, there was nothing to prevent the motion from being made at any time.

Mr. NOURSE appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The point of order was discussed by Messrs. Nourse, Fitch, Collins, Warwick, and DeLong.

The question was taken, — "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?" — and the vote being in the affirmative, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. EARL. It seems to me that this lengthy discussion has all been upon a mere quibble. If we want to change the rule, we can do it, as the President has decided, by a majority vote; and why not offer a simple resolution to have night sessions, vote upon it, and then go to work.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection at all to the change proposed, but it occurs to me that there is some misapprehension in regard to the force of the rule concerning adjournments. It is necessary to have a previous resolution to fix the time of meeting after the adjournment, because, otherwise, when the hour for adjournment arrives, we should stand adjourned till the next day. If the gentleman from Storey desires to substitute the word "recess," for "adjourn," I have no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have consumed a great deal of time on this question without arriving at any definite result, and now, for the purpose of settling the matter, I propose this as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt: —

Resolved, That when the hour of five o'clock arrives, this Convention will take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. DELONG. It strikes me that that would be a broad-faced farce, after the decision of the Chair, which has just been sustained.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule the substitute out of order.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt, by adding the words, "and continue in session, day and night, without ceasing, until a Constitution shall be produced." [Laughter.]

Thursday,]

NOURSE—DELONG—TOZER—FITCH—CHAPIN—DUNNE—HAWLEY.

[July 7.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that out of order.

Mr. NOURSE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, for the purpose of stating the reason why I offered it, because I know it may look like a burlesque.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman can only state the grounds of his appeal.

Mr. NOURSE. My grounds are, that an amendment to a resolution is always in order, if it is respectful in its character, and refers to reason, and is reasonable. [Merriment.] Now I wish to state that I offered the amendment seriously. Why I oppose night sessions, and why I took part in the fillibustering which has been going on here, was not that I wished to exhaust the time, but I, for one, would be physically unable to endure night sessions. It is very exhausting labor in which we are engaged. It calls for the exercise of all the higher mental faculties. And I find myself, after seven hours of such mental and physical exertion, completely exhausted. That is the reason, and no other, why I oppose the resolution; not because I am not willing to work as hard as anybody, within reasonable bounds, but because I find that time is not gained, but rather is lost, by attempting to do too much, and working too many hours. Now having stated my reasons, I withdraw the appeal and my amendment also.

Mr. WARWICK. I move that the subject be indefinitely postponed.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, the motion was not agreed to—ayes, 11; noes, 15.

Mr. DELONG. I move that the resolution of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) be made the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. TOZER. I move that that motion be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WARWICK. I move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. FITCH. That would carry the whole subject to the table.

Mr. WARWICK. I call the gentleman to order; the motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table, and it was not agreed to.

The question was stated on Mr. Tozer's motion to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. BANKS. I hope that will be withdrawn. The effect will be, of course, to indefinitely postpone the whole matter, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do that.

Mr. TOZER. We have consumed nearly, if not quite a whole hour, on this matter, and if my motion to indefinitely postpone will have the effect of getting rid of the subject in some way, I shall be glad to see it carried.

The question was taken on the motion to indefinitely postpone, and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 9; noes, 14.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's motion to make the motion of Mr. Banks the special order for to-morrow, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. Banks' motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DELONG. I voted with the majority, and I give notice of a motion to reconsider. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAPIN. I trust that my colleague will be allowed to waste as much time as he pleases, now; we have consumed nearly two hours already, to-day, and accomplished scarcely anything.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is not in order; there is nothing before the Convention.

Mr. CHAPIN. I rise, not to a question of order, but to a question of business.

The PRESIDENT. Business does not seem to be before the Convention this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOZER. I rise to make a motion. It is, that my colleague on my left, (Mr. DeLong,) be furnished with a large copy of Jefferson's Manual and a small room adjacent to this, so that he can practice by himself. [Great laughter.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that we take up the general file, and dispose of Article I, which was reported from Committee of the Whole yesterday, and then go into Committee of the Whole on Article II.

Mr. DELONG. Is that the order of business—the general file?

The PRESIDENT. No; it is the last in the order of business. The order is the second reading and reference of resolutions, and under that we can refer any matters to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. Then if we go into Committee of the Whole, we should never reach the general file.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs me that the general file should have preceded the eighth order of business, and I think it would be better than to make it last, as has been done. If it is the desire of the Convention, the order of business can be changed.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to change the order of business, so that the general file shall be the eighth on the list.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

The PRESIDENT. Business on the general file is now in order, the question being on the engrossment of Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committees on Enrollment and Engrossment should be authorized to employ clerical labor, at so much per folio. I am under the impression that that course will be found to save expense, secure the performance of the labor, and be the most satisfactory to the Convention; but, no arrangements having yet been made, if that article is passed to engrossment, the committee will be at a standstill.

Thursday,] DE LONG—HAWLEY—WARWICK—TOZER—NOURSE—BROSNAN—CHAPIN. [July 7.

Mr. DE LONG. The Convention generally disagrees with me on questions of order. I know ; but I suggest that a bill is only engrossed before it is passed, and enrolled afterwards. The object of engrossing is to get it quite correct before we pass it, and then, after its passage, we enroll it.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is correct, but it may be considered engrossed.

Mr. BANKS. The question comes, without any motion, upon the engrossment of the Article.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Article be considered engrossed, and placed upon its third reading and final passage.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest whether, in view of the fact that certain amendments were made in the Article, it should not be actually engrossed before we pass it, and let the Engrossing Committee report upon it regularly. I think that is the best policy.

Mr. DE LONG. I hope it will be engrossed. Is the Convention willing to consider a confused lot of amendments, pasted on, interlined in pencil, and every way, as having been engrossed, and pass the article in that shape? Especially in so serious a matter as a fundamental law, the bill should certainly first be engrossed plainly, and compared by the regular committee. I know it is the practice some times in legislative bodies to consider bills engrossed, but I should certainly desire, in so important a matter, to have a committee examine and report upon it, before its final passage.

Mr. WARWICK. As we are now about organizing a State Government, I shall object, in every instance, to considering anything engrossed.

Mr. FITCH. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BANKS. Now I submit that the question is on the engrossment, without any motion.

The PRESIDENT. That is the question.

ENGROSSMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee will find themselves at a loss, and the Secretary of the Convention will find no one to whom he can hand the document to be engrossed, because no provision has been made for engrossing. I will make a motion that the Committee on Engrossment be authorized to employ clerical labor, at thirty cents per folio, for the purpose of having properly engrossed the Resolution Ordinance, Preamble, and Article I of the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. That motion cannot be entertained without a suspension of the order of business.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well ; I move that the rules be suspended, in order to get the motion before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. In order that the Convention may understand what has already been done, the Secretary will read that portion of the report of the Committee on Officers and Salaries, adopted on the second day of the session, which has reference to this subject.

The SECRETARY read, as follows :—

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention : Your Committee on Subordinate Officers and Compensation beg leave to report: That in view of a short session, they deem it advisable that an assistant Secretary be employed, and that enrolling and engrossing clerks be specially appointed, when they may be needed, at the close of the session.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

Mr. TOZER. I have prepared a resolution which, with the leave of the gentleman from Douglas, I will offer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

The SECRETARY read Mr. Tozer's resolution, as follows :—

Resolved, That the committees on Engrossment and Enrollment are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a clerk to each of said committees respectively, at a salary to be fixed by the said committees, and its payment to be provided for as the salaries of other officers and attaches of the Convention.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think that is the best way. I think the best way would be for the committees to employ the clerks as they find they need them. I do not fancy having clerks on salaries, who would be half the time idle. There is plenty who are idle now. Let them put the compensation at a reasonable figure, and employ no more than is necessary.

Mr. TOZER. Nothing can be more necessary than to employ clerical labor, to enable us to get through our business.

Mr. NOURSE. I oppose the appointment of a standing clerk for each committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the resolution be amended so as to authorize each committee to employ a clerk, at such price per folio as they may fix upon, to perform the necessary labor.

Mr. NOURSE. I suggest that it be made to read, that they procure such writing as is necessary to be done.

Mr. TOZER. I understand that some writing must be done every day, and the committees cannot very well run off, upon the spur of the moment, and find the man that will do the work cheapest. We must have somebody all the while, at two, three, four, or five dollars a day, or at so much a folio, to be here all the while, ready to do the work. The committees can make the compensation so much a folio.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe in employing competent clerks and paying them well. I will offer no amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move, as an amendment, to insert after "salary" the words "not to exceed ten cents a folio." He is a poor clerk who cannot write more than one hundred and fifty folios a day.

Mr. PROCTOR. But the enrolling, at least, must be done very nicely.

Mr. TOZER. I think the sum named is too small, altogether.

Mr. NOURSE. It appears to me that twenty cents a folio would be about right.

Mr. CHAPIN. The enrolling cannot be done

HAWLEY—CHAPIN—BANKS—TOZER—PRESIDENT—CROSMAN.

[July 7.

at any such price; it must be done with the greatest care and nicety. As for the engrossing, however, I do not see the necessity. Here we have made only slight amendments to Article I, and why not let the committee examine that and see that it is all correct, without engrossing it. If, in any case, there are extensive alterations, let them procure a clerk to do the work, and pay him what it is worth. I hope it will be left in the hands of the committees; in that way they can avoid a great deal of expense.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the lowest price paid here for any official copying is twenty-five cents per folio; it was formerly thirty-five cents.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am just informed, by the clerk of the former Convention, that the bill of the engrossing clerk last year was $580. And—I am glad to have from him an expression on the subject—he tells me that there is no necessity for that expense whatever. I am fully satisfied that the expense may be avoided if we leave the subject with the committee, after this expression of the sense of the Convention on the subject.

Mr. BANKS. I have seen so many serious errors committed in much less important matters than a State Constitution, that I am inclined to insist that we should have all these matters presented to us in a clear and connected form, as they only can be presented by an engrossment. Gentlemen will remember that in the last Convention there were engrossment and re-engrossment, but in this Convention I think there will be no such bill as five hundred dollars. In order that we may have our proceedings correctly filed away, in such a form that there can be no mistake about them, in view of the importance of the work we are engaged upon, I do insist that we go through with all the regular parliamentary practices and formalities, which are designed for securing safety. Let us have the whole Constitution engrossed, so that our engrossed and enrolled bills can all be filed away in such a condition as to leave no doubt in regard to what our action may have been. I know that when the late amendments to the Constitution of California were passed by the Legislature of 1862, there were some careless proceedings, the result of which was that it required the expenditure of a large amount of money in the employment of experts, and the sending off of committees, to find what the Legislature of 1862 had really done. And even to this day, I defy any person to determine, with any degree of certainty, just what that Legislature did enact, in regard to amending the Constitution of California. I hope that, in our desire to save a little by doing without engrossment, we shall not run upon any snag of that kind.

Mr. TOZER. I believe that the Engrossing Committee is entirely competent to take supervision of this matter, and see that the amendments made are all properly engrossed and correctly presented for the subsequent action of the Convention. I wish to avoid all unnecessary expense, but, at the same time, let us employ such clerical labor as may be required, at a fair, reasonable price—not an exorbitant price—whether it amounts to one, two, or five hundred dollars.

The PRESIDENT. At thirty cents per folio, the engrossing of the whole Constitution would amount to about six hundred dollars, but I presume the Committee would have the power to direct the engrossment of such parts only as may be amended.

Mr. CHAPIN. Yes, sir; we shall depend, mainly, on the enrolled copy, and examine that more critically.

Mr. BANKS. Suppose that is wrong?

Mr. CHAPIN. Then make it right.

Mr. BANKS. Why, Mr. President, it is passed, then; we want to examine it critically, while we have still power and opportunity to correct it.

Mr. CROSMAN. The proposition now before us leaves it all to the discretion of the committees, and I hope the Convention will leave it with them, and let them employ such clerical labor as they need. The presumption is that they will not employ more than is absolutely required. I call for the question on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to amend the resolution, by striking out the word "salary," and inserting the word "compensation."

Mr. TOZER. I accept the amendment.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, as modified, and it was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on ordering these several matters to be engrossed for a third reading—the Resolution, Ordinance, Preamble, and Article I of the Constitution.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suggest that they be read by title, and referred to the Committee on Engrossment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that they be arranged in the following order: The Preamble, the Resolution, the Ordinance, and the Article.

The PRESIDENT. That can be decided upon hereafter.

Mr. BANKS. It occurs to me that we had better settle the order now. I think our Enabling Act—I am not quite clear upon that point—requires that the first thing we do, after our organization, should be the adoption of that resolution which was proposed and passed on the first or second day of the session, and therefore I think that should come first, or before the preamble, and I will move that it have that position.

The PRESIDENT. I suppose, in the absence of instructions, the Committee on Engrossment could arrange it as they please.

Mr. BANKS. In order to settle any question of doubt, I will move, further, that the ordinance be placed next in the list, over the preamble.

Thursday,]

CHAPIN—PRESIDENT—HOVEY—DUNNE—WARWICK.

[July 7.]

Mr. CHAPIN. It occurs to me that we shall find it necessary many times before we get through to discuss this matter of arrangement, and I think it would be well now, or at some other time, to appoint a Committee on Arrangement.

Mr. BANKS. With that understanding, I am very willing to withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT. We found it necessary in the old Convention to appoint a committee on the phraseology and arrangement of the different sections, and they were arranged and re-arranged at different times. Parts of the Constitution, reported by a committee on one department, when they came to be acted upon, were sometimes discovered not to be in the proper place, and were therefore transferred to another department. The appointment of such a committee is doubtless the most feasible way of disposing of the matter.

The question was taken en masse (by general consent,) on ordering the Resolution, Ordinance, Preamble, and Article I, to be engrossed for a third reading, and decided in the affirmative.

Accordingly, the resolution adopting the Constitution of the United States, the ordinance concerning slavery and other matters, the preamble, and Article I of the Constitution, entitled Declaration of Rights, were severally read by title, ordered engrossed, and referred to the Committee on Engrossment.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. FITCH moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, for the further consideration of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Fitch in the chair,) and resumed consideration of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage.

The Committee proceeded to consider the Article by sections, commencing with Section 2, which had been reached when the Article was last under consideration in Committee.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF REBELS.

Section 2 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot, insane, or disloyal person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Mr. HOVEY. I offer the following as a substitute for the section:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no idiot, insane or disloyal person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend the substitute by striking out the words "or disloyal," in the last sentence, and inserting the word "or" before "insane," so that it will read:

And no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Mr. WARWICK. If I understand the drift of the substitute now offered, it is to strike out from the section as it now stands that portion which reads as follows:—

And no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARWICK. I would respectfully inquire of the gentleman who offers that substitute, the reason for desiring to confer the privilege of the elective franchise upon such as have borne arms in this rebellion, for the purpose of destroying the government under which we live. I would ask the gentleman if he is not willing to await the action of the General Government in this matter hereafter, by an act of amnesty, pardon, or otherwise, or if he is willing that those who have raised their hands in treason against that Government, and endeavored to destroy its life, shall participate in the elective franchise among us—that when they are no longer able to bear arms against the Government they may be permitted to strike at it covertly, through the ballot-box, in order to accomplish that destruction which they have been unable to effect with arms in their hands. I can see no good reason for the substitute proposed; the section suits me as it stands, and I hope it will be adopted without amendment.

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to a point of order. I believe the gentleman is speaking to the substitute, while the question is on the amendment offered by myself. That amendment leaves in the portion which he is arguing ought not to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking, I understand, to the whole subject matter which is before the Committee.

Mr. WARWICK. I am willing to give way till the gentleman from Humboldt explains his amendment.

Mr. DUNNE. By permission of the gentleman from Lander, then, I will say that my amendment simply strikes out the word "disloyal." The effect, as distinguished from the substitute of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) would be, that whereas the substitute would prevent all persons who have voluntarily borne arms from voting, unless an amnesty be granted, the striking out of the word "disloyal" alone, still leaving those words in, would allow those persons who may be pardoned under the amnesty proclamation, the right to vote; but it would, at the same time, prevent the man who has served as Colonel, or in any higher rank, in the army of the rebellion, (who are not included in the amnesty,) from voting, without the necessity, in order to preclude them, of their being convicted of treason. The fact of such men holding these positions would alone, under my amendment, prevent them from exercising the right of suffrage.

Mr. WARWICK. I oppose both the amendment and the substitute proposed. I can see no good reason why those who are now, or who have been, in the past, fighting with arms in their hands against the life of this Government, should be admitted to the privilege of the elective franchise in our new State. It is well known, sir, the thing is patent to every member here who has traveled this Territory, that it has been made the place of refuge for the scum and offscourings of the rebel States. Unable to bear arms longer against the Government, they have sought a refuge in our mountains and hills, and to-day many of them are scarcely able to restrain the treason with which they are filled to bursting in every pore. I have met them by the score in the county I have the honor to represent. Hundreds of rebels, open mouthed, are there, ready for any enterprise which is not too dangerous. Whole neighborhoods there, are infected with treason. Now, I ask if we are going to open the door to admit to the elective franchise men of that class, at the moment when we are forming a new State? For what reason are we to become a State? To add strength to, and not to weaken, the General Government. We are to be the first State of that chain of States which is hereafter to connect the Western borders of the Republic with the East. It is well known that our Territory is so large, and our population so sparse and so little organized, that this is the place sought out already as the home of rebels from Missouri, from Kentucky, from Alabama, and from all the rebel States of the South-west. Unable to find any longer a refuge at home, they have sought it here, bearing their treason along with them. For that reason I am for surrounding the ballot-box here with every possible safeguard which we can devise. I am willing, for our own safety, until the General Government shall grant an amnesty, at least, to say to every one of those men who have dared to raise their hands against the nation's life, "You have forfeited the right of suffrage, sacred to freemen, and never shall you exercise it again." For this reason I hope that this Section 2, as adopted by the former Convention, will be allowed to stand, line for line, and letter for letter, so that no disloyal man, no man tainted with treason, covered with the stain of rebellion, spotted with the leprosy of national murder, shall be allowed to share in the elective franchise with us who have battled to drive treason from our shores, and to save California, and Nevada, and Oregon, from the grasp of those who would have murdered the nation if they could. I sincerely trust that this section will stand unaltered, and that no amendment will be allowed to imperil it in the slightest degree.

Mr. HAWLEY. I conceive that the duty which this Convention has to perform, in reference to either the adoption of this section under consideration, or its amendment, is a difficult one.

Mr. HOVEY, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will give way a moment, I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) which cures the evil he anticipated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Even then, I say,—and I have but a few remarks to make—that the duty before the Convention, in either the adoption or the rejection of the section under consideration, is beset with difficulties. One principal objection to this Constitution, and to the article we have under consideration, when submitted to the people last fall for their adoption or rejection, was that it legislated too much. Now, sir, to come directly to the point, I submit to the Convention whether it becomes us to legislate upon this subject, when, in the very nature of things, such legislation can effect nothing at present. No provision of this kind can have any effect at the ensuing election. I, sir, was born and raised in the South, and have been subject all my life to the influences which have been brought to bear upon the young men of that section, and I assert that I believe no man exists who is freer from the taint of disloyalty to the Government of the United States than I am. And, sir, I am utterly, uncompromisingly opposed to the extension of the elective franchise to those men who nourish in their hearts one atom of hostility to the Constitution of the United States, or to the Federal Government, as it was established by our forefathers. But I nevertheless question very much whether the adoption of this section as it now stands will be of any benefit. I submit to the Convention that it is a matter which should be left entirely to the action of the first Legislature which is to convene under our State Constitution. One thing is certain, that if this section stands, (and I have no objection to allowing it to stand so far as the principles involved are concerned,) it can have no possible effect, however wise and judicious it may be, upon the status of the voters at the election at which the adoption or rejection of the Constitution is to be determined. Now, sir, you will find, by following through this section, that it is provided—and I trust that the Constitution we are about to frame may contain the same feature—that

"Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment by proper proofs of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as hereby established."

I trust that the first Legislature under this Constitution will provide such a registry law, and that in it they will provide not only that every man who seeks to vote shall have been

DELONG—HAWLEY—DUNNE.

six months a resident of the State, and thirty days a resident of the county, and that it shall be a duty incumbent upon him to have his name registered before the recurrence of every general election at which he seeks to exercise the right of the elective franchise, but that at the time of such registration, every man shall take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States; that there and then he shall perform a lustration by which he shall purge himself of any taint of treason, if any such taint remains upon him. Now, sir, the only question with me is, whether it is expedient to retain this language in the second section; whether it is not too much to place in a State Constitution; whether it is not better for us to leave the regulation of the qualifications of voters to an enactment to be made by the first Legislature.

I fully agree with the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) that there are men in this Territory who are tainted with the crime of treason; men who are hostile to the Constitution of their country and the institutions of our forefathers, men who, if their acts could be known and placed properly before the legal tribunals, would forfeit their lives to the outraged laws of their country. And, sir, I believe in hedging these men around, not only with legislative proscriptions, but, if necessary, with bayonets also; and I would so close up the hedge as to render it certain that they should be powerless to do harm. I have myself conversed with men born under the flag of our country, who stated that they considered themselves merely as aliens in our midst, and did not ask to be protected. All they asked, they said, was the same protection as was accorded to other foreigners. For such men I have only the most supreme contempt. I cannot but despise the man, born and reared under our government, who professes to sympathize with rebellion, and yet remains here with folded hands, or covertly seeks, while enjoying our protection, to overthrow our institutions. I believe the proper place for such men would be in the rebel ranks. I can have some respect for the man who, yielding to the impulses of the moment, or to the prejudices of years, goes into the rebel ranks and fights for what he believes to be the right; but for the man who remains here, and covertly seeks to inaugurate that state of affairs which exists at the East, I think no language of reprobation can be too severe, and no sentiments of contempt too strong. But the only question is, whether it is better for the Convention now to legislate, when it can have no practical effect, or whether it is better to give a full and free exposition of our sentiments here, and then leave it to the Legislature to provide the qualifications of voters.

MR. DELONG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Douglas a question. While I admire very much the sentiments he has expressed, as well as those of other gentlemen who have spoken on this subject, still I think there is one difficulty which has not been met, and that is, if the Constitution now makes a sweeping restriction that no disloyal person shall be allowed to vote, who is to judge upon the question of disloyalty? We find, even among good Union men, as we would all regard them, that one is accusing another of disloyalty, because he thinks he does not go far enough in his views or opinions. It looks to me a little unmanageable; that is my objection. Suppose a man is challenged at the polls, how are you to determine it? By his simply taking the oath of allegiance? Would that be sufficient to purge him? Or what?

MR. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Storey will remember that I stated it as my desire and hope that the Legislature would pass such a law as would render challenges at the polls unnecessary, except in order to insure the production of the certificate of the registration of voters.

MR. DELONG. Yes, it might, perhaps, be covered in that way.

MR. DUNNE. I think it is necessary to say but a word in support of the amendment which I have offered. No one doubts the propriety of preventing disloyal persons, or secessionists, from exercising the right of suffrage until their status be determined by the General Government, but this clause begins with disfranchising all who are convicted of treason or felony, and then goes on to say that "No person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted," etc., shall be entitled to vote. Then, in God's name, is not that enough? But then you go further, and say that no "disloyal person" shall be allowed to vote. I repeat the question, Who is the "disloyal person?" How are you to determine it? If you know that a man is disloyal—that, as the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) says, treason is bursting from every pore—then make your charge, prove it, and convict him, if you can. If you cannot prove the charge, you may retain your opinion, perhaps, but unless you can prove it, do not make it against a man, and attempt to deprive him of the right of suffrage. We have already restricted the class of people to which we supposed this would particularly refer. We have required that every man shall be for six months an actual resident of the State before voting. You have, in that case, made a sweeping distinction, and one which I did not approve, because it was in opposition to a principle which has been acted upon for seven or eight years in California, as long at least as it was supposed that the class of persons coming to that State would be politically favorable to the dominant party, and only when that ceased to be the case was this error discovered, and the rule changed. But that is not the question here. It is simply whether you may be allowed to charge a man with being disloyal, and so prevent him from voting, or throw the whole burden of the investigation upon the days of election, when you have no one to determine it. Although the man challenged may have the records of courts, and documents well authenticated, you have but to say—"This man is disloyal; I challenge his vote,"—and how is he to prove that he is loyal? He may be ready to swear to support the Constitution, ready to take any and all oaths prescribed, but that is of no avail, and you cannot try the case on election day. I think the amendment is right, and those dangerous words should be stricken out.

Thursday.]

NOURSE—EARL.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to offer an amendment to the substitute, or rather to the portion proposed to be omitted or stricken out. I move to strike out the words in the original section, "unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government."

The question was stated on the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. Now I desire to call the candid attention of members to this amendment, and I hope no feeling of prejudice of any kind will prevent gentlemen from giving it such attention. I think the objection to that phrase, as it is inserted in the original section, arises from a misapprehension of what is intended by this exclusive clause. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that we are here assuming the province of the National Government, to punish these men who have borne arms against it. If that were so, I could see a peculiar propriety in putting in this clause, "unless an amnesty be granted." But we are doing no such thing. That is the exclusive work of the General Government; and the laws of the United States provide for the punishment of treason; for the punishment of those who levy war and bear arms against the Government. And when the United States Government proclaims an amnesty, that punishment is at an end. We have nothing to do with that. But now the question is before us, whom will we have for our fellow electors? To whose hands will we intrust the election of our officers, and the making of our laws? Shall that trust be confided to those men whose hands are red with the blood of our own soldiers? Shall it be given to Price's army? Shall it be given to the men who, under Forrest and Chalmers, in cold blood, murdered the garrison of Fort Pillow? Shall we bestow that privilege upon the men who are now defending Richmond and Petersburg against the gallant assaults of General Grant? Shall we give it to the rebel army now holding out at Jackson against General Sherman? We exclude no man who does these things by compulsion. If a man is conscripted into the rebel army, that does not exclude him. But, can it be possible. I ask gentlemen to consider, that any merciful amnesty on the part of the General Government, any declaration that the Government will proceed no further in the way of punishment, will do anything more than merely whitewash them? Can it change the leopard's spots? Can it make worthy to be intrusted with the elective franchise, and fit to hold the highest offices in our gift, the men who have willingly borne arms against the Federal Government—against the best Government the world ever knew? Can it restore to innocence those men guilty of a worse crime than parricide? No! I say, for one, I am not willing that my vote shall be offset and neutralized by the vote of a man who has willingly served under the rebel Price, and as a guerrilla and bush-whacker has murdered perhaps dozens of the soldiers of the United States, as well as peaceable farmers. And yet, an amnesty being proclaimed, men of that stamp will come into our State. Now it seems to me very clear, as I said before, that that saving clause is put in under a misapprehension of what we are doing. We are not punishing these men. We are only setting down our deliberate opinions—and it seems to me, with all respect, that in the framing of an organic law is peculiarly the place for that—as to who should or who should not be the men to carry on the Government, and make the laws for this new State.

If those men who have committed all these crimes, and the one great crime embodies them all, can be purified in heart and soul, and brought back to love of country and true loyalty to its institutions, I would not object to admitting them to the right of suffrage. But the fact is, that the secessionists who have come here across the plains from the eastern States, are the men who, because of their continued wickedness and bitter disloyalty, will not stay around their old homes to see the new order of things there. It galls them to see the power of the Government re-established; the iron enters their souls. It is therefore the most disloyal of the disloyal who persist in coming here. If they persist, very well; let them come, though they are no very desirable accessions to society in any place; but, for God's sake, let us put up the bars against allowing thirty or forty of them to annul the votes of every member of this Convention. It seems to me that this clause, as it stands, has been misapprehended. Gentlemen have not enough considered it; and when it has been properly considered, I think the Convention will agree with me that it should be stricken out.

Mr. EARL. I can see no objection at all to allowing this Section 2 to remain as it is. If I understand it, the Amnesty Proclamations—for such, no doubt, there will be from time to time, and we have one already—will do away with our restriction. That proclamation already made sets forth who shall and who shall not be admitted to the rights and privileges of citizenship; and, in the absence of any such rule, by authority of the Federal Government, we prescribe our own rules. Now, sir, I cannot see any such objection as has been urged here, from the very fact that the Amnesty Proclamation does set forth and prescribe who shall be restored to citizenship. We may, hereafter, prescribe men who are disloyal, by our registry law, but that is the only way we can reach them. We can alter, change, increase, or diminish the force of the language we use here; but, after all, I do not see how that is going to affect the matter, since the General Government tells us who can and who cannot vote.

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Does he say that the Amnesty Proclamation applies to this new State, or to any State not now in rebellion?

Mr. EARL. It tells us, in effect, who is to vote, and in that way it cuts off any action of ours in relation to treason against the General Government. I understand that very well. This section suits me as it stands. I hope we shall adopt it, and if we want to alter the matter in any way, we can do it in the registry law.

Mr. CROSMAN. As it is time for the noon recess, I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair, The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the subject referred to them, had made some progress therein, and asked leave to sit again.

The report was received, and leave granted accordingly.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, at 12 o'clock, the Convention took a recess until 1 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at one o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

COMMITTEE ON PHRASEOLOGY AND ARRANGEMENT.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have a resolution here which I wish to offer, for the appointment of a committee, and I ask that the usual parliamentary courtesy, in respect to the appointment of the committee, be waived, as I cannot serve as the chairman of the committee.

The resolution was read, as follows:—

Resolved, That a Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement of the Resolution, Ordinance, Preamble, and Constitution, to consist of seven members of this Convention, be appointed by the President.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the Committee, under the resolution, Messrs. Kinkead, Parker, Banks, Brosnan, Belden, Brady, and Murdock.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. DELONG. I move that two more members be added to the Judiciary Committee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT appointed as such additional members, Messrs. Warwick and Hawley.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the further consideration of Article II, entitled, Right of Suffrage.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Fitch in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article II, entitled, Right of Suffrage.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF REBELS.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Committee is upon the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse to the amendment of Mr. Hovey to the second section. Mr. Hovey moves to amend, by striking out the words, "and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government." Mr. Nourse moves to amend that amendment, by striking out only the words, "unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government." The question now is upon the latter amendment.

Mr. TOZER. Is a further amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. BANKS. I understand there was an amendment offered by my colleague, (Mr. Dunne,) to strike out the word "disloyal."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was accepted by Mr. Hovey, and therefore becomes a part of his original amendment. The Chair should have so stated it.

Mr. WARWICK. Was not the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) accepted by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) as a substitute for his own, and not as an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it was accepted as an amendment.

Mr. WARWICK. Did it not do away with the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, entirely? Did he not accept it in lieu of his own, thereby doing away with the one he offered previously?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is correct.

Mr. WARWICK. Then the original amendment is withdrawn, and substituted by that of the gentleman from Humboldt, striking out the words "disloyal or," in the latter part of the section, and the amendment pending of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) is proposed as an amendment to that?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it would be infinitely better to retain the section as a whole, or, perhaps, striking out only the word "disloyal," than it would be to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe. I believe I take a position which cannot be controverted, when I assert that the Federal Government possesses the imprescriptible right of declaring the qualifications of citizens of the United States, and that when the Federal Government, by an enactment of Congress, declares that a man, or a class of men, are citizens of the United States, those men, so established in citizenship by Federal enactment, are entitled to all the rights of citizens; regulated, it is true, in a certain manner and to a certain extent, by State enactments. They are subjects or citizens of the Federal Government. Now, sir, it is a right of which a citizen cannot be divested, that he should be allowed to exercise the right of suffrage.

NOURSE—HAWLEY—COLLINS.

[July 7.

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Black men are citizens, and women are citizens of the United States, but does the gentleman say that women and black men cannot be excluded from voting?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not pretend to say that we cannot exclude black men from voting; or that we cannot exclude women from voting, but I do say, and I assert it most positively as my conviction, although I may be wrong, that we have no right whatever to exclude a white man, who has been pronounced by the Federal Government to be eligible to all the rights of citizenship, from the right of voting. There may be some questions, in this connection, which I shall not stop to argue, but I lay down the proposition that if the Federal Government declares that, under certain conditions, a man who has been in the Confederate army, a man who has borne arms against the Federal Government, becomes purged of the offense he has committed, and is restored to all the rights he before possessed, it will be impossible for this State to divest him of the elective franchise.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) laid particular stress on the fact that the vote of one of those parties—of a man who has been in arms against the Federal Government—can offset, or nullify his vote. That may be true, but I think when gentlemen take counsel from such suggestions, they are governed by a sentiment which is, to use the language of a great poet, “an impostor to true fear.” I believe, sir, taking into consideration the enlarged intelligence, the more perfect understanding of our rights and duties, and privileges, which we now possess, that but little danger exists of outrages, in the future, upon the ballot-box. I believe that the loyal sentiment of the Pacific Coast is so united, that the men who do not falter in their devotion to the National Government are so determined, that men coming here even with this stain of treason upon them, will be so closely watched, and that the elections will be canvassed so thoroughly, that but little danger exists of men being placed in office here who would follow the example of those who have become so infamous in our history, or who would even attempt to betray us, as States have been betrayed heretofore.

Even admitting that we have the right to exclude from the right of suffrage those men who have been restored to citizenship by the proclamation of the President, I believe that, by so doing, we should place ourselves in a position of antagonism to the Federal Government; that we should raise questions which, to say the least, it would be unwise to raise—questions which could but result in long, useless, expensive litigation. I believe it becomes us, as men who ought to know no such word as fear, in regard to the result of any attempt to betray our liberties here, to open the ballot-box freely to receive the votes of all men who comply with the laws. Our duty lies not in attempting to set aside any declaration of the Federal Government, but in a firm, resolved, fixed determination, to become, each and every one of us, canvassers, and to use all those legitimate and natural means of persuasion, argument, and entreaty, which will result in such Union majorities, at all elections to be held in the future, as to prevent forever all danger or apprehension of the election of any man, or any considerable number of men, at least, to positions in which they might be enabled to do us injury, or to attempt to injure or betray us.

And, if this section is to be retained in part, I think this Convention will be pursuing a wise and proper course by allowing it to remain altogether intact. I should prefer that the qualifications of voters should be left altogether to the Legislature; but if we are going to prescribe any qualifications, do not let us cut out or set aside this saving clause, for, by so doing, I think, as I before observed, that we are placing ourselves in a position of antagonism to the Federal Government, only to gratify an impulse, or a sentiment, which, to speak for myself at least, finds no place of lodgment in my breast.

Mr. COLLINS. I would inquire what question is now before the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) to strike out the words, “unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government.”

Mr. COLLINS. Then that question does not embrace the word “disloyal,” proposed previously to be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. COLLINS. I am decidedly opposed to striking out those words proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, because I think the application of that amendment would be decidedly unjust to a great many of the citizens of this State in the future. By implication, the gentleman, in offering his amendment, assents to the propriety of depriving all men of the right to vote who have voluntarily taken up arms against the Federal Government, or held office, military or civil, under the Confederate Government. We occupy the double position of citizens of the United States and citizens of a separate State, and hence I take issue with the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) entirely, that we have not a right to exclude any class of men from the elective franchise. It is the privilege of every State, as such, (and it matters not what the laws of the General Government may be in regard to her own citizens, for it is a right which the General Government always has accorded to the several States,) to regulate the elective franchise. And I should be very sorry indeed to think that the resolution we passed the other day, adopting the Constitution of the United States, was going to conflict with that right—that the Constitution of the United States would conflict in any way with the right of each State to make regulations, by its own Constitution or otherwise, in regard to elections. I take it that the force of that resolution was simply in regard to our recognizing the sovereignty of the United States, the sovereignty of the Federal Constitution, and the laws which Congress may enact from time to time affecting the States and Territories. But the action of the Federal Government must have some specific and direct connection with us, or some direct and positive declaration as to the act to be done by the State, before it can be binding upon us. Look at the injustice which the construction of the Amnesty Proclamation contended for would do to the loyal citizens of this State. We may, and probably shall have coming among us men from Kentucky, from Missouri, and from States which are still engaged in making war against the Government of the United States; and when this rebellion shall be put down, I am strongly impressed with the conviction that the mass of these men will overthrow Herod himself in their support of the Constitution of the United States. They will be the ardent supporters of every movement calculated to give strength to the Government, and will become the most active and determined of our loyal citizens. But if we proscribe them, as we should do by striking out this clause, what would be the consequence? Why, they are eligible to any office within the gift of the Government of the United States, and the very men whom we disfranchise here, the President of the United States may select to be Ministers at foreign courts. He may appoint these very men as Collectors of ports, as Postmasters, as Consuls, as Judges. They may be selected as jurors, to decide upon the rights, and the liberties even, of their fellow citizens. I am looking now at the injustice, at the inequality which would result if we should make this discrimination.

I remember that last year, when this section was under consideration, I was opposed to it to be made, and the last speech I made in that Convention, previous to my long illness, was in regard to this very subject. But I shall not enlarge further upon this point at present. I agree with the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) in thinking that this question of the elective franchise should be left to the Legislature. This special legislation on our part presupposes that we know more, and understand better the wants of the people in the future, than future Legislatures can, coming fresh from the people every year, knowing the wants of the people, knowing the exact condition of the State from time to time, knowing what the difficulties are to be met, and what forces are required to meet them. I say that such a supposition is not well founded, and I think it better becomes us, out of deference to the people of this State, to leave this matter of legislation entirely to them.

Mr. EARL. I probably was in error in the early part of the day, in relation to this section. I took the view, and it seems that the gentleman from Douglas [Mr. Hawley] takes the same view, that we have no right to override the acts of the General Government; but if this Convention considers it advisable to leave this section in full force as it stands here, I shall go against striking out the words proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Washoe [Mr. Nourse.] It seems to me that when we undertake to be rigid in our action, and to disfranchise a certain portion of our people, we should be very cautious how we do it. If the Convention shall decide that this article may properly be put in force in every particular, I trust we shall scrutinize it very closely before we pass it. It occurs to me that, as my colleague [Mr. Collins] has remarked, we should leave this matter to the Legislature, unconditionally. The truth is, that if we take the course which has been proposed and urged, that course will weigh very much against the adoption of the Constitution by the people. Would I, if I had at some time committed some treasonable act against the Government, vote for the adoption of a Constitution which would disfranchise myself? No, sir. Again, we cannot draw the distinction between those who have volunteered in the Southern army and those who have not. That would be impossible. Many young men, and even mere boys, have been conscripted into the armies of the Rebellion, and the effect of the action proposed would be that if they escape and come here they will find themselves disfranchised, and outlaws in every sense of the word. Would not the tendency be to convert them into desperadoes, and enemies of society? That would be a result which we should certainly deprecate and deplore. I believe that the strong should always be liberal, and I trust that if this section is to stand at all, those words will be retained. Then it will be shown conclusively that we leave those cases to be dealt with entirely by the General Government.

If I am wrong, I hope some gentleman will correct me; but I think, now, that this amnesty clause covers the whole ground and leaves the whole matter just where I want it to be left—with the General Government. Then we leave the Government to say who are citizens, and, consequently, voters, and who are not. That is the correct position. As to the disfranchising of each and every individual who may have been concerned in the rebellion, it is true that some of them ought to be disfranchised, but we cannot draw the necessary distinction as well as the General Government can, which will have to deal with them directly. It has been shown, or intimated, that only the worst of the rebel outlaws come to this country, but I cannot see it so. I believe that many are immigrating to this Territory now who have become tired of the war, and have come away from it on that account. Many of them have become convinced that it is wrong. Now, would it not be mistaken policy in us to adopt a sweeping provision to disfranchise them entirely? They may become good citizens, and therefore do not let us prevent them by cutting them off entirely from the privileges of citizenship.

JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON. This subject has already been very fully discussed, not only during the sittings of this Committee, but also by the newspaper press of this Territory, from the rostrum, and in the former Convention, charged with the performance of the duty of framing a Constitution to be submitted to the people. I do not propose to prolong that discussion, by putting forth my individual opinions, for the sake of any intrinsic merit they might be supposed to possess, but I simply desire, in a few words, to give my views on this subject, in order that my silence may not be construed as indicating a fear on my part to take part in the discussion, or to place myself on the record on the important questions involved. I shall beg the indulgence of gentleman, in the few remarks I have to offer on the subject before us, in order that those remarks, as is usual in Committee of the Whole, may be permitted to take a somewhat discursive range.

There are two amendments, I understand, before the Committee; one, that of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne), to strike out the word "disloyal," and the other, the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), to strike out so much as relates to an amnesty being granted by the Federal Government. Now, sir, in the outset, I will state what my position is, not only in regard to those two amendments, but regarding the whole subject—the reasons why I maintain that position—why, on the one hand, I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Humboldt, and, on the other hand, am opposed to that of the gentleman from Washoe. Various opinions have been advanced and advocated by members here as to the extent of the authority of this Convention to impose restrictions upon the right of voting. In that respect many gentlemen, I think, labor under a very great error. I insist that it is entirely within our province to declare who shall and who shall not vote for the various offices that will be created under this Constitution, notwithstanding any Amnesty Proclamation, or any action whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States. Yet, at the same time, whilst I disagree with gentlemen in the opinions which they have advanced, and believe that it is within our power to do this, I say that I cannot concur in the views expressed by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), when he maintained that we ought inexorably to exclude even those who have been or may be exempted from the penalties of the law by the operation of an Amnesty Proclamation.

And for the views and opinions I here express, so far as I am personally concerned, I am responsible only to the people who sent me here. I only enunciate the same views which I have on previous occasions expressed, in the former Convention and elsewhere, and after the expression of which I have had the honor to be indorsed by my constituents, and returned to this Convention, with a full knowledge of the views and sentiments I entertained on this, as well as other public questions.

Now, sir, I am decidedly in favor of the amendment to strike out the word "disloyal," as proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne). I am opposed to retaining the word "disloyal," and for this reason: it would place it in the power of every petty inspector or judge of elections throughout the State to determine and decide the question as to who is loyal and who is not loyal. I do not propose to invest them, nor to invest any other subordinate authority, with such extraordinary power. Why, sir, it might seem to be personal, and, therefore, perhaps not strictly in order, for me to say that I have heard ascribed to members of this Convention, (men who have received the indorsement of as loyal constitutencies as any of us have,) disloyal sentiments; but I will say that I have heard such sentiments ascribed in this Territory to gentlemen whom I believe to be as loyal as any man in this Convention. Such accusations, here or elsewhere, may have no real foundation, but would, in the hands of a petty tyrant, invested with the necessary authority to render effective the purposes of this clause, become an instrument of oppression, and a power most likely to be abused. This elective franchise is too great a boon and privilege to be put in that way upon the hazard of the caprice or whim of any such subordinate officer, clothed with extraordinary powers; and it is for that reason that I am opposed to this language, and in favor of striking it out.

As to the other proposition, I say I am not willing to go beyond the wisdom, the intelligence, the patriotism, and the loyalty which has thus far marked, and which I fondly hope will continue in the future to mark the administration of our Federal affairs, by Abraham Lincoln, the President of the United States. I am willing to be instructed in my action here, as a member of this body, by the same considerations of humanity, the same wise and enlightened policy, and, withal, unselfish patriotism, which, amid the most eventful and trying period of our nation's history, have marked the career of our Federal Executive; and I am willing that my vote and speech on this exciting question shall be tested by the platform of principles on which that distinguished man now stands, and that his official acts, in connection with this unholy rebellion, shall serve as my guide in the performance of my duties here.

It now appears as if, when this matter was under discussion in the preceding Convention, some gentlemen who were engaged in that discussion must have been imbued with the spirit of prophecy; for at that very time, while some of the members of that Convention were enunciating their views in favor of making an exception in behalf of such as should be granted an amnesty by the Federal Government—on that very day, I say, when those utterances were made, the President of the United States was engaged at Washington in the preparation of this same celebrated amnesty Proclamation, which was soon thereafter sent forth to the world. Now, sir, the position assumed on this subject by Abraham Lincoln, who, I hope, is the preferred presidential candidate of us all—assuredly is of all, save one—for I know that my friend from Nye, [Mr. Proctor.] is probably waiting for the unveiling of the mysteries of the Chicago Convention.—

Mr. PROCTOR, (in his seat.) Oh, no; Fremont.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, that is probably about as objectionable. With this one exception, I apprehend that there is no man in this Convention but stands fully upon the platform of the Baltimore Convention, and unreservedly supports its nominees. I am willing, for one, to place myself squarely on that platform, and now, and upon all future occasions, to labor for the success and defend the public acts of the nominees of that Convention. And I say I am not willing to go beyond that. I am willing to trust to the wisdom and patriotism of the Executive and of Congress, and to let them govern us in this matter of the elective franchise. For that reason, I am opposed to striking out that clause which has been proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Washoe. I am willing to embrace within the terms of our Constitution, so far as relates to the rights and privileges of citizenship, all those who may be embraced within the words and within the spirit of the Amnesty Proclamation, or any similar proclamation which may hereafter be promulgated, and I am desirous of excluding all who are not so embraced. I want it distinctly and emphatically understood, that I indorse the sentiments which the gentleman from Washoe has uttered, and the similar sentiments uttered by others, so far as they condemn those who have not purged themselves by the terms of the Amnesty Proclamation, those whose hands are yet dyed in the blood of our fellow citizens, those who have not come up fairly and squarely to the mark and purged themselves from this vile and terrible crime of treason. I am ready to say that such as they shall not be permitted to enjoy the benefits and privileges of the elective franchise. But I am not willing to go further than that in the manner proposed.

With these views, I am prepared to submit these questions to the action of the Convention, well assured that, whatever action the Convention may take in the matter, it will be such as to meet the approval and indorsement of our respective constituencies.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, once more to indulge in the hope that that word "disloyal" will be stricken out. I was anxious to have it stricken out in the last Convention, and I am still anxious to have it done. I think it is a dangerous word to have incorporated, in the manner it is, in that section, especially in our organic law. It does put too much power into the hands of those officers who have charge of the various election polls all over the State. And who knows how soon it may come to pass that our opponents may themselves be the gentlemen to preside over the ballot-boxes on election day? and then they might decide that I am a disloyal man, or that you are, or that any other member of this Convention is disloyal. In the heat and excitement of an election, many absurd and ridiculous things are done, and it would not be strange if one or two men could be found to come up to the polls and testify that a man had said or done certain disloyal things. I say, such a provision would operate very harshly, and I feel confident that great injustice and injury might result from a clause of that kind. I therefore hope that the word "disloyal" will be stricken out. In regard to the other amendment, I trust the section will be allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. KENNEDY. Like the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) I wish to explain my position. I, like him, am opposed to one of the amendments, and in favor of the other. But, unlike him, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, and opposed to the one offered by the gentleman from Humboldt. Like the gentleman from Ormsby, also, I say that my opinions are known by my constituents upon this question. In every precinct in our county, I have advocated those doctrines which I here advocate, and I also have been returned to this Convention.

Now, first in regard to striking out this part of the section, which reads, "unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government," I believe I may say, in few words, this: That where a man has voluntarily borne arms against the Federal Government, or held any civil or military office under the Confederate Government, that man has been imbued with the spirit of secession to such an extent that you never will be able to make a good citizen of him afterwards. I believe there is such a poison connected with that doctrine, that when a man once voluntarily embraces it he cannot be cured. I believe, further, that it will take generation after generation to root that poison out of the minds of those who have embraced it. For that reason I am opposed to allowing any man who has voluntarily adopted secession

NOURSE—JOHNSON—COLLINS.

[July 7.

as a good doctrine, to come into this new State and neutralize my vote.

I have known some of these gentlemen. We, in our county, know numbers of them, for those immigrants which have been spoken of, many of them, remain with us, and we are made to feel the practical effects of this poison. I know of men in my own town who have been in the military service of the Confederate Government, and have since taken the oath of allegiance prescribed by the United States Government; and I know, sir, that they are still secessionists, that they are plotting and scheming to injure the Federal Government. I know that they would do anything to kill this very Constitution we are framing, or that of any other loyal State. I have had a little experience with these men, for some of them are my friends, so far as other matters are concerned.

I know this measure which I am advocating will occasion some hardship in a few instances. There are cases, no doubt, where a man who has served the Confederate cause may become a good and loyal citizen. A man may, upon the spur of the moment, have been led to commit a crime, and he may have subsequently repented of it, but should we, for that reason alone, extend to him an offer of pardon? Does not the murderer, before his execution, frequently repent in sackcloth and ashes? But when the law is offended, the offender must pay the penalty. Now, then, if treason, if disloyalty of this character, is a greater crime than murder, and I contend that it is, for it embraces all the crimes known to the law, then why in this instance, though they sincerely repent, should we say that the penalty shall not be inflicted?

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this word "disloyal," unlike an old friend of ours who was in the last Convention, I am a little "tenacious," and I will give my reasons. I do not agree with the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), that it would place it in the power of any petty inspector, or judge of election, to decide upon this question of loyalty. I will state my idea of the object of that word in this section. In the first place, I take it, that to make these questions practical, the Legislature must pass the necessary laws; and I believe that if that word "disloyal" is left in the section where it is, the Legislature will prescribe a certain oath stronger, if possible, than the one we have all taken; and when you challenge a man at the polls on the ground of disloyalty, this oath will be administered to him, and when he takes it, he will have a right to vote. Then, if you can prove that he has perjured himself by taking that oath, he will be liable to a criminal prosecution for perjury. Now can you do more than that in regard to the other disabilities? Suppose a man has committed a felony in the State of California. He goes to the polls, and you challenge him on that ground. Suppose, even, that you have all the certified records, all the proofs which would be necessary to establish his guilt in a Court of justice, if you were to present them there; still, if the man swears that he has not been convicted of a felony, can the judges and inspectors examine your proofs and say that the man shall not vote? No, sir. If he demands it, they must administer the oath, and let him swear that he has not been convicted, and if he does that, then he has a right to vote, and your only remedy in such a case is to prosecute and convict him of perjury. For these reasons, I say that the word disloyal is right. When I see a man whom I believe to be disloyal coming up to the polls to nullify my vote, I tell him that he must take that oath.

And that thing, I will say, has been done in some of the extremely loyal towns in our Territory already, and I thank God for it, though, perhaps, it was not altogether legal. Now, I wish to make this a legal proceeding, and not a mere mob law, as I think it has been. If you compel a man to take this oath, and if he is willing to perjure his soul before God and man by taking a false oath, I do not know that we can help his voting, although we may punish his perjury afterwards.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to say a few words in relation to this matter. It seems to me there is a singular misapprehension, either on my part or on the part of other gentlemen, as regards the powers of the Government of the United States upon this matter of voting, or of defining who shall vote. I find no power whatever given in the Constitution of the United States to Congress to point out the class of men who shall be entitled to exercise the elective franchise. There is but one section in the whole Constitution where it is spoken of.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him. The gentleman from Washoe, when he speaks of those who entertain that singular misapprehension as to the powers of the Government, uses the term "gentlemen"—the plural form. For my part, I do not wish to be included, and from my recollection of the range which the discussion has already taken, I do not understand that there is more than one gentleman in this Convention who now asserts the proposition that it is competent for Congress to prescribe the rules of voting, or the qualifications of voters.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) also the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) who sits near the gentleman from Ormsby, as taking the same view.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman from Storey disclaims it entirely.

Mr. NOURSE. I am very glad to hear it. But some of those gentlemen did say that these men whom we propose to exclude from the exercise of the right of suffrage might become grand and petit jurors in the United States Courts, and occupy other positions under the authority of the United States. Now, I have to say that that cannot be, because the grand and petit juries are drawn in the same manner in the United States Courts as is practised in the Courts of the State where such United States Courts are held, and this Constitution provides that all persons who are required to sit on juries, whether grand or petit, shall be electors of the State. No man, therefore, who is not an elector of the State of Nevada can find a place in the Grand Jury room of the United States Courts in the State of Nevada, nor on juries in the State Courts either. So much for that. The United States do not assume to regulate the matter in any way whatever. The United States have no right to assume it; it has never been claimed by any Administration since our Government was formed. They leave both the matters of the qualifications of jurors and the elective franchise entirely to the State, or to the Government of the State, and while in one State it is provided that a man must be a citizen of the United States in order to vote; in another, the right to vote is given to such persons only as have resided in the State six months, as in the State of Illinois; and so on, through other electoral qualifications. These qualifications vary in different States.

Now, I wish to reply to a doctrine which seems to me to be a monstrous heresy, namely, that all citizens have the right to vote. Why, I can remember that there was once—though it seems to me more like a horrid dream than a reality—a decision of the Supreme Court that black men are not citizens, and that they have no rights which white men are bound to respect. But, at the present time, it is conceded that black men are citizens; they are so recognized everywhere; and yet we have struck them out from the list of voters, and they are excluded from the ballot-box even in California. We have excluded them from the franchise in our Constitution, and we find no difficulty on that score. Again, there is no doubt or question but that women are citizens, just as much as men are, and yet we do not allow women to vote, if we know it. So that question of citizenship in the United States has no bearing on this matter. It is for us to say whether, under the Constitution which we are framing, any man, or class of men, citizens of the United States, or not citizens of the United States, shall be allowed to vote. Under the Constitution of the United States, it is provided that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States;" and yet, who claims that a citizen of Massachusetts can go to South Carolina and vote there, merely because he is a citizen of Massachusetts? Now, as to what course we shall pursue, and as to following Abraham Lincoln, and all that, no man is inclined, I think, to support the Administration more fully and thoroughly than I am. I have had the honor of holding office under the Administration, and I feel grateful to it. And yet I do not feel that that binds me to approve of every act of the Administration, because I suppose our Administration may commit errors. But, aside from all that, I do not understand that the proclamation of the President gives any light in this matter upon the track which one gentleman wishes us to pursue. I understand the Amnesty Proclamation to take away the punishment which is due to those men who have rebelled—that whereas, before the proclamation, those men were all liable to be tried, convicted, and punished, for their treason, now the Amnesty Proclamation comes in and says that upon taking a certain oath they shall be relieved of all those disagreeable consequences of treason. But it does not say that those men may go to Massachusetts and vote. It does not pretend to lay down any rule of action for the States. It simply takes away the punishment for the crime of those men. If they remain in the States where they are, and there is no law, or constitutional provision, prohibiting them from voting there, then they will not be disqualified by their crime. They are not in danger of being disqualified by conviction, because of the proclamation, and they may vote. That is all there is of that. We are here left at perfect liberty to take that course which shall seem to us best, and I insist on coming to that issue without any clap-trap, or anything of the sort. Is it best for this young State to allow those men who have deliberately committed these crimes—and they must have done it willingly, under this provision—to have a voice in making our laws and choosing our officers?

Some gentlemen seem to be tender-footed on that issue. They seem to fear that we shall lose votes by this proposition. We have to submit this Constitution to a constituency, among whom are some such men as have been referred to, who have the right of voting upon it, and they therefore do not want to raise that issue.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do think, in view of this objection, that the political condition of things here in Nevada must be most unhealthy. What do we see? With the exception of one organization, the Union party, we find that we have here open and avowed rebels and secessionists of every shade and hue. They are crawling into our caucuses, crawling into our conventions, and taking part in our deliberations. Instead of having a square stand-up fight over principles, they get the advantage of us by cunning. Cunning copperheads get into our political organizations, under our own banner, and there they manage to defeat the real end and object of Union men. I say that is unhealthy. I say, with all deference, of course, that nothing could be better for this new State, than that the issue should be plainly drawn between unconditional Union men and rebel sympathizers.

Now, I ask gentlemen, in all sincerity, to answer to themselves—I do not ask for an answer here, but at any future time—this question. My acquaintance with this class, personally, is not large, though I have heard of many rebels being among us, but I would like to have gen-men say to themselves whether they know a single man that has served in the armies of the rebels, and has got out here at last safely away from danger, that is a good Union man? There may be one, two, three, or a dozen, possibly, here in town, but is there one such out of town? The Convention has already decided—it is said here, in our first article—that "All men are by nature free and equal." We do not mean equal politically or socially, of course. We do not mean to say that all men must weigh one hundred and fifty pounds each; and we have said that blacks are not equal to whites. Now that we have changed the Ethiopian's skin, I ask if we will go the whole figure and say that the leopard can change his spots? Have not we gone quite as far on that tack as we can go? Is it possible that the large population which has come to us from the rebel armies—and more to follow, if this provision is left in the article before us—will be good, reliable Union men? They may take as many oaths as you have a mind to impose, but the reptile snake is in them still, and whenever the opportunity is given, the poison will be struck into the heart of our system of government again and again. It is because I have no faith in the taking of oaths, by rebels, to change their dispositions, and it is because I do not believe that Abraham Lincoln's pardon will purge them from their wickedness, that I go for this amendment. It is purely because I believe that this provision, allowing rebels to vote, will prove a misfortune to the State, the effects of which we do not know, and shall not know till the mischief is done, that I desire to have this clause excluded.

Mr. DELONG. The gentlemen who have addressed the Convention on that side which is supported by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) seem to consider the effects of the Amnesty Proclamation in a light entirely different from what I do. It is true, the proclamation only relates to the consequences of crime, and only relieves those who have been guilty of treason, from punishment. But I submit, that when a man is convicted of larceny, or robbery, or murder, or manslaughter, or any other felony, the punishment of which is imprisonment, and one of the consequences of which is that he is disfranchised, unless relieved by the pardoning power; when that power does intervene, it operates exactly like this proclamation of amnesty. It relieves him from the consequences of the crime, and in thus relieving him, it restores the offender entirely to his former position. It is very disagreeable, no doubt, to gentlemen—it is to me, at all events—to see a notorious thief, who has served in the penitentiary, and been pardoned only a few days before the election, perhaps, come up to the polls, and checkmate my influence, by casting a vote in opposition to mine. It seems to be all wrong, as in the case of the rebel, who comes up and nullifies your vote under this Amnesty Proclamation. But in the former case, the wisdom of that policy has not been doubted. It is the law of every State, and, I believe, of every civilized country on the face of the globe, that among the consequences of a pardon, is a restoration to all the rights which the person pardoned possessed before the conviction. Now if the Amnesty Proclamation intervenes, and says to those who have been shedding our brothers' blood on a thousand battle-fields, that their crimes are pardoned, and they are restored to the rights of citizens, and if the power that issues that proclamation is paramount, how can we say that they are not restored to those rights? How can we say that notwithstanding that proclamation, notwithstanding the law of Congress, here in our midst, with the Constitution of the United States adopted over us, with the proclamation of amnesty supposed to be made in accordance with the Constitution by the head of the Government, we shall assert the negative of what the President proclaims in that proclamation? I do not see how we can legally do it. And I believe that anything in our Constitution contrary to what is provided in that proclamation, would have to give way to it—that any Court would determine that that Amnesty Proclamation has the effect of restoring the party affected by it to all the rights which he enjoyed before he became engaged in the rebellion.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does he contend that we have not the right, in this Constitution, to fix the qualifications of voters, notwithstanding the Amnesty Proclamation? Could not we shut out any class of men we saw fit?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir. I say we have a clause in the Federal Constitution which guarantees to the citizen of each State "all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States," and if we embraced in our Constitution a clause providing that any man who is born in Louisiana shall be prohibited from voting here, it would be not only wrong, but unconstitutional. It would be violative of the spirit of the Constitution and the laws of the Federal Government.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman state that proposition again.

Mr. DELONG. I say that I believe that if we should embrace in this Constitution a clause saying that a man born in Louisiana, or in the State of Maine, or any other State, shall not be entitled to exercise the right of an elector here, it would be unconstitutional. And that shows that we have no right to discriminate in this way.

Mr. BANKS. I will ask the gentleman, since in some States negroes have a right to vote, and we have provided that they shall have no such right here, whether he does not think the same rule would apply to that provision?

Mr. DELONG. We in effect deny, by the adoption of the first section, that the negro is a citizen.

Mr. NOURSE. If that be so, why do we say

Thursday.]

DE LONG.

[July 7.]

"every white male citizen," showing that some citizens are excluded?

Mr. DeLONG. I do not know the reason for using that language, but I will suggest that it was probably employed in order to leave no doubt on the subject, because there is a very considerable and respectable number of gentlemen who claim that the negro is a citizen, differing from others in their opinion on that subject, and consequently the word "white" may have been put in so that, even if the negro is a citizen, not being a white man, he is still not entitled to vote.

But I do not care about discussing that point. I say that whether we have the right to exclude those who were included by the amnesty proclamation or not, we should be governed by that policy which prevails in every civilized land, under which, when a man is pardoned by the pardoning power, it is held to be a fair presumption that he was pardoned for good and sufficient reasons, and that the executive, in granting the pardon, has done that which restores him to citizenship. That is my view. We consider that the Governor has good reasons for his action, when he pardons a man from the penitentiary, and restores him to citizenship, although he may have been convicted of an infamous crime, and we do not allow ourselves to doubt but that he has a right to vote; I never have heard it doubted in any legislative body, or any convention, or elsewhere, that in such a case all the original rights of citizenship, including the elective franchise, are restored to him, as purely as if they had never been contaminated.

Now, I look upon the future, in regard to this war, a little differently from my friend from Lyon. (Mr. Kennedy.) As I look upon it, the war is now being conducted by southern men more from a feeling of pride for their section, than from any attachment to their so-called Confederacy. I believe that nine-tenths of the men who are serving in the army of Jefferson Davis, to-day, if brought right down to a fair and candid exposition of their views, would say that they disbelieve in the doctrine of secession, and if they were pressed as to the reason why they were fighting in the secession army, they would say they were doing it for the honor of their section, or the honor of their particular State. They inaugurated this war under a fearful misapprehension. They inaugurated it under the mistaken idea, first, that the northern man would not fight, and next, under the equally mistaken idea, that northern men would not expend their money to conduct the war. They went into the war laboring under these two fearful mistakes, and after having got into it, their inborn American spirit prompts them to fight it out, right or wrong, and they intend to fight it through, just from that spirit of pride alone; and after the war is through, you will find that they will return to their allegiance in good faith. And, on the same principle that a burned child dreads the fire, will they dread re-billion, and repudiate it more than any other class of men, when once they have so returned to their allegiance in good faith.

I have but little confidence in the oaths of allegiance or in the unionism of southern men who have recently taken these oaths, and proclaimed their unionism so loudly, especially as long as any hope of the success of the rebellion exists. These men have been so long proclaiming the doctrine of secession, asserting the successes of the Confederate troops, doubting the reports of Union victories, and receiving with unquestioning faith the reports of Southern successes, that I am compelled to doubt all their professions of loyalty and unionism. I do not believe a word of it. I do not, to use a common vulgarism, "go one cent on" their unionism and loyalty, whoever or wherever they are. But I say, while we are engaged in making, not a legislative enactment, but a law for all time, a Constitution, which we hope is to endure, perhaps for centuries, we should be very careful how we word our legislation. After this war shall have been ended, and it shall have become a settled conviction that those who were engaged in it have returned in good faith to their allegiance, our Legislature may desire to overlook the past, and allow them again to stand among us as equals; for, if we do not take that course, we may never expect one of them, or their children, ever to be loyal again. We shall have thrown down the gauntlet, challenging them to continue their hostility to the government, and they will continue it. A feeling of hatred, a feeling that they are being subjected to persecution, will animate them. They will feel that we have put them down among the negroes and Chinamen, and refused to give them a chance to be good citizens again, on equal terms with ourselves, if they would be. I say, our adoption of that policy would strike like iron to the heart of every proud-spirited southern man in the Territory. They would say, and they would be right in it, that though they may have intended to become good citizens, yet they could not do it, because we have an odious provision of the Constitution standing there against them, and impending over their heads for all time to come. There is no encouragement for the evil-doer to repent. I would like to see the amendment defeated, and then I would like to see this whole section so remodeled as to leave out this proscriptive feature altogether, leaving the section to read in this manner:—

Sec. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no idiot or insane person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

I would not like to have that word "disloyal" left in as a constitutional provision. Then, after amending the section so as to read in that way, I would put in a provision that the Legislature may, from time to time, fix the qualifications of voters. I would be willing even to strike out all these other provisions—to strike out "idiots" and "insane persons," if you please; and then, if we fear any evil results from permitting the elective franchise to disloyal men, we can arm the Legislature with power to prevent them from voting, until such time as in the wisdom of the future it may be determined that those men shall be allowed again to come into the fold as equals. But I cannot see any wisdom in tying up the Legislature forever in this respect, if we wish to reclaim these men and restore them to their former position of brothers.

KENNEDY—DELONG—EARL.

I have as much cause as any man to feel irate and revengeful towards the Southern rebellion. I have met with my losses at its hands, and have as much reason to feel indignant and outraged in regard to it as any other man. But while I sit in this Convention, I will not forget my duties to the future on account of my passions concerning the present. I say I wish to see this Constitution so modeled that no man convicted of crime, or who is idiotic or insane, shall be allowed to vote in the present or in the future, and then I would leave the rest in the hands of the Legislature. If, when this war is over, we allow those who have been disloyal to share with us in the right of suffrage, and in all the rights of citizenship, as our equals, they may, and probably will become loyal citizens, or else the whole doctrine of the Christian religion is a mistake. The argument of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy,) would be that this crime is of such a nature that no man can repent of the sin he has committed, and return to allegiance and loyalty.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is not my idea at all. I said they could not escape the penalty, and that is in accordance with the Christian doctrine, which asserts that Christ had to suffer the penalty for the sins of others, in order that they might themselves escape from suffering.

Mr. DELONG. I was attempting to state only what I conceived to be the purport of the gentleman's argument—that he did not believe that those men who had willingly and actively participated in this rebellion were, or ever could become, truly loyal, and that he believed for generations hereafter their descendants would be imbued with this same spirit of disloyalty and hatred towards our Government. For my part, I look forward to no such state of affairs. I believe that this war will convince those men that there is inherent within our system of republican government, such immense power to enforce its own laws and protect its existence, that they will be compelled now and forever hereafter to respect it. I believe that they were led into disrespect towards our Government from a mistaken idea of its power, and that they are now convinced of their mistake, and, in my opinion, there would not to-day be left a corporal's guard of secessionists in the United States of America if they could only escape from the consequences of their rebellion and be restored to the same civil rights which they formerly enjoyed. I believe that they have become convinced of those two fatal mistakes which led them into the war—first, that the Northern men will fight; and, second, that they will expend their money, as long as they have got a cent of money or of credit, or a machine with which to make paper, in order to get the means to put down this rebellion and sustain the Government.

If they had only known these two things before the rebellion, the knowledge of which has cost them so dearly, there never would have been an organized rebellion in our Union. These mistakes are what underlaid the whole of it, and they are willing now to get out of it in any way they can, with the loss of everything but honor. That is my opinion, and I do insist, on behalf of men who I know are not secessionists at heart, men who do desire to return to their allegiance, men who do desire to become good citizens, and to retrieve their past errors, that we shall not cast such men aside, and throw a shadow over their names, so that they may not hope, for long years to come, to stand fairly before their fellow men on the score of loyalty. I hope we shall not compel any man to remain disloyal. I desire that, if they will come in as good citizens, under that Amnesty Proclamation, and demean themselves properly, they shall not be reduced to a condition of vassalage, but shall be received as equals. But if this provision stands, they are branded and stigmatized, just as long as they are living and breathing men. I do not see why we should consider ourselves more wise or more patriotic than all who are to come after us, and should, therefore, refuse to allow the Legislature to determine who shall and who shall not exercise the elective franchise, so long as we take the pains to say that they shall not admit to the rights of suffrage any man who has been convicted of treason or felony, or who is insane or idiotic. And I do not see what benefit the Amnesty Proclamation would be to any white man, possessing the soul, and spirit, and pride of a white man, if by that proclamation he is to be merely relieved from the punishment inflicted upon the traitor, but not restored to any of the rights which belong to white men. I do not believe that that is the spirit of the proclamation, or that that is its intention. I believe it is intended to act like the pardon of the Governor of a State extended to a culprit in the penitentiary, restoring him to all his former civil rights. And if we had the power to run counter to the spirit of that proclamation, I do not think we ought to do it, but we should rather act in accordance and in harmony with the spirit of those who are high in power, administering the affairs of the nation.

Mr. EARL. I shall not, upon this question, detain the Convention long. I am glad to see that there is a spirit of liberality manifested here. I feared at one time that this proposition would be defeated, but I now feel that the way is clear again. I ask if it would not savor somewhat of State Rights doctrine if we here, in the face and eyes of the Government, stand up and say that the Government has done wrong in extending its amnesty to those men who have been engaged in rebellion. I think, for my part, it would savor strongly of State Rights. It would be one of those extremes which we ought to avoid.

Now, sir, in regard to the disfranchisement of those people, we have but to look at other nations. If you look at the history of Scotland, what do you find? They have become a thoroughly loyal people to the British Government, because, after they were practically subjugated, they were not borne down by the power of Great Britain, but were treated as equals. On the other hand, look at Ireland. As long as her people have left the spirit of men within them they will be constantly endeavoring to revolutionize, and the time may come when they will succeed. And why? Because they are and have been down-trodden by the British Government, just as the people of the South would be if we attempted to tread them under foot. Those people, so long as they had a spark of manhood in them, would resent it. I hope, if the section remains at all, that the Convention will not strike out the words proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Washoe, which would disfranchise them in every way. I would prefer to leave the whole matter to the Legislature, believing they would be better judges than we as to who should be admitted, from time to time, to the privilege of the elective franchise.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hold that all acts of the Legislature which can have no practical effect, are worse than superfluous. Now, sir, I submit to the gentlemen who have advocated the striking out of this paragraph which has led to so long a debate, what method can be adopted by the authorities to discriminate between those parties who have borne arms, and held civil and military offices under the Confederate Government, and John Smith, or John Jones, or any other individual? Is the State of Nevada to send Commissioners to the Confederate capital, to demand of Jeff. Davis's Adjutant General an inspection of the muster rolls of the Confederate army? Are we to send Commissioners to the several so-called Confederate States, and to demand of their respective Secretaries of State that our Commissioners be allowed to examine the commissions of all their several officers? The enactment, if it is an enactment, must, in the nature of things, prove inoperative. It would be a work of Herculean difficulty to achieve any results under an enactment of this kind, providing that the classes of men specified therein shall be deprived of the elective franchise. For that reason, if for no other, I think, with all respect to the gentleman who offered it, that this amendment should be rejected by the Convention, and that either the section should remain as it is, or the whole subject matter should be left to the Legislature of the proposed new State, in order that they may prescribe the regulations controlling elections, and determine who shall and who shall not exercise the elective franchise.

Mr. CROSMAN. I have but a few words to offer in relation to this matter. In the first place, I will state my position, which is this: I am opposed to any alterations of the Article before us. The first proposition of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) would not meet with my approval, for the reason that, in my judgment, it would be a violation of the principles of liberty and justice. The doctrine we started out with at an early day, the doctrine which we wish to carry out, is that those men who have been engaged in the rebellion have erred—that those men who have been shedding the blood of our brothers have gone astray, but that if they are willing to come back, and be good citizens, we are willing, or I am willing, at least for one, to forgive them, although, under the circumstances, it may seem hard. It would be hard to see men coming up to the ballot-boxes whom we know are still traitors at heart; but we know that there are many who have sincerely repented. Doubtless there are many still in the rebel ranks who have repented, and who remain there, perhaps, from the force of circumstances over which they have no control. The progress of events may have forced them along until they found themselves in the rebel army. Some such men have got away, perhaps, as soon as they could, and now, if they are willing to take an oath of allegiance to the Government, I am willing to extend to them the hand of friendship. I think that humanity demands it. I think that that is shown to be the policy of our Government, and I think that we ought to extend our approval to that policy, if these men come among us. So far as relates to striking out the word "disloyal," I can see no necessity for it. If the Legislature is going to pass laws for the regulation of the ballot-box, they may provide a suitable oath for parties to take who are suspected of disloyal acts. The Article, as it stands, suits me, and I do not see the necessity for any alteration whatever.

Mr. TOZER. I hope the Convention will come speedily to a vote, and act upon the various questions pending before it. And, without discussing the matter further, or giving any reasons why and wherefore, I will only say that I hope the amendments will be voted down; and, if they are, I have prepared an amendment, in accordance with the suggestions of my colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) which I hope will then be adopted.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I have not occupied the time of the Convention hitherto, and the state of my health will not permit me to make any extended remarks upon this question. But there seems to me, from listening to the discussion thus far, to be a disposition here to pander to the disloyal sentiment existing in the Territory. One gentleman tells us he is fearful that this Constitution will not be adopted if we do not amend this section. I, for one, like the clause just as it stood, exactly. There has been a great deal said about justice. Justice to whom? A great deal has been said about Constitutional obligation. Obligations to whom? Justice and Constitutional obligations to the men who have been trying to stab to the heart one of the best Governments ever known in history? Have we so soon forgotten the brave men who have gone forth to battle for our liberties? Shall we so soon forget the new-made graves all along the banks of the Potomac and all over the South, that we should be over prompt to do "justice" to those men that are trying to stab the Government to the heart? If those men have proved to be traitors once, if they have, under certain circumstances, tried to destroy this Government once, what guarantee have we. I ask, that, under like circumstances, they will not attempt to do the same thing again? Who would be so inconsistent as to hire a thief to guard his treasure? I consider that the ballot-box is, as another has said, the palladium of American liberty, and I would guard it, and hedge it around in every possible way; and I believe that here in our organic act is the place to hedge it around; the place to build bulwarks for the protection of that sacred prerogative. We should provide that no one having even the taint of treason upon him shall be allowed to come to the ballot-box, side by side with us who have sustained the Government in its hour of darkest peril. We should not permit them to come up and vote with us. Shall they be permitted to govern this new-born State? Now, sir, you talk about justice. I feel, for one, that it is but justice to those brave men who have given all, even their lives, to their country; to those men who have fallen around Richmond like leaves in the autumn forest, that those who participated in this cursed rebellion should be forever excluded from the elective franchise. I know there are many loyal men in that section of our country, and some of them may have reached our Territory, but they are the exceptions to the general rule. I say that our ballot-box should be securely guarded, and controlled only by loyal men. I agree with the gentleman from Lauder, [Mr. Warwick], as to the character of our immigration. I know of men here who are just from the rebel ranks; men who have served under Price, in Missouri, and if we leave the ballot-box open to that class, enough of them may come by and by to carry the elections. I think if a man were ever so virulent a copperhead, he could scarcely show brass enough in his face to come out and attempt to oppose this Constitution for the reason that we have retained the word "disloyal" in it. I believe that it is good enough as it stands. I was not a member of the last Constitutional Convention, and therefore I can, with propriety, do that Convention the justice and the courtesy to say that I believe that clause as it stands is just what it should be, and I trust this Convention will leave it just as it is, voting all these amendments down.

KENNEDY—TOZER—WARWICK.

[July 7.

Mr. KENNEDY. The objection is made here to the use of this word "disloyal" that it is vague and impracticable, and to meet that objection, I desire to read one section from the Constitution of Vermont, as it was passed in 1793:—

SEC. 21. Every man of the full age of twenty-one years, having resided in this State for the space of one whole year, next before the election of representatives, and is of a quiet and peaceable behavior, and will take the following oath, or affirmation, shall be entitled to all the privileges of a freeman of this State.

Now, since 1793, they have had no trouble in Vermont in making that language practicable. Have we in this State less sense than the people of Vermont, so that it is impossible for us to make this provision, in regard to the disloyalty of persons, something that shall be of practical benefit?

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, to strike out the words, "unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government," and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. Dunne, to strike out the word "disloyal."

Mr. TOZER. I move, as a substitute for the section, the following:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector. And the Legislature may by law determine for what other reasons or causes any other class of persons than those mentioned shall or may be disqualified from exercising the elective franchise.

Mr. WARWICK. For the same reasons, sir, that I opposed the first amendment offered this morning, I oppose the present amendment. I am adverse to the idea of striking out that portion which I read this morning, and which is the portion, above all others, of this section that I desire to see incorporated in the organic law that we are now about perfecting—that portion which reads as follows:—

No person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government.

Until such time as that treasonable act shall be covered by the Amnesty Proclamation, to which we all look forward for the peaceful and triumphant solution of the war, I desire to exclude those who have been guilty of treason from participating in the elective franchise. I know it is said to be noble to have a giant's strength and yet not use it like a giant. But I contend now, as I contended this morning, that every principle of self-preservation demands that this section, above all others, should be incorporated in our organic law. Why is it that gentlemen now, in this our hour of peril, while we are battling for the life of the nation, desire to have men whose hands are red with the blood of our fathers, and brothers, and sons,

Thursday.]

NOURSE—BANKS.

come in, and share with us in the elective franchise around that sacred palladium of freedom, the ballot-box? Why do they desire to have this provision stricken out, which, above all others, is the imperial safeguard of our rights? What is it we ask? Simply that those who are engaged in rebellion now—not those who have been impressed; not those who, under a conscription act have been compelled to bear arms, whether willing or not—should be excluded. But the man who can stand up and say, "I have not willingly borne arms against my country—no, I was forced into the ranks, and I repent my action," is not excluded. This provision does not cover him. But gentlemen are not satisfied with that. They claim that all the others should be allowed to come in—that though their sin be as scarlet, yet shall they be as white as wool. Now all I ask is, that those who voluntarily went forward and raised their sacrilegious hands against the Government—those who have sought to tear it down; those who have struggled to murder it, when the life of the nation was trembling in the balance; those who willingly went forward—not those who were compelled to join in that treasonable work—shall be excluded from the elective franchise in the coming State. Why, here we are surrounded with rebellion. It is well known that there is no State or Territory in the Union which has become so much a harbor of refuge for secessionists as Nevada and California. As a gentleman who preceded me remarked, it is here they fly as to their city of refuge. In my own county of Lander, I know that treason is blatant in almost every hamlet and village. Therefore we ask that this provision be incorporated in our Constitution, whatever else you see fit to strike out. We do not ask that those who have been forced into the ranks of rebellion shall be excluded from the ballot-box, but those who have voluntarily borne arms; those who have contributed to aid the rebellion—from whatever motive; whether it be southern cupidity, or southern pride, or hatred of northern institutions—all those men who have voluntarily sought to overthrow the Government, at least until that Government be placed again upon a stable foundation. Let us use every means in our power for the security of our liberties, and our rights.

Now, then, the proposition made here, to strike out these words, "disloyal persons," it seems to me, ought to cover every ground of objection. The only objection raised is, that the words are vague, and that it would be almost impossible to define the character of the offense. We know, as has been stated on the floor of this Convention, that men differing in opinion, whose loyalty is like the virtue of Caesar's wife, not only pure but above suspicion, have been charged and re-charged with disloyalty, although those charges have no more weight than that of a feather in the balance. Therefore, as the offense is undefinable, and as there would be no possibility, under this provision, of arriving at just conclusions, I am willing to see those words stricken out, but I trust that the original section will remain otherwise just as it was adopted by the Convention of last fall, leaving in the provision excluding those who have voluntarily borne arms against the Government.

That provision humanely sets a limit in regard to age. The boy of sixteen can scarcely be considered as accountable, and the provision extends only to those who have been in the rebellion after arriving at the age of eighteen years. How merciful the provision! He shall be a man with an intellect capable of judging between right and wrong—not a child stolen from his mother's side, or a lad misled by the example and influence of bad companions, who rushes headlong into the fight. But if he is a man capable of judging between right and wrong, and if he has voluntarily sought to destroy this Government, then all we say is, not that any great punishment shall be inflicted, but simply that he shall not share with us in the elective franchise, until such time as an amnesty proclamation shall have washed away his fearful crime. I think that when this question comes to a vote, this Convention, owing to the vagueness of description in the word "disloyal," will be willing to strike that out, and will then insist that the remainder of the section shall stand as originally incorporated by the former Convention.

Mr. NOURSE. I desire to make one remark. I think the gentleman who has offered this amendment hardly noticed how wide is the door it opens. Under it the Legislature may exclude any person under heaven. It may exclude gray-headed men, or, far worse for some of us, it may exclude bald-headed men, or anything of that sort. [Laughter.] It seems to me that the gentleman who offered the amendment will hardly insist upon it when he finds that it opens the door so as to permit the Legislature to exclude any class of men it pleases.

Mr. BANKS. The proposition offered by my colleague, (Mr. Dunne,) is one which has been very fairly discussed here, and I do not propose to repeat what has been so ably said by others upon that proposition. I will simply say that I am in favor of striking out the word "disloyal," on account of the indefiniteness of that word, at least in the opinion of the very authority by which its meaning would have to be determined—to wit, the members of this Convention.

But there has been introduced here, by the gentleman from Storey on my right, (Mr. Tozer,) an amendment which embraces propositions which I conceive to be most dangerous, if they are not altogether foreign to the institutions of our country. His proposition, narrowed down to a few words, may be thus stated: He proposes that the Legislature, by a majority vote, may determine who shall and who shall not vote—who shall and who shall not exercise the greatest of American privileges, the right of the elective franchise. Now, without entering into anything which may be regarded as the philosophy of this question, let us view it in the light of the practical affairs of life, as we see them around us every day, and inquire how the thing will work in practice. At one time, by means of those agencies which politicians know so well how to use, popular sentiment may be aroused; unphilosophical political doctrines may be promulgated, and, for the time, the popular ear may be controlled by them; the popular mind may be deceived; and the popular heart may be made, for the time being, if not altogether wrong, at least to move in a wrong direction. Take an instance which is within the memory of all. I recall the time when men, from the press and the pulpit, and other prominent points, began declaiming against our citizens of foreign birth, and in time a dangerous sentiment was aroused, to such an extent that had a Legislature then met, possessing the power which this amendment proposes to confer, of deciding who shall and who shall not be permitted to vote at our elections, all that class of our fellow-citizens would have been excluded from the exercise of the elective franchise. Now, sir, I ask, with our present feelings upon that subject, would we be willing to have any such event happen in our Territory? I hope the right to exercise this high prerogative will be so fixed in the Constitution that passion will not be able at any time to exert such an influence upon it as it might do under the provision which this amendment proposes to place in our Constitution. I see no difficulty in allowing the section to stand as it is, with the word "disloyal" stricken out. We shall then leave our Legislature to be guided by a certain rule, and all persons who have raised their arms against the Government will be excluded until that Government sees fit to pardon their offenses. We then secure every advantage to be derived from such persons becoming repentant.

We all know that men judge more wisely as they grow older. I have myself, in common with many others here, stood on the stump, and acknowledged with shame—aye, with burning shame—that I once trained in the ranks of the Democracy, and proclaimed slavery to be a divine institution. I was willing at one time, as others were, to march in those ranks, and to maintain that doctrine. But we feel that we were monstrously wrong in the position which we then held, and in our declarations of what we were willing to do in an emergency in defense of the principles which we then believed in, and we now repent of that wrong. Now if you or I, Mr. Chairman, at the outbreak of this rebellion, had belonged to the State Rights party, and had lived in the South; if we had been roused to enthusiasm in the support of those principles, in which we fully believed, who knows but we, too, might have raised our hands against the Government of our country? We might, perhaps, have been promoted to positions above that of the rank of Colonel, and then we could not even have come in under the provisions of this part of our Constitution.

Now, in view of all the circumstances of the case, in view of what we know of human nature—that men may be thoroughly wrong one day, and at heart and in principle right the next day—in view of the past history of our country, in view of what we know in regard to the danger likely to arise, why should we give the Legislature the power to determine that no one who is not a gray-headed man, or a bald-headed man, or any other description of a man they please, shall be allowed to vote, or that the volunteers, or any other class of our citizens, shall be excluded from that right? In view of the dangers, I say, arising from human passions exercised in that way, I do hope that we shall adopt no such monstrous provision as is contained in this amendment, allowing a temporary majority in the Legislature to control so important a matter.

Mr. FRIZELL. I rise to make a few remarks in support of the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Storey, (Mr. Tozer.) Gentlemen will perceive, by close attention to the section, as proposed to be amended, that everything which properly belongs to a constitution, or which should be fixed in a State constitution, in this regard, is contained in that amendment. The amendment reads in this wise:

"No person who has been or may be convicted of treason, or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no idiot, or insane person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector," etc.

All that, in the middle of Section 2, as printed, which applies or relates to disloyal persons, is omitted from this amendment, and left entirely to the Legislature of our future State of Nevada. I think that is the proper course, and I will proceed, in my feeble manner, to tell you why I think so. Gentlemen are aware that I have made but few remarks in this Convention, owing to indisposition, and I am scarcely able to address the Convention now. As to the rights of the different States in the regulation of the rights of suffrage, it will be observed that the different States have taken quite different action upon this subject. In some States, as has been remarked by the gentleman from Washoe, on my left, (Mr. Nourse,) colored men have been allowed to vote; in other States, again, the statutes have required a property qualification; and in still others, the Legislature have required men to pay a poll-tax, as a prerequisite to the right of voting; but none of the requirements or measures advocated by gentlemen, so far as I have examined, have been inserted in the Constitution of any State. Another particular reason for leaving this subject to the Legislature, is this: that the very nature and course of this rebellion may, and probably will, take different shapes and shades every year, and what form it may ultimately assume, we cannot foresee.

Thursday.]

COLLINS.

[July 7.]

Now, the gentleman from Humboldt who last spoke [Mr. Banks] referred to passion. He said that the Legislature might be actuated by passion. But we meet here in the most critical period, as I look at it, of the rebellion, and we propose now to fix, and establish, and stamp, a law in our State Constitution that is almost irrevocable—a law which is to govern in all future times, notwithstanding the fact that this rebellion will inevitably take different shades from year to year. I certainly think it would be better to leave it to the Legislature. Why should not a Legislature of the State of Nevada, a great State, as we hope it will be in the future, coming up fresh from the people, be the proper body to refer such a subject to? It may be larger in numbers, and even a more intelligent and dignified body than this Convention, and why should we be afraid to entrust our rights to such a body?

If we refer back, Mr. Chairman, to the history of other nations, to the civil wars of England, to the wars of the Roses, or the wars of the Long Parliament with James or Charles, we will find that after once the wars had closed the difficulties were healed up and forgotten; and that there was no persecution against those who had been in arms. Now, I hold that anything like this in our State Constitution would be persecution. I say, let the rebels be punished if the Federal Government sees fit, and to the extent it sees fit, but do not persecute; and I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, whether you ever knew of any sect, political or religious, which was persecuted for its peculiar tenets, but what that sect increased and prospered? I say, then, punish, but do not persecute. Leave the door open for the rebels to return to their allegiance, and leave it to the Legislature of our future State to regulate, from year to year, this subject of the elective franchise. I do think that this poison of secession, spoken of by the gentleman on my left [Mr. Nourse], as being infused in the veins and vitals of the Republic, can be eradicated, and that the best way to eradicate it from society would be to leave those men a chance to return, and not persecute them. If this matter is left to the Legislature, they could shape a law or laws, from time to time, to meet the case in all its phases.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not feel at liberty to allow this subject to come to a vote without saying a few words in regard to it. I think that the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. Tozer] covers the entire ground. It leaves the question entirely at the disposal of future Legislatures to meet any of those extraordinary emergencies that may arise, requiring action such as this section contemplates. This original section proposes to proscribe men who have borne arms against the Government, or who have held office, either military or civil, under that Government. But I do protest that we ought to be very cautious about incorporating into our organic law any section, clause or phrase, that shall point continually to any particular class of men, or that, in its operation, shall conspire constantly to excite their hostility, awaken their pride, or arouse their passions. We do not wish to excite men to hostility against the State, but rather to beckon them on to a better and higher condition. I am fully confident myself—and I believe that I have about as much of human nature in my composition as most men—that if I were compelled to stand proscribed, by my position in any community, I should feel it a constant challenge to excite my hostility. The sense of persecution and wrong would be constantly awakened within me, and I should be induced to try to enlist the feelings and sympathies of my neighbors and associates, to incite them to unite with me, "like kindred drops in one," in carrying out the perpetual antagonism which would be aroused in my own breast. That, I believe, would be the ordinary impulse of human nature.

Now, I say, let this rebellion be put down. Let all the force at the command of the General Government be employed; let the backbone of the rebellion be broken; let the authority of the nation be maintained; let the leaders of the rebellion be strung up between heaven and earth, expatriated and imprisoned, and their property confiscated. But when that shall be done, let the hatchet be buried, and let those who have been the subordinates and dupes of those rebel leaders be friends with us again. It is not, or should not be, our object or intention to devise any ways or means, or to enact any provisions, by which this spirit of antagonism or hostility shall be constantly intensified. We should, rather than aggravate, seek to conciliate, so that when the asperities of the war shall have passed away, the animosities it has engendered may be forgotten, and we may be once more brothers and friends, instead of cherishing against each other a spirit of perpetual antagonism. When the war is ended, let the prejudices and passions which it has awakened into life be buried forever.

Gentlemen talk about the passions of the Legislature. Is there a probability, I ask, that the passions of the Legislature in the future will be more excited on this subject than our own passions now are, when our hearts are bleeding afresh with the losses we have sustained of fathers, and brothers, and sons, whose bones are bleaching on southern soil? As we pass through the country and see whole families in the weeds of mourning, as we look upon the dark cloud of sorrow and suffering which has spread over the land, can we help thinking that if there is any time in the history of the war at which men are liable to be excited by passion, it is the present moment? I would warn gentlemen of the Convention not to allow themselves to be governed by that excitement and passion which now prevails. I know it is popular to rail and to proscribe, but I have myself seen too much proscription from the very party which has brought this war into existence, not to understand and recognize the danger of proscription, and the want of sound judgment and philosophy in those who would advocate it. No! The proper time for this proscription, if we must have it—and I do not know but the future will demand it—will be when the occasion shall arrive. If the rebels in this Territory, or State as it is to be, shall conspire together to overthrow the Government, and endeavor to plant their feet upon the neck of freedom, then it will be time enough to use the means which the proposed amendment to the Constitution gives us, for our own protection.

COLLINS.

And, by the amendment offered by my colleague, the Legislature will have full power to adopt this policy of proscription. God send that the occasion may never come! I have full faith to believe that when the rebellion is crushed, as it may be at an early day, the loyal sentiment of the country will be ample to absorb and control the hostile element. I believe that those men who are now contending against the Government, when they shall cross the mountains and the plains to this State, will become as firmly convinced of their wrong as we now are—that their suffering, and self-denial, and poverty, will be a lesson that will teach them to appreciate the blessings of free institutions. And when they mingle with us, and find that we receive them in a liberal spirit, that the right hand of fellowship is not withheld, I do believe that there will be no difficulty in moulding them into good citizens. Having full faith in this moral power, in the efficiency of free principles, in the efficacy of free schools, and in the power of this free people, with its intelligence, its industry and its energy, I am confident that we shall be more than equal to the absorption of all of that rebellious element which may come among us.

A little buncombe has been introduced by some gentlemen who have spoken on the other side, to the effect that if this amendment shall be adopted, as introduced by my colleague, the Legislature may exclude from voting the bald-headed men, or gray-headed men, or, perhaps, the red-headed men, which I suppose would include my friend from Humboldt. [Laughter.] They tell us that there is danger of such classes of men being proscribed. Why, if gentlemen will read the first section of this Article, they will find that this difficulty is all made clear. I will read it, for the benefit of those gentlemen, that they may know that they are entirely mistaken, and that the Convention may see that this argument is merely for buncombe, and nothing more:—

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States, (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

Then comes in this section, proposed by my colleague, to be amended so as to read:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector, and the Legislature may, by law, determine for what other reasons or causes any other class of persons than those mentioned shall or may be disqualified from exercising the elective franchise.

Now, I would like to invite the serious attention of the Convention to another matter, and that is, the entire impracticability of this section, or clause, proposed to be stricken out. I want gentlemen to look at it carefully. It is generally admitted, by the members of the Convention, that the word "disloyal," in that last clause, shall be stricken out. And why? Merely because it is so difficult to decide as to who is disloyal. A man may have been disloyal last year, and to-day he may be exceedingly loyal. Why, sir, I can remember, twenty, twenty-five, or thirty years ago, that when a man dared to stand up, in the Northern States, in New England, in New York, in Ohio, in any of the Northern States, and declare that he believed slavery was wrong, that it was contrary to every principle of republican government, and to the teachings of the Gospel, those very men, who now are the loudest and most earnest in their hostility against slavery, the most earnest advocates of the war, the readiest and firmest supporters of the President and of the Emancipation Proclamation, were then the readiest and most eager to throw added eggs at the man who declared those sentiments. Do they entertain such feelings now? Certainly not. And why? Because circumstances have transpired to change the prevailing sentiment, and the sentiments of men have therefore been changed, so that those men are to-day among our best and most devoted Union men. Then, I say, are we to shut down and close forever the gates against future repentance? Sir, I know of men who have been earnest secessionists, men who have been zealous enemies of the Government of the United States, who have already seen their folly, and who now stand, shoulder to shoulder, defending their country against the assaults of rebellion. I ask whether there is to be no door of escape for them? Are they to have no hope? Are not the power and force of free principles, and the power and force of the arms of the Federal Government, equal to the task of converting and persuading them to a better life, and to good citizenship? My faith in the good that is in men, and in the power of justice, is such as to lead me to rely on that good and that power.

My friend, the gentleman from Lyon, [Mr. Kennedy] has attempted to arraign the good old State of Vermont, and has brought her Constitution here, when the argument of impracticability was presented in regard to this word "disloyal." He says that certainly if such language was good enough for Vermont, it will be good enough for us. Now, I have to say that I have a little knowledge of the history of that State, and I know the trouble, perplexity and annoyance that the people have suffered under that provision which he has read, on account of the charges which bad or over-zealous men have brought against those whom they desired to proscrib. For nearly twenty years the citizens of Vermont struggled earnestly to that end, and finally, in 1828, they succeeded in changing the Constitution in such a way that that ambiguity and trouble was entirely removed.

Mr. KENNEDY. Did they change that clause?

Mr. COLLINS. They did change that clause.

Mr. KENNEDY. It does not appear to have been changed in this published volume of "American Constitutions."

Mr. COLLINS. In Vermont, in 1828, the Constitution was amended as follows:—

No person who is not already a freeman of this State shall be entitled to exercise the privilege of a freeman, unless he be a natural born citizen of this or some one of the States, or until he shall have been naturalized agreeably to the Acts of Congress.

Mr. KENNEDY. That has no reference whatever to the clause which I read.

Mr. COLLINS. That is the article on the right of suffrage. I would ask the gentleman how it is possible that this language can be of any service; and I will read that portion of the section proposed to be stricken out, in order that we may look at it squarely in the face. If it can be of the least possible service, if it will add one iota to the strength of the Government, I would be willing to incorporate fifty pages against rebels; but I do protest against incorporating in our organic law anything against rebels, or against the rebellion, unless it be shown that there is an absolute, pressing and urgent necessity upon us for doing it. Let us look at this language:—

And no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States Government, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government.—

Now, in the first place, I ask what Court is to be raised to try those men? For I contend that it will be incumbent upon the Convention to establish a Court by which this whole matter shall be adjudicated. What Court is going to decide it? An immigrant comes over, and Madame Rumor, with her thousand tongues, proclaims that the man was in the rebel army, or that he held an office under the civil government of the rebellion; and how are you going to prove it? As my friend from Douglas has asked, are you going to send a Commissioner to the Capital of the Confederacy, (and where that Capital is to be next year or next month God only knows,) and there to ascertain whether John Jones or Richard Williams, or any other man, has ever borne arms under the Confederacy against the United States? And suppose it to be true, how is it to be adjudged, or how are you going to prove it? How are you to know his age? The young man may say "I was only fifteen years of age," and there is another question to be brought out on proof. He may say that he went into the rebel ranks involuntarily; that he was conscripted and forced into the rebel army.

And when you have proved all these things, I ask what then? Allowing it to be possible that such a thing could be proved, what then? Why, you might chance to fall upon one of the very best Union men in the State of Nevada, who may be laboring shoulder to shoulder with you to sustain this State, and to uphold the Federal Government. He may be one of the most earnest Union men we have, and he may be assailed, while there are hundreds and hundreds of others who may be indifferent or opposed to the Government, whom you cannot bring to the bar. Thus the Union man may suffer disfranchisement while those others escape. I tell you it is a dangerous instrument of power. It is a dangerous declaration to insert in our organic law, when we are liable to do so much injury to individuals by means of that declaration. I say it were better to let ten secessionists escape, than that, in the future, one Union man should suffer at our hands. Now, the proposition is, to leave this matter to the Legislature; that is, to the bodies of men who come directly up from the people, chosen to deliberate upon the wants of the State; to those men who know precisely what the wants of the State are.

But I will trespass no longer upon the Convention, as I am courteously informed by a friend here that I have already spoken over fifteen minutes.

Mr. DELONG. I think there is no limit to the debate, as to time, in the Committee of the Whole.

Several voices—"Go on!" "Leave!" "Leave!"

Mr. COLLINS. I desire only to say that the Legislature is the proper body to take this matter into consideration; that it is better qualified for it than we are. One gentleman—I think it was the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks),—has suggested that the Legislature would be excited and impassioned on the subject. As I said before, we are the body that is most likely to be excited and stimulated by passion. I want nothing incorporated into the Constitution that is not absolutely necessary. I consented, yesterday, in that section relating to paramount allegiance, to allow a gloss to pass upon the Constitution of the United States, after we had adopted it as a whole. I was willing that the meaning might be clearly expressed, because I thought it might do some good, and certainly could do no harm. But I am decidedly opposed to employing in the organic law of the State any language which is not really necessary, and which may conspire in its operation to do immense harm to individuals. I do not see how this language can possibly do any good. I believe that when this rebellion shall be overcome there will be a general reünion and sympathy of feeling all over the North and the South. The people of the South will feel that the people of the North are of a different character from what they had been led to understand. They have had the impression, as my colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) has said, that Northern men would not fight. They have imagined that the Northern people were composed of a class of men in whose pockets every sixpence would stick, as if made of putty or dough; that they were too mean to spend their money to defend their free institutions. But they have been convinced thoroughly in this war—first, that the North will fight; and, second, that they will pour out their money like water to defend their liberties and their rights. And when they shall have been thoroughly and completely overcome, they will acknowledge their condition. They will cry for peace, and they will freely harmonize with the men of the North, and of the entire nation. They will be glad to coalesce and coöperate with you, and endeavor with you to build up a government of which they will themselves be proud. They undoubtedly possess a spirit of patriotism, although instead of being expanded so as to embrace the whole nation, it is now confined to their particular State or their particular section. But they will hereafter transfer that spirit from the State to the nation, and will be as ambitious of the glory of the nation, and as proud of its prosperity and greatness, when a few years shall have passed away, as you are.

I remember that a few years ago there was a great war between the cantons of Switzerland. While that war raged, the people of those cantons were brought into antagonism, and as strong passions were excited, and as strong prejudices aroused, it seems to me, as ever have existed between the North and the South. But when the Northern cantons overcame the Southern cantons, and peace was proclaimed, then universal harmony was soon reëstablished, and now you can hardly see the scars of that great gash that almost severed the country in twain.

I remember being in Ireland just before the last insurrection, and, in consequence of my acquaintance with men in that country, when that rebellion did break out, I watched its progress and history with earnestness. When the British Government had overcome those who had taken up arms, and Meagher, and Mitchell, and others were convicted, and sentenced to be drawn and quartered, the Government having fully vindicated its authority, that sentence was commuted to banishment to New South Wales, and a general amnesty was proclaimed; no man, save a few of the leaders, being proscribed. Now I ask any gentleman, if Ireland is less loyal to-day, in consequence of that leniency?

I remember, too, the history of the whiskey rebellion, in Pennsylvania. When Washington ordered out troops to subdue the insurgents, and when that rebellion had been put down, and the authority of the Government reëstablished, there was no trace of bitterness left. The Federal Government, having sustained the law, has proclaimed that all under the rank of colonel, if my memory serves me correctly, who should come in, in obedience to the proclamation, and take and subscribe an oath of allegiance, should thereby be absolved and purged from all taint of treason, and thereafter entitled to all the rights and immunities of citizenship, the same as if they never had been rebels. That is what is done now, right in the heart of the rebellion. Right in the midst of it, while the graves of our soldiers are yet green, while their bones on the battle-fields are yet whitening, while the weeds of the widow, and the orphan, and of the aged parent, bereft of support, are yet to be seen all over the free States; in spite of all this, the Government has issued that proclamation. If they could do it there, I ask, how much more should we do it here—three, four, or five thousand miles removed from the scenes of strife—where only a few stragglers reach us, now and then, across the rocky mountains, and alkali flats, and arid and desolate plains.

I ask, how should we receive them? Should it be with the unfriendly greeting—"clear out, you worthless devils, we know you not?" Rather let us say,—“we know your folly, and your wrong-doing; yet, notwithstanding, if you come here to work with us, to coöperate with us, as true and loyal citizens should, you shall be received into all the rights and privileges of citizenship; but if you do not, there stands a provision in our Constitution by which our Legislature is authorized to proscribe and drive you from the polls, and deprive you of citizenship.” I ask if that is not a thousand fold better than it would be to foster captiousness and strife, and to legislate here as if this rebellion was to exist for all time to come?

And when this rebellion is put down, if we adopt this policy, it will not be planted merely to sprout up again, like the heads of Hydra, if you cut off one of which, ten others would spring up anew in its place; but when once it is put down, it is put down for all time in the future. Its memory will be a monument for all coming ages to look back upon, and when men regard its history, they will tremble at the might and majesty of that Government which unsheathed the sword, and put down a rebellion of such power and magnitude as this which is now raging.

I ask the Convention to look at this Constitution as an instrument which will go down to posterity. You, and I, sir, may die, but this Constitution never. I ask, then, if this immortal instrument shall be so framed as hereafter to be pointed out to every man who crosses the plains, who has been in the confederate army, although he may be now as good a Union man, and as devoted a republican as you and I—I ask if this instrument shall point at and fix a brand and stigma upon him? Is it for the good of our State that that provision should remain there? I trust that the Convention will look at this matter earnestly, and without passion, and then decide according to its best judgment.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to make a personal explanation. I have read a section from the Constitution of Vermont, and the gentleman from Storey, who has just taken his seat, seems to think that that section has been repealed. I wish, in order that I may be placed in a proper position before the Convention, to read the two sections which have been referred to. The first section to which I referred and read, was Section 21 of Chapter II, which reads as follows:—

“Every man of the full age of twenty-one years, having resided in this State for the space of one whole year next before the election of representatives, and is of a quiet and peaceable behaviour, and will take the following oath or affirmation, shall be entitled to all the privileges of a freeman of this State.”

The article which the gentleman refers to as repealing this section, is an amendatory article, adopted in 1828, and reads as follows:—

“No person, who is not already a freeman of this State, shall be entitled to exercise the privilege of a freeman unless he be a natural-born citizen of this or some one of the United States, or until he shall have been naturalized agreeably to the acts of Congress.”

That amendatory article simply provides that a citizen shall not be made such without naturalization, and has no reference to the section which I previously cited.

Mr. FITCH. It was not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to have occupied the time of this Committee in the consideration of this section of Article II, but, inasmuch as the debate has taken a turn unexpected to me, and inasmuch as a portion, and a large portion, of the delegation from Storey County, of which I have the honor to be a member, have assumed a position upon this question unlooked for by me, I feel myself called upon, in order that there may be no mistake about my position, at least, to say a few words upon the subject under consideration.

I most heartily approve, sir, of the action of this Committee in refusing to strike out the words “unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government,” which was the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, [Mr. Nourse,] and voted down by this Committee. I most heartily concur in the original amendment of the committee, proposed by the gentleman from Storey, as amended by the gentleman from Humboldt, providing that the word “disloyal” shall be stricken out. But, sir, I can hardly agree, in any particular, with the views recently advanced by my colleague from Storey, [Mr. Collins,] with a force which I cannot hope to compass, and an eloquence which I cannot hope to emulate. I think that gentleman is filled with the milk of human kindness to an extent which certainly does not animate my bosom, at least. I am not in favor of holding out inducements to persons who have been disloyal to the United States, and have been in the service of the Southern Confederacy. I am not in favor of holding out inducements to that class of men to immigrate to this Territory, or State. So far as the word “disloyal” is concerned, I am in favor of striking it out, because I think it would be inoperative. For, if a man who was challenged on the ground of disloyalty, swore his vote in, you would be compelled to convict him of treason before you could convict him of perjury. But, on the other hand, a person challenged for having been in the rebellion, and not pardoned by having brought himself within the provisions of the Amnesty Proclamation, could be convicted for illegal voting. It would be only necessary to prove on the trial that he had been in the Confederate service and had not been included within the terms of the proclamation—a thing probably easy enough to prove, because those who had been in the United States service, or who knew sufficient of the facts to authorize them to make a challenge, might have all the information necessary to prove those facts.

Now, sir, I am opposed to leaving out this clause. I am opposed to leaving out the words which provide that “no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States or held civil or military service under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government,” shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector. I am strongly in favor of keeping those words in. It is my opinion that it would not be wise or good policy to strike them out; I do not think it would be just to the Union party; in my opinion it would not be just to the loyal soldiers of the United States. I do not think that, in that view, I am unjust to any persons who may desire to become citizens of this State; and I do not think the accusation of Buncombe will properly lie against a proposition of this nature.

Why, sir, not for the purpose of awakening prejudice, but for the purpose of calling the attention of gentlemen to facts which are passing immediately around them, almost under their eyes, I would refer gentlemen to the condition of things in the Atlantic States to-day. We find that, while we are discussing these questions here, a million of men—our brothers, our fathers, and our sons—are in front of Richmond now, under command of Grant, or in Georgia, with the army of Sherman, freely laying down their lives, being slain by hundreds and thousands, for the defense of our Government. And it seems to me when, in times like these, in times of revolution, we are engaged in framing an organic law for the youngest, and what we hope will be among the proudest and most prosperous of the States, we should be recreant to duty if we failed to express in some unmistakable way, our reprobation of those men who are doing all they can to destroy that Government which our kindred are defending, and our approbation of the men who are so gloriously upholding the flag and the Government of the United States. Why, Mr. Chairman, we might go through the Northern and Western States, to-day, any one of us, and when we witnessed the scenes of poverty and suffering which are transpiring all over those loyal States, in consequence of the sacrifices which their people have undergone in behalf of their country, we should feel, perhaps, like doing more and saying something stronger in reprobation of the men who have brought on and are now conducting this rebellion. There is scarcely a household, from Maine to Minnesota, from Lake Superior to the Ohio River, over whose threshold the beating wings of the angel of death has not passed; not a family but has given up some member to the cause of their country. There is not a State, nor a county, nor a school district but has suffered immensely, in life and in treasure, in consequence of this most inexcusable, most damnable rebellion—not one, sir. And shall we, stationed here, removed far away from all the suffering and sorrow, fail to express at least our reprobation of the men who have caused that suffering and sorrow? Shall we fail, Mr. Chairman, to insert in our organic law a provision disqualifying those men from becoming citizens on an equality with us, unless they shall first have been pardoned through an amnesty granted by the Federal Government? Why, sir, we scarcely know the amount of suffering which is endured by our fellow-citizens in the East. We have no conception of it. I do not speak alone of the men who have gone down to battle and to death before Richmond, or the men who, on other Southern battle fields, have spilled their blood in the defense of their country, but I speak of those whom they have left behind—of the children made fatherless, and the wives made husbandless. I tell you if we could travel over that land and see the suffering there, we might be induced to place in our Constitution even a stronger provision against the men who have caused this suffering to be brought upon the nation.

I disagree with my colleague from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) upon another proposition. He is of the opinion, sir, that when this war is over, when the armies of the rebellion shall have been entirely crushed, when the federal flag shall wave in triumph over every portion of the rebellious territory, then those men who have been in arms three years, battling against the Government of the United States, doing all they could do to destroy the lives of our soldiers and overthrow our government, are going to be converted into the best kind of citizens—that they will lay down their arms, and suddenly become the best and most loyal of neighbors and citizens. I believe the thing is impossible, sir. I very much mistake the character of the men—not only of those who instigated this rebellion, but those who are conducting it—if they do anything of the sort. There may be some hungry ones, and a few tired ones, perhaps, and it may be that a considerable number of such will take that course; but I think, as a general rule, that we shall be compelled, to a certain extent, at least, to denationalize the whole southern country, to colonize and fill it up with a northern emigration, to infuse loyal blood into the veins of the people, before we can ever hope that they will return to the Union and be what they were a generation ago. The men who have been beaten in battle are, to a certain extent, humiliated, because they have had their power destroyed. But if you restore them to civil rights immediately, and visit them with no punishment, and if you give them the right of suffrage unconditionally, I think there will be danger of a renewal of the trouble. I do not know what the policy of the Government is to be, in the States in rebellion, but I think I see, in the adoption of such a policy as my colleague recommends, the seeds of future outbreaks, and cruel warfare for years to come. I tell you the only way is to carry the war out to the bitter end. We have got not only to destroy the rebel armies, but, to a certain extent, to expatriate the whole population, and fill the country up with loyal northern elements, before we can do anything with that people. Those are my ideas, in contradistinction to those of my colleague. Why, Mr. Chairman, the idea that the man who has been in the service of the Confederate States should immigrate here to the western side of the Rocky Mountains, and, without a single expression of disapprobation, should be allowed to exercise the rights of citizenship; that we should be so tender-spirited, so kind-hearted, so generous, so unwisely magnanimous, that, not even in framing our organic law, will we adopt a provision telling him that he has done something wrong for which he deserves to lose all, but that we still will not deprive him of the rights of suffrage, provided the General Government will grant him an amnesty—that we should be so generous and tender-hearted, and careful of the feelings of traitors, as to avoid all allusions to their treason, is an idea which does not meet with my approval.

Sir, I, for one, am not in favor of extending so much consideration as that to those who have tried their best to destroy the Government. I am not so filled with the milk of human kindness. I have too great and too recent a sense of the depredations which have been made upon my kindred and my country. I remember how Ellsworth took his young life in his hand, and on behalf of liberty, like the noble Roman youth, leaped into that yawning gulf which closed upon him forever; I remember the grand devotion of the noble soldiers in the West, and how every banner in Missouri is draped in sable, and every bird seems to sing a song of sorrow for Lyon's death; I remember low Baker, the noblest Roman of them all, exchanged the Senator's toga, which had honored him and which he had honored, for the soldier's sword, freely poured out his life, and went up into the presence of the God of battles; I remember how, in Kentucky, the stream runs darker to-day with the blood of McCook; I remember how hundreds of other brave men have fallen and died on scores of battle-fields, while leading their countrymen against the legions of the rebellion; I remember how, yesterday, the tidings flashed along the "million chorded lyre of thought" which spans the continent, that Hooker lies bleeding and suffering; I remember how the whole land has been filled with wailing and wo, not for those alone, but for the thousands and thousands of unrecorded dead. I, sir, have too recent a memory of those things. Although the more advanced age and cooler judgment of some may render them more considerate; although I have every disposition to extenuate the faults and follies of my countrymen, and no disposition whatever to invoke the anger or resentment, or to stir up the bad passions of men; yet, if other gentlemen are willing to give to these men, who have brought upon the nation this great load of mourning and wo, all the rights and privileges of good and loyal citizens, without expressing one word of disapprobation, I am not. Such sentiments and feelings may animate the minds of some, but they do not mine, nor do I believe that they animate the minds of a majority, nor any very considerable portion, of my constituents in Storey County.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Toz r, and, on a division, the amendment was not agreed to; ayes, 5—noes not counted.

Mr. DELONG. I do not believe the Convention understood the question. [Laughter.]

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Dunne, (accepted subsequently by Mr. Hovey,) to strike out, in the latter part of the section, the words "or disloyal," and to insert between the words "idiot" and "insane" the word "or," so as to read, "and no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector."

The question was taken by a division, and the vote was, ayes, 14—noes, 11.

Mr. DELONG. How does the Chair vote?

Mr. WARWICK. I think there is an inaccuracy in the Secretary's count.

The CHAIRMAN. In Committee of the Whole there must be a majority, or the proposition is lost; but the Chair will vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MASON. I give notice that I will move a reconsideration to-morrow.

Mr. WARWICK. It is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. As the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) says there has been an inaccuracy in the count, I call for a re-count.

Mr. CHAPIN. I understood the Chairman to vote in the affirmative, which carries the amendment.

Mr. DELONG. Then I withdraw my demand. Mr. WARWICK, and several other members, demanded a re-count.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps it would be better to have a re-count, that all may be satisfied. If there is no objection, the question will be taken again.

The question was again taken, and, upon a division, the amendment was adopted; ayes, 15—noes, 14.

DUELING.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have an amendment to offer. I move to insert, after the word "insane," in place of that which has been stricken out, the words: "or any person who refuses to take the oath or affirmation of loyalty, as prescribed in this Constitution."

Mr. DUNNE. I think, as it stands now, it does not read well. The word "person" should come in. It should read, "no idiot or insane person, or any person who refuses," etc.

Mr. DELONG. I would ask the mover of this amendment if he has examined the oath which he refers to. The oath reads:—

"I —, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and, further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever."

So far it is all right, but the balance I do not like. It reads in this wise:—

"And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm, that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel, during my continuance in office. And further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office of —, on which I am about to enter; so help me God."

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman allow me to explain? So far as I am concerned, I do not intend that that shall be in. I do not believe it is necessary to entitle a man to vote that he should swear he has never fought a duel, or that he has never taken part in one.

Mr. WARWICK. That is only after the adoption of the Constitution; it only provides that, in the future, men shall not settle their little differences in that way. It has nothing to do with what they have done heretofore, but it provides that they shall not fight a duel hereafter. As we propose to have a peaceable State, we would like to bar out all that class of gentlemen especially—those who go out of a cloudy morning, with pistols or other weapons, with which to mend their wounded honor. I think, as this provision is being incorporated in the Constitutions of most of the States in the American Union, it is a good idea for us to have it here. If gentlemen have little difficulties, we propose that they shall settle them in a way which will not endanger life. We are now approaching an age whose civilization should frown down all those barbarous modes of settling quarrels, and, as the thing has been accomplished in almost every State of the American Union, I hope we shall incorporate it in our Constitution.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not understand that we have adopted this oath yet. My amendment contemplates that we will adopt some test of loyalty in this Constitution—either this oath, or another in place of this. I do not myself think this is the oath which ought to be taken; it is not strong enough to suit me.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am inclined to think that my friend from Lyon will not reach his object by his amendment. I understand his object is to exclude from voting, those persons who have been disloyal to the General Government. Now, if we take this oath, or any oath incorporated in place of this oath, it must act in futuro. It applies only to things to be done after the adoption of our Constitution, and I think that will not reach the object which the gentleman has in view, that is, to exclude from the elective franchise those who have been disloyal.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not see what difficulty there will be in attaining the object by an oath acting in futuro. Of course, it may relate to things past, but I see no difficulty in arranging it so as to reach the desired end.

Mr. BANKS. This matter seems to have arisen here by accident, and I think it is very fortunate. I approve of what there is of this oath, and I conceive it is exceedingly desirable to apply this test to those who come up to the polls. I do not think that, by the most elaborate plan that can be devised, the Legislature could provide so efficient a remedy against the practice of dueling as we provide by this test. It does not affect the past, so far as loyalty is concerned, but it requires people to bear true faith and allegiance to the Federal Government, and it requires the voter to make oath that he has not been engaged in fighting a duel since the adoption of this Constitution. It provides that if he cannot swear this, he shall suffer the penalty of being excluded from voting. I like it exceedingly—it is not ex post facto in any sense; it does not touch the past at all, but it dates from the adoption of the Constitution. I hope it will be adopted, whether or not the design was, as it would have been with me if I had proposed the amendment, that we should adopt it as a safeguard against the evil of dueling; because experience has shown that it cannot be fully provided against by any other system.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am afraid that I have not been so fortunate as to be clearly understood in regard to this oath. I expressed no objection to the oath itself, but I apprehend that the mover only intended to supply something in place of the word disloyal, which had been stricken out. That is to say, that he intended to provide that persons who have been concerned in the rebellion should be precluded from the exercise of the rights of franchise until they have taken the oath of fealty. I did not find any fault with the oath, but I stated that I thought it would not accomplish the gentleman's object.

Mr. DELONG. To relieve myself from the possible imputation of being a "chivalry" man, or a duelist, I desire to say that I do not go with that crowd. But I know that the same kind of provision which is here contemplated has been contained in the laws of California ever since it was a State—making it a felony to fight, or to be concerned in a duel, and that very fact has led to people's utterly disregarding the law on the subject, and California has in consequence been a perfect dueling ground, for the last fifteen years. Many of the brightest and best of her citizens have gone to their graves with the Constitution and the Statutes of that State with that clause in them, hanging over their heads. Now, when you make a prohibition as strong as it is made here, I think it never will result in prohibiting or preventing dueling. You say here, that a man, in order to prove his loyalty, has got to swear that he never fought a duel. Well, suppose he has fought a duel, cannot he do that and yet remain loyal? All those provisions I consider entirely out of place. I think that it would result in this—that those who go to the polls and take the oath, will utterly disregard that part of it. I do not consider that any such restriction in regard to dueling is advisable. Those who want to fight will disregard such provisions, and those who do not want to fight will conceive themselves at liberty to insult a man outrageously, and then when they are challenged, will shelter themselves behind such a provision, and say: "Oh, I cannot fight a duel, because if I do I am disfranchised. I would like to exceedingly, but for the law." I think we shall have much less of persons insulting each other—a thing which is constantly going on in halls of legislation and through the public press—if we refrain from making any such provision. As long as a man feels that another man has a right to hold him responsible, he will not be so ready to deal in insulting language, or so flippant in talking or writing about the character of his neighbor, as he would otherwise be. Now, the provision which is submitted here is, that before a man is allowed to vote, he shall be required to take that oath. Suppose a man's friend wanted to fight a duel; suppose he had been outraged in every conceivable way—

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). The gentleman is, I think, a little out of order; the question is on the amendment requiring the voter to take the oath of loyalty, "as provided in this Constitution," and the subject to which the gentleman's remarks are addressed is that oath prescribed for civil and military officers. That has no relation. I take it, to this provision, and, consequently, I think his remarks are not in order.

Mr. DELONG. But that, I believe, is the only oath in the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. This Constitution has only been adopted as a basis, and I think the adoption of the amendment proposed would presuppose some future action in adopting an oath of loyalty. I do not conceive, therefore, that, until this matter is disposed of at least, it is at all in order to discuss the subject of dueling.

Mr. DELONG. Well, then, I will say, let them frame the oath which they desire to prescribe, and insert it here, and if it suits me, I will go for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Suppose we do not adopt any oath.

Mr. DELONG. Then the amendment would be entirely senseless.

Mr. KENNEDY. Suppose we see fit to adopt an oath of loyalty hereafter.

Mr. DELONG. Then it may not suit me. If the Chair please, I am opposed to the amendment until the oath is prepared which it is proposed to adopt. If it is not yet drawn, how can we tell whether or not it would be wisdom to require it to be taken? The gentleman should have been prepared to submit the oath at the same time with his amendment, and should have said, that no man shall be allowed to vote who has been convicted of felony, etc., or who is idiotic, or insane, or, if he refuses to take the following oath—then and there reciting the oath.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to lay the section on the table, for the present, in order to give the gentleman time to draw up a form of oath.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope that course will not be taken, but that we shall finish the subject now. I think if the mover will modify his amendment a little, we can act upon it now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not make the motion out of any opposition to the amendment. I have no objection to the requirement proposed by the amendment, and I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to offer an amendment. I propose to insert the oath prescribed in Section 2, of Article XVI, of the old Constitution. I regard it as an admirable oath to accomplish the purpose which I desire, whatever may have been the object of the original mover of the amendment. It will then designate this oath as the oath to be taken:—

"I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State, Convention, or Legislature, to the contrary notwithstanding; and, further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. And I do further solemnly swear, (or affirm,) that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel; so help me God."

The question was stated upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKS. The oath to which attention has been directed, seems to cover all the ground desirable, under the circumstances. A man comes up to the polls, his loyalty is questioned, and then he is sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of Nevada; that is one proposition. He is sworn first to abide by those constitutions hereafter; and then he is also sworn as to participating in a duel.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. This says, that no man shall be allowed to vote who has fought a duel since the adoption of this Constitution. I wish to ask if he intends it to apply to those who may come to this State hereafter, having previously fought a duel elsewhere, without any knowledge that there was such a provision in our Constitution?

Mr. BANKS. I presume it would apply to them, if the courts should rule as strictly as the gentleman intimates, but we can guard against that by inserting an amendment, when we come to it, adding after "fought a duel," the words "in this State," and then there will be no ambiguity. I presume that the courts would clear up the matter by their decisions, but to avoid any such necessity I will propose to have those words inserted. The reasons why I advocate the oath proposed are not the reasons which the gentleman has advanced, but I believe they are sufficient.

Mr. KENNEDY. With the permission of the Convention, I will modify my amendment by inserting that oath which we have already taken.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it will hardly be in order, unless the gentleman from Humboldt withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I consider my amendment much better.

Mr. DELONG. Take either position—whether he inserts the words "in this State" or not—the gentleman from Humboldt is at sea. What good will the provision do, when we have put that in? If two men want to fight a duel they can cross the line and fight it in the State of California, in order to avoid the civil authorities here and the penalties you impose. If you do not put that in, then a party who may have fought a duel in another State, without any knowledge of the provisions of the Nevada Constitution, upon coming to our State would be deprived not only of the right of voting, but of the right to sit on a jury. I think that oath is all fudge.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the oath refers to fighting a duel "in this State."

Mr. DeLONG. No, sir; but the gentleman from Humboldt said he would amend the oath in that respect, so as to avoid convicting a man who had fought a duel in another State, where there may have been no such legal penalties.

Mr. BANKS. I had not examined the language of the oath particularly. I was not proposing or trying to amend it at that time, but I was simply offering it by way of throwing out a hint of what amendment might be made, in order to obviate the difficulty. We might use different language from that. We might say, perhaps, that, "while a citizen of this State" he shall not have fought a duel. But it seems to me that there is no necessity for us to consider the exact phraseology at this time.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I now move to insert the oath which we have all taken, omitting only the words "that I will well and truly discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter." I will ask that the concluding portion of the section be read as it will then stand.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

And no idiot or insane person, or any person who refuses to take the following oath or affirmation, to wit:—"I ———, do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or Constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear, that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion—SO HELP ME GOD,"—shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Mr. DeLONG. A person cannot take that oath who comes under this Amnesty Proclamation which we have already adopted; so that after all they would be excluded, notwithstanding the President's Amnesty Proclamation. He cannot swear that he has not borne arms against the General Government, although he might take an oath that after having done so he had been pardoned by the Amnesty Proclamation. Such a man comes here and finds that, notwithstanding his full pardon, he is not allowed to vote unless he swears that he never was in the Confederate service. That conflicts with the provision which we just now refused to strike out.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am in favor of that oath in its proper place, but I do not think this is the place for it.

Mr. DeLONG. But the man who comes under the Amnesty Proclamation cannot take it, anyway.

Mr. COLLINS. This seems to me not only unnecessary, but manifestly wrong. It occurs to me that it will necessarily deprive many men of the right of voting who are entitled to it by the previous part of the section. And then, under peculiar circumstances, a combination or conspiracy may be made at the polls, by which every man may be challenged and required to take this oath, and the consequence would be that you would not get one hundred votes polled in the course of the day. There are some polls, in the populous counties, where there are from twelve hundred to two thousand votes to be cast, and under a provision of this kind, by which every man could be compelled to take this oath, you would not get one quarter of them in. It seems to me that the provision is unjust and unnecessary, and I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to offer a substitute. I move to amend, by substituting for the oath here proposed, the first part of the oath contained in the old Constitution, and which reads as follows:—

"I, ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State, Convention, or Legislature, to the contrary, notwithstanding; and, further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever."

Mr. KENNEDY. I will accept that amendment. We will change it, however, before it reaches its final passage, I think.

The question was taken on the adoption of Mr. Kennedy's amendment, as modified by Mr. Crawford, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WARWICK. I think it is necessary to add something to that. I think we should add the words "so help me God," in order to make it perfect. I move to add those words.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and, upon a division, it was adopted—ayes, 19; noes, 5.

RESIDENCE OF VOTERS.

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have lost a residence by reason of his absence while employed in the service of the United States, or of this State, nor gained a residence while a student in any seminary of learning.

Mr. FRIZELL. I move to amend, by striking out the words "nor gained a residence while a student in any seminary of learning." I think if there is anything which should qualify a man to cast an intelligent vote, that is the very thing; a man who is in attendance upon a college or a seminary of learning ought certainly to be qualified to cast an intelligent vote.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Committee will allow the Chair, in order to save time, I will suggest that the effect would be that a man would lose residence by being absent at a seminary of learning in another State. As it is now, after an absence of twelve months, he would be entitled to vote, notwithstanding such absence.

Mr. HAWLEY. The words "or lost" do not occur in this part of the section. It reads, "nor gained a residence."

Mr. CROSMAN. I apprehend that the point to be avoided is this: I understand if there should be a seminary of learning here, containing, perhaps, some three or four hundred students, unless there were a provision of this kind, those students might control all the local offices. Such things will be likely to occur if we have seminaries of learning, as we hope we shall have, under this Constitution. I hope, therefore, that the section will remain. If by a six months' residence in a seminary of learning, students could gain a right to vote, they might combine in a way which would be prejudicial to the interests of the permanent population, they themselves being only transient residents.

Mr. FRIZELL. The argument is, that in some particular locality, three, four, or five hundred men, who should be students in a seminary of learning, might control the vote of that particular locality at the polls. Now, if that argument is good, what do you say in regard to the army? That constitutes a perfect combination, and not only that, but they have a military organization, and nevertheless they are allowed to vote. I think, if there is any class of men in the world who should be allowed to vote away from the places of their actual residence, it is that class of men who may be found in an institution of learning.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. The gentleman refers to the soldiers' vote; but soldiers are only allowed to vote for offices in their own States or localities, and not for offices in the State or locality where, at the time of voting, they happen to be stationed or on service.

Mr. FRIZELL. I am aware of that, sir.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In order to make it more distinct, I move to insert after the word "have," in the first part of the section, the words "gained or," so as to read, "for the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence," etc.

Mr. DELONG. I would suggest to the gentleman whether it would not be well to substitute the language which is to be found in Section 4, Article II, of the California Constitution, which, I think, covers the idea of both gentlemen. It reads as follows:—

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States; nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison."

I see nothing in that which would be inapplicable, except it may be, perhaps, the words, "while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State."

Mr. FRIZELL. I think the less said about that the better.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I will offer the section, then, as an amendment, with the navigable waters of this State stricken out, so that it will read:

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States; nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move to strike out all relating to the high seas.

Mr. DELONG. Oh, no! there may be men in the naval service of the United States who go from this State, as well as from any other.

Mr. BANKS. Certainly, men may be in the naval service of the United States from Nevada, and it strikes me that the language is quite proper, and even indispensable.

The amendment offered by Mr. Lockwood was not seconded.

The amendment offered by Mr. Frizell was withdrawn.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's amendment, and it was agreed to.

The section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 4 was read, as follows:—

"No soldier in the army of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed within this State."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. It seems to me that that is entirely covered by the section which we have just adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is so, Mr. Chairman; if I remember the phraseology of the section which we have just adopted, it provides that no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence while in the service of the United States, and I therefore move that this section be stricken out, the ground being already completely covered.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THE SOLDIERS' VOTE.

Section 5 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 5. The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be absent from this State in the military or naval service of the United States; provided, that the payment of a poll-tax, or a registration of such a voter, shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not like the connection of the last part of the section here. It says: "Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections." There is not, in any other part of the article, any provision made, that I can find, for the regulation of other elections, and being in this connection, it may be understood as applying only to elections held by this class of voters. I have prepared a section here, a new section, in relation to general elections, which might come in to explain this Section 5. It embodies the same matter, and I think makes it more harmonious. The section I propose, reads as follows:—

SEC. 5. All citizens of this State in the military or naval service of the United States, if otherwise entitled to the rights of suffrage, may vote at their respective posts or places of rendezvous, for the election of all candidates above the grade of county officers, at such time and in such manner as may be provided by law; and the Legislature shall enact laws to give effect to this provision; provided, that the payment of a poll-tax, or registration, shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting.

I will offer that as a substitute for this section, and will state that I intend to add another section, in these words:—

SEC. —. Laws may be passed excluding from voting all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, larceny, or any other infamous crime; and all persons who have been or may be interested in any wager or bet depending upon the result of any election.

Mr. EARL. I move to strike out from this proposed substitute for Section 5, all that portion which refers to a poll-tax and to registration, as a qualification for voting. It savors too much, I imagine, of property qualification.

Mr. WARWICK. I think there is nothing of that kind in it.

Mr. EARL. I would inquire if the amendment does not anticipate a registry law?

Mr. BROSNAN. It is in anticipation of a registry law, of course. I thought I would provide against any such incumbrance upon the right of the soldier who is shouldering his musket in defense of his country. That is what my amendment does.

Mr. EARL. I have no objection, then, to the amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I do not know that I have a full understanding of the purport of the amendment, but if I am wrong, I trust the gentleman will correct me. I think the difference between Section 5, as it stands, and the gentleman's amendment, is this: that the section allows the soldier to vote for all officers, and the amendment, as the gentleman proposes it, provides that they shall only have the right to vote for all officers above the grade of county officers. Is that the case?

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. Now, Mr. Chairman, we all understand very well, that in many counties in any State, the election of county officers, particularly in large cities, is regarded as perhaps the most important matter to be decided at the election. For instance, in the State of California, the election of county officers in San Francisco is not considered second in importance to the election of any other officers in that State. It is a question upon which the people feel deeply; it is one with which their minds are all engrossed at the time the election comes on. It is a question upon which the soldiers of that State, perhaps, take a deeper interest than they do in the election of Governor. So in this State, if it becomes a State, the fact may be the same. I do hope that a privilege so important as voting for officers of the county governments will not be denied to the soldiers. I see no necessity for such discrimination. If the soldier is capable of judging of the competency of candidates for State officers—many of whom would be men whom he would never see—he certainly would be competent to judge in relation to county officers in his own county, where he is more likely to know the men, their antecedents and qualifications. If any good reason can be shown against the soldiers' right to vote for the minor officers, I would like to hear it, and hope it will be shown.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will merely say that I offered the amendment in this way, not from any desire to exclude the soldiers from voting for these minor offices, but because it is a cumbersome piece of business to obtain the soldiers' vote for every county, stationed, or serving, as they may be, at remote and scattered points. It was merely to save the expense and trouble of getting the returns.

The CHAIRMAN. The Enabling Act contains, I think, certain provisions which this section does not meet. The word "rendezvous" is used where the soldier is in the Territory, and "place of service" is employed when he is absent from the Territory.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will modify it, then, so as to read according to the Enabling Act—that they may vote at their respective rendezvous, if within the State; and if without the State, at their respective places of service—so that it will read:—

"All citizens of this State in the military or naval service of the United States, if otherwise entitled to the right of suffrage, may vote at their respective posts and rendezvous, if within the State, and if without the State, at their places of service, for the election," etc.

Mr. EARL. I will offer an amendment, to strike out the words, "above the grade of county officers," so as to provide that they shall vote for all officers.

Mr. NOURSE. Then I do not see how we gain anything by it, over Section 5, as it now stands. If there is anything to be gained, I should be glad to have it, but if not, my feeling is in favor of retaining the old Constitution. I do not see but what the section in the old Constitution covers the ground as well as this.

Mr. BROSNAN. My object in moving that section, was mainly to avoid the trouble and expense of collecting these scattered returns of the elections of county officers. It may take two or three months to get the returns. But inasmuch as that does not appear to meet with the favor of the Convention, I think the old section covers the case as well, and I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No objection being made, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BROSNAN. I propose now to add to the section the following words: "wherein other provisions are not contained in this Constitution."

[Mr. FITCH in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I think this is a very material and necessary provision, and I will say, it was offered at my instance. The concluding sentence will then read:—

Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections, wherein other provisions are not contained in this Constitution.

Now, this Constitution has elsewhere provided no method for holding elections, and making returns of such elections, and, without the language contained in that amendment, it occurs to me, that no election could be held under the provisions of this Constitution, until after the Legislature shall have convened, and enacted laws in pursuance of this Section 5. I conceive that it is absolutely necessary, therefore, that the amendment, or words of like import, be inserted, so as to give full force and vitality to the provisions contained in other portions of the instrument. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NOURSE. It does not strike me that it is necessary. I take it that the principle is established that any constitutional provision overrides a statutory provision, and where laws are passed by the Legislature, they must relate only to matters not provided for in the Constitution. Where there is a constitutional provision for an election, therefore, no provision made by law can do away with that constitutional enactment.

Mr. JOHNSON. That may be all true. That may be the result of judicial decisions and interpretations of the Constitution, but, by the adoption of the language proposed in this amendment, we leave the question beyond all doubt and uncertainty. We thus give a judicial exposition ourselves, without leaving it for the courts to pass upon hereafter.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the amendment, and it was adopted.

No further amendments being proposed, the section was adopted.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again at a quarter past seven o'clock, this evening.

Mr. DELONG. I object to that motion; the Committee cannot ask leave to sit at a certain time. They can only ask leave to sit again, and the Convention directs the time of that sitting.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to modifying my motion, as it involves a question of parliamentary law. I will move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, and then the Convention can determine the parliamentary question.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair. The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee had had under consideration Article II, entitled "Right of Suffrage," had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was received, and leave granted accordingly.

Mr. DELONG. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. FITCH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that. I have a very necessary and important motion, and I am sure the gentleman will withdraw his motion, if he understands the object of mine.

Mr. DELONG. I do not withdraw it, for any such purpose.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to make a motion, which is in accordance with parliamentary law; I move that when this Convention adjourn, it adjourn to meet this evening at seven o'clock. I believe that that motion has to be put first.

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a point of order upon that motion.

Mr. FITCH. I rise to a point of order, that no point of order is in order when there is a motion to adjourn. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. DELONG stated that his point of order was, that the motion of Mr. Banks was an amendment to a standing rule, and that the question must first be taken on the motion to adjourn.

After some discussion, the point of order having been overruled.

On motion of Mr. BANKS, at five o'clock, the Convention adjourned until seven o'clock in the evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at seven o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

MEMBER QUALIFIED.

J. G. McCLINTON, Delegate from Esmeralda County, took his seat as a member of the Convention, having first taken the oath of office before Judge Wright, and subscribed the same.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WARWICK. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the further consideration of Article II of the Constitution, entitled "Right of Suffrage."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole. (Mr. Warwick in the chair,) and resumed consideration of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 5 having been disposed of at the previous sitting of the Committee, the Secretary will read the next section.

Section 6 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 6. During the day on which any general election shall be held in this State, no qualified elector shall be arrested by virtue of any civil process.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 7 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 7. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by the Legislature, or by either branch thereof, shall be viva voce.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

REGISTRY LAW.

Section 8 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 8. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment, by proper proofs, of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as hereby established.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am not quite satisfied, Mr. Chairman, with the provisions in this Constitution, or its instructions to the Legislature, in regard to regulating the mode of holding elections. This section, to my mind, is not sufficiently full on the subject, and the only other section we have touching it is Section 5, which may be considered as merely providing for the voting of the soldiers. I would therefore move, as an amendment to this section, the following :—

SEC. 8. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment, by proper proofs, of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as hereby established; to preserve the purity of elections; and to regulate the manner of holding and making returns of the same.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will make a suggestion, whether we cannot obviate that difficulty by striking out the word "such," which is next to the last word in Section 5, as printed, and inserting the word "all" in lieu of it, so that that provision would read :—

"Provision shall be made by law regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of all elections, except as herein otherwise provided by this Constitution."

Mr. BROSNAN. My object is that there shall be no mistake about the action of the Convention on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would inquire whether that would not obviate the difficulty and save the necessity of adding a considerable number of words at the end of this section.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am afraid it would not meet the difficulty altogether. I would state that this clause, "to preserve the purity of elections," would necessarily imply the power to impose penalties on persons guilty of infractions of the law, and I deem it proper to interpolate that language here, with that view. Although the Legislature would undoubtedly have a right to impose penalties for infractions of the law, still I prefer to see it written plainly in the Constitution, so as to have no question about that right.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to add, after the word "established," in Section 8, the words, "and the Legislature shall prescribe the proof required to be made in such cases." As I have previously remarked, I consider Section 2 as partaking more of the character of a legislative enactment than properly belongs to a constitution; but, in this case, lest there should be some misapprehension—lest there should be no enactment to which reference could be made in the case of disputed and contested elections, in order to prevent the trouble which might arise, I propose to incorporate that language, that the duty of the Legislature shall be so defined that they will not neglect to make the required enactments prescribing the proper proofs of the qualifications of an elector. It may be regarded as surplusage, but I submit it to the judgment of the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not think the amendment is necessary at all, because the greater includes the less. In the last amendment adopted, we give the Legislature the power to make laws to preserve the purity of elections, and I think all that this amendment proposes is embodied in that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am inclined to think so myself, on reflection, and I will withdraw the amendment.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

POLL-TAX.

Section 9 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax of not less than two, nor exceeding four dollars, from each male person resident in the State of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, one half to be applied for State, and one half for county purposes; and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right of voting.

Mr. EARL. I move to strike out this section. As I remarked previously to-day, it savors too much of a property qualification. Sir, I have seen the time in California, at an early day, when to compel me to pay that four dollars would have taken away my pork and beans. We may all possibly see such a time again. We have even now a pecuniary crisis upon us, and do not know where it will end. I certainly think that section should be stricken out, for it may preclude many good citizens from the exercise of the elective franchise.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before making the motion which I propose to make to amend the gentleman's amendment, I desire to say that it seems to me he is unnecessarily alarmed. This poll-tax is left discretionary with the Legislature.

Thursday.]

EARL—HAWLEY—DELONG—JOHNSON.

[July 7.]

The section says they "may" levy it. It does not say they "shall" do so, and I am very much inclined to think it would be difficult to get together a legislative body in this State which would do so.

Mr. EARL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask him this question: Is "shall" discretionary?

Mr. HAWLEY. The word is "may;" it is in the subjunctive mood.

Mr. DELONG. But "shall" and "may" are synonymous terms in law.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well. I move to amend the gentleman's amendment, by striking out of the section all after the word "purposes;" that is, to strike out "and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right of voting."

Mr. EARL. I consider that this section is merely legislating. We have here provided that the Legislature may raise funds, and that those funds shall be devoted to certain purposes; and I think we are interfering too much with the province of the Legislature.

Mr. DELONG. This provision is under the head of Right of Suffrage. Now, if you strike out this concluding sentence there is not a single thing left in the section which relates to the right of suffrage. It merely provides what the Legislature may do; that it may levy a certain tax upon certain persons, and that one-half shall be applied for State and one-half for county purposes. There is nothing in that which affects the right of suffrage at all, and therefore there is nothing which gives it a place under the head of the Right of Suffrage. If that sentence is stricken out, I shall go for striking out the whole section.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is well known that in almost every State all men are liable to pay a poll tax, and certain means are prescribed by legislative enactments for the collection of such tax. I think, by defining the purpose to which such tax is to be applied, and authorizing and requiring the Legislature to levy it, we do nothing more than we ought to do.

Mr. DELONG. Then put the provision in another place.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am opposed to both amendments. In the first place, as to the legal proposition, though I may encounter difficulty, perhaps, by calling out the gentleman from Storey, [Mr. DeLong] to explain his interpretation, yet I must say that where, in the same section, the word "may" is used in one place, and "shall" in another, it is apparent that they are used in contradistinction to each other; that is, "may" is used with a different meaning from that which attaches to the word "shall," and you cannot, by any reasonable construction, determine in such a case that, when you say "may" you mean to say "shall."

Mr. DELONG. I made that remark in reply to the gentleman from Douglas [Mr. Hawley]. I will say this, that in all public acts where a public body is directed to do a thing by the word "may," it is held that it means "shall." But where the language applies to individuals and not to a public body, "may" means "may." We had that question argued the other day, before Judge North.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? Does not he mean that, when applied to public bodies, the word "may" means "may," and when applied to private individuals it means "shall"?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; there was a case argued a few years ago in which a large number of leading members of the bar participated, and the whole argument was upon the construction to be given to the words "may" and "shall" in the statutes, where a municipal corporation was directed. And it was conceded, after a very full argument, that the word "may" meant "shall" in a law or ordinance which directed a body corporate to do a certain thing. But when the right of private parties was involved, it was differently construed by the court.

Mr. JOHNSON. It matters not what construction may have been given; if it is what we mean by that section it will be so held. In this case both words are used in the same section. In the one case it is imperative, and the word "shall" is used, and in the other, the word used differing from that which preceded it, evidently conveys a different meaning. In the first part of the section we say that "the Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax," etc., and then following that, we say, "and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right of voting." I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Storey is, that the use of this word "may" renders it imperative upon the Legislature to make the payment of the poll-tax a condition precedent to the right to vote. Am I correct?

Mr. DELONG. I do not make it my argument at all, but the same language was used in the act relative to the consolidation of actions, and that is where the argument sprung up to which I have referred. The act said in one section, that in certain cases the courts "shall" consolidate, and in another place, in other cases it said, the court "may" do it. The counsel on the opposite side were contending for this very interpretation of the act—that though the two words were used in the same statute, as here they are used in the same section, they meant the same thing, and must be so construed. And that opinion was concurred in by the judge with the concurrence of eminent counsel after that argument—that in an act directing a thing to be done by a public body, "may" meant "shall."

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think that is a fair illustration. There it is confessedly acknowledged that "shall" was used in reference to a portion of the practice act, and, of course, there was no escaping the binding force of that word. In the other case, where "may" was employed, it was dependent upon that which preceded it, so that it could not avoid the operation of the stronger or more mandatory word which preceded, to wit, the word "shall." Therefore, I say, it is not a fair illustration of the proposition as contained in this section. Now, sir, this section applies to two subjects, and that is an additional argument to that which the gentleman has suggested. If you strike out the latter part of the section, then there is nothing left pertaining to the right of suffrage; therefore there are here two propositions, neither of which is dependent upon the other. One is mandatory, and the other discretionary.

JOHNSON—BANKS—HAWLEY.

[July 7.

Now, sir, I do not like to invoke the action had by the former Convention, because that is a delicate matter, so far as I am concerned, and so far as many other members of this Convention are concerned; but there are some members of this Convention who participated in the deliberations of the former Convention, and in the discussion of this subject, and every one of them will remember full well the report which emanated from the committee of which I had the honor to be chairman, and the discussion which ensued upon it. They will remember the change which was made, and the reasons which suggested that change, in the language of this section. I am free to say that I did then infinitely prefer that the word "shall" should be used where "may" occurs. I was in favor of adopting words conceded to be of a compulsory nature, and we reported it from the committee in that condition, but it was afterwards changed. My friend on my left. (Mr. Brosnan,) made an eloquent and timely appeal to that Convention, which, at a later stage of the proceedings, had a controlling effect, for, with almost unanimous voice, the Convention consented to substitute the word "may" for the word "shall," thus leaving it, according to the understanding of that Convention, discretionary with the Legislature to impose a poll-tax as a condition precedent to the right of voting, or not, as they in their best judgment saw fit. That is my recollection, and I will ask the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Brosnan,) if I am not right. Such is, at all events, my recollection of the proceedings in that Convention, and I know that members at that time entertained the opinion that there was a marked distinction between those two words.

So much for the one branch of the proposition; now for the other. In the first place, if we establish here a State Government, I say now, and I may have occasion to repeat it hereafter when we come to consider a more important feature of this instrument, that I want it to be a self-sustaining Government. I want all within our borders to contribute their just proportion towards the support of that Government. Whether they have little or much property, their interest in the well-being and prosperous condition of the State is the same, and the man who has not a great deal of this world's goods should yet be compelled to pay his quota in that small degree which he has. And such is the object and intent of this section. It is not property alone, but the man himself who is also protected, in all his various relations and interests, by the Government; and it is provided in this section that all male citizens of the age of twenty-one years or over, be they white or black, yellow or copper-colored, shall pay an annual poll-tax in addition to any tax that may be assessed upon their property, for the protection which the Government affords to their persons. I want this clause extended so as to reach every class of individuals. You know, Mr. Chairman, and every gentleman on the floor recognizes the fact, that there are many persons who are the owners of property which is never reached by the tax-gatherer, although they are abundantly able to pay; and I propose, as one individual member of this Convention, that there shall be incorporated in our Constitution such provisions as are best calculated to reach that class of persons.

As to the matter of the right of voting, I am willing to accede, as I did on that occasion, in the former Convention, to the opinions of the majority, and not make the obligation imperative upon the Legislature to incorporate into the statutes a provision that the right of voting shall be conditional upon the payment of the poll-tax. I am willing to leave that to the discretion of the Legislature. If the times be hard, and men find it difficult to raise the small amount of a poll-tax, then the members of the Legislature, coming fresh from the people, may not deem it wise to incorporate into the statutes a provision of that kind; but the next ensuing session the case may be different, and they may deem it the part of wisdom to take that action. I propose, therefore, to leave it to the representatives of the people in the Legislature, although, as I said before, I would personally prefer to make it compulsory upon every voter to pay this poll-tax. Now, I do hope that no part of this section will be stricken out—neither the one making it compulsory upon the Legislature to levy a poll-tax, one-half of the proceeds of which are to go to the State, and the other half to the county; nor the other proposition which authorizes the Legislature in their discretion to make such payment a condition to the right of voting. I am in favor of allowing the Legislature to put in operation such a law whenever they may deem it expedient.

Mr. BANKS. To avoid the difficulty suggested in regard to construction, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is already an amendment pending.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am fully satisfied as to the proper construction to be put upon this language which I propose to strike out, and being fully of the opinion, as expressed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that the poll-tax should be collected, and that the penalty, if any, should be left discretionary with the Legislature. I now withdraw my amendment, in order to leave the section as it now stands.

BANKS—EARL—NOURSE—JOHNSON—BROSNAN.

[July 7.

Mr. BANKS. Then I suppose my amendment will be in order. I offer it to obviate the difficulty in regard to the construction. I move to add, after the word "may," the words, "in its discretion."

Every lawyer knows how easy it is to cite authorities, and to make arguments upon the construction of the words "may" and "shall." I have often, though I am not a lawyer myself, participated in such discussions, and I have found that it was just as easy to advocate one side as the other. [Laughter.] And I often had occasion in the Legislature of California to advocate the insertion of these same words, "in its discretion," in order to avoid that very difficulty of construction. I so fully and exactly agree with the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), as to the necessity of requiring every man to aid in the support of the Government, and especially at this particular time, when we are just entering upon our career as a State, that I will not add anything to his remarks upon that subject.

Mr. EARL. If we are going to say that the Legislature may, in their discretion, do this, why not leave the section out altogether and let them use their discretion? Why should we dictate to them in this matter at all? Has it come to this, that we must have a property qualification? Why, sir, I could find you two hundred men now in our city of Virginia who would be unable to-day to pay that four dollars. I say it savors of property qualification, and I hope to God this Convention will not tolerate the idea. Are we to be disfranchised merely because we are not able to raise four dollars? Is this a republican government, or is it not? Are we to disfranchise not only the young, but the old, because they do not possess wealth? Is that the proposition? I hope the Convention will strike out the section. My friend from Wa-hoe, (Mr. Nourse), has prepared an amendment to another clause of this Constitution, and in the event that this section must go into the Constitution, I hope that amendment will be adopted. But it seems to me that if we reflect a moment we shall see that it is taking away the right of voting from many good citizens, and shall therefore repudiate the idea altogether.

Mr. NOURSE. I cannot feel the force of the remarks of the gentleman from Storey, who has last spoken. It seems to me there are two advantages which the people derive from Government, namely—the protection of persons and the protection of property; and that while property should pay its share for the support of the Government, and for its protection, persons should also pay their share for the protection afforded them by the Government. And

I am particularly and peculiarly in favor of retaining this section, especially that portion of it giving this power to the Legislature—and I hope the Legislature will use it—for the special reason that it will tend greatly to promote the purity of elections. If there should be one or two cases of hardship, such as the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Earl), suggests—and the number of such cases must be very few, where a man cannot raise one, two, three or four dollars—still the advantage to be gained in the aggregate will more than compensate for those cases of hardship. Why, sir, this poll-tax would not amount to more than one day's work of a laboring man, and I do not believe that in this Territory there are any considerable number of laboring men of ordinary industry, who cannot well afford to give one day's work every year to the support of the Government which protects them. And when this is made a condition to the right of voting, if a whole year is given in which to look around and get the money, I think you will find that there will be scarcely a man who will be deprived of the right of voting on that account. In other States, nothing has been found so efficient to make the registration of voters perfect, and so to preserve the purity of elections, as to require the payment of a poll-tax as a condition of the right of voting.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one question which has been asked by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Earl) which I think can be readily answered. He asks why we do not strike out the section altogether, and leave it to the discretion of the Legislature. My reply is, that if you strike it out entirely, and make no provision of the kind, the Legislature can never put it in.

Mr. EARL [in his seat]. I should hope to God they never could.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman now discloses by that sotto voce exclamation his position, and the true ground of his objection—not that the Legislature might do so hereafter, but that he hopes they may never be able to do it.

Mr. EARL. That is so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the gentleman—I say it with all deference—was rather unfair in his argument. He now discloses the whole groundwork of his position. The Legislature can have no discretion in the matter, unless we incorporate a provision in this instrument giving them such discretion.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will not detain the Convention long on this subject, but I cannot, certainly, concur in the doctrines which have been asserted by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson.) If I understand him correctly, he has just said that if this section were omitted from the organic law of the State, the Legislature can never make such a provision afterwards. I say that is not law, neither constitutional nor statutory. I say that all power exists in the Legislature of a State, except so far as the same is limited expressly by the Constitution, and I say that that provision is expressly within the powers of the Legislature—that the subject matter therein is a proper subject of legislation. And inasmuch as it ought not to be in this Constitution, and might well be provided for by an act of the Legislature, I shall vote against the provision, not because I am opposed to the payment of a poll-tax, but because I am opposed to making such payment a condition of the right of voting. For myself, as my friend from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) has stated, I opposed it in the last Convention, with such feeble opposition as I could bring to bear against that side of the question, and such advocacy as I could give to the side I had espoused. I shall not take that course upon this occasion. My views were then given freely and at length; the Convention overruled my objections, and I found no fault on that account. It is true, however, as my friend who has just taken his seat has observed, that they did subsequently modify this section, out of what I considered as a disposition to be courteous toward me, in view of the effort I had made to prevent the incorporation of the language originally proposed. They did alter the last paragraph by changing the word "shall" to "may," making it, as I understood, and as my friend has, I think, correctly observed, discretionary with the Legislature, in the imposing of that tax, to make it a condition of the right of voting.

My objection is, I repeat, that it is a matter subject to and properly within the sphere of legislation, and no man, either learned or ignorant in constitutional or statutory law, will, I think, venture to deny that proposition. No man can successfully maintain that it is not a proper subject of legislative action; and that, therefore, it is here supererogatory, is beyond question. As I said before, all inherent powers of legislation belong to the Legislature of the State, except so far as they may be limited by organic acts or constitutions—by written constitutions, if the State is governed by them, as we are in this country. In other words, in the language of old writers upon government, the Legislature is omnipotent. We have merely limited that omnipotent power, in the United States, by our written constitutions, because we have considered it necessary to put a restriction upon that omnipotence. I shall vote against the section, Mr. Chairman, not because I am opposed to a poll-tax; not because I am opposed to the payment of a poll-tax being made a condition precedent to the right of voting—although I would myself regret to see the day when the boon of the elective franchise should be bought with paltry gold—not because a man has to pay four dollars for the privilege of voting merely, but because it, in some respects, denationalizes a man.

Mr. EARL [in his seat]. That is so.

Mr. BROSNAN [proceeding]. Because it reduces the American citizen to the level of the man who, in other countries, is allowed to vote only because he is possessed of a freehold estate; because it is not putting the estimate upon the man which belongs to him as a man. It is not viewing the man in the light of him who said—

"Rank is but the guinea's stamp;
A man 's a man for a' that."

But I oppose it here not upon that ground particularly, so much as because it is out of place in the Constitution of the State.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should not have arisen to address the Committee again upon this subject, if my very worthy and learned friend who has just taken his seat, (Mr. Brosnan,) had not deemed it proper to attack the legal proposition which I had enunciated to the Committee. Now let us see how the matter stands. The first section of this article as it has already in Committee been adopted, provides as follows:—

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

That, we have already adopted. I assume now, as the predicate of my remarks, that the Convention will ratify what the Committee have done in the adoption of that section. Then, sir, when that is done, and when this Section 9 is stricken out, am I to be told that the Legislature still has the power to impose the payment of a tax as the prerequisite of the right of voting? Is that the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir, it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, I differ entirely with the gentleman, and I now submit to every lawyer within or without this body, and to every member of this Committee, whether such a proposition is not most preposterous? When the Constitution has declared that all persons possessing certain enumerated qualifications shall have the right to vote, the position is advanced that yet it is within the province of the Legislature to declare nevertheless that those persons, if they have not paid a poll-tax, shall not have the right to vote. The proposition reduces itself simply to this: that the Legislature, by their act, may override what is expressed in the Constitution. Now, sir, upon more occasions than the present, have these propositions been advanced. In the Constitution of California—there is one gentleman on this floor who, I know, is a little nervous on the subject of California, and especially California decisions, but this being a political as well as a legal proposition, we may not inaptly refer to that State for illustration of the subject—in the State of California, the Constitution of that State prescribing certain conditions of the right of voting, time and time again has been discussed within the legislative halls of that State the necessity, and, sir, every man on this floor who has ever lived in that State has recognized that necessity, if it could be done under that Constitution, of enacting laws which would more securely protect the purity of the ballot-box. You, Mr. Chairman, have had occasion to recur to your experience and observation there. And why has it not been done? Not because the public pulse did not beat in unison with that demand; not because the necessity of provisions of this character was not recognized; but it was because the Constitution had laid down certain rules and conditions regulating the right of voting, and it was not within the power of the Legislature to transcend those provisions prescribed in that instrument. These are some of the reasons, sir, why California has passed through many scenes of peril; why California has, in earlier years, been a by-word and a reproach, in respect to the exercise of the elective franchise. Sir, the hands of the legislative department were tied—were securely bound—by the provisions of the Constitution. Now, sir, I do not propose further to discuss this question; I am content to submit it, as a legal proposition, to the consideration of every reflecting mind in this Convention. And, whilst I have the greatest of regard and appreciation, as the honorable gentleman from Storey full well knows, for the general correctness of his views upon questions of constitutional and statutory construction, yet, sir, I must, as I have stated, differ entirely with him upon this proposition.

BROSNAN—JOHNSON—EARL.

But, again, I would not leave this a question of doubt, if it could be regarded as at all doubtful. I propose, in unmistakable language, to vest the power in the Legislatures which are to come after us, in the representatives of the people in the legislative department, of incorporating in our statute books a condition of this character. I cannot foresee any of the hardships to result which gentlemen have anticipated. My friend from Storey, (Mr. Earl,) who is opposed to this system, and my other friend from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) have suggested evils to follow such action, but I can see none of those evils. Sir, those who would most prate about the paltry two dollar poll-tax—those in the community who would be most likely to oppose its payment—are generally that class of men who would be likely to spend more in a day for rot-gut whiskey than would suffice to pay the whole of their tax.

Mr. BROSNAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry, which is merely for information, and that is, has the Legislature of California enacted a poll-tax law for which there is no provision in the State Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; they have a poll-tax law; but the Constitution gives the Legislature the power to impose taxes, and that necessarily involves the power to levy a poll-tax. The word tax is used in the Constitution without specifying whether it shall be a tax on realty, personalty, or what. The poll-tax is levied upon every male person of a certain age within the borders of the State. But the proposition I advanced was in reference to this latter clause, this matter of a poll-tax being made a pre-requisite to the right of voting. I repeat that when we have provided in this instrument that all persons possessing particular qualifications shall have the right to vote, we place it beyond the power of the first, or any succeeding Legislature, to impose any additional conditions upon that right. And, sir, for the same reason that the good sense of this Committee has been evinced in incorporating here a provision that the Legislature shall establish a system of registration, I trust we shall also incorporate a provision giving the Legislature power, in its discretion, to require the payment of a poll-tax, as a pre-requisite to the right of voting. Why was not this objection made in reference to the registration clause? If the Legislature had the power to act in reference to this matter without express authority conferred in the Constitution, they certainly would have the power to provide for the registration of voters. But, sir, they will not have the power in either case unless we confer it in this Constitution, and the reverse of that proposition is altogether untenable.

I repeat that, if we are to establish a government here, I want to see it a government which will sustain itself. I want every portion of the community to contribute to its support, and especially those who are apt to complain the most about taxes, while they spend their money for needless and vicious purposes, and generally fail to pay this kind of a tax, when they can avoid it. I am willing to leave the power discretionary with the Legislature to enforce the payment of the poll-tax in this way. I want my friend from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) and my other friend from Storey, (Mr. Earl,) if they represent their constituents in the Legislature, to be at liberty to exercise such discretion as shall best accord, at the time, with the wants and circumstances of the people whom they represent. I want those who represent me to have the power of exercising this discretion, if the public exigencies shall demand or require it. Whilst I think we should go still further, and make it imperative upon the Legislature to impose the payment of a poll tax as a pre-requisite to the right of voting, I am not willing to fall short of the provision as it stands here, and deny them the power altogether.

Mr. EARL. I do not wish to be unfair in my opposition, nor to be misunderstood. The gentleman from Ormsby maintained that if this clause were stricken out, the Legislature never could reach such a provision, and my answer to that was that I hoped to God they never would reach it, and I still hope so. I think I should not be doing my duty to my constituents if I did not strenuously oppose this provision, although I may, perhaps, occupy more of the time of the Convention than I ought. It is a matter of great importance to the people of my county, though it may not be in this county, which the gentleman, (Mr. Johnson,) has the honor to represent. There may be in this county none of that class who would be unable to pay their poll-taxes; but, as I said, there are at least two hundred—yes, sir, I might say a thousand—in our county, as good citizens as you or I, or any other man, whom such a provision would disfranchise, and I, for one, never can consent to do it. If I did, I could not go home with a clear conscience.

So far as relates to the Government being self-sustaining, let it be sustained otherwise than by robbing the poor man of the right of franchise. We can devise other and better means of sustaining our Government.

Now, sir, as to spending money foolishly and unnecessarily, I do not know but I do, but the remark on that subject reminds me of that drunken man who was tottering about in a bar-room, proclaiming that every man around him was drunk, for the reason that he was looking at them with drunken eyes. I do not think that I spend much money unnecessarily; I economise at all times, whether money is plentiful with me or otherwise. I have seen the time when I had plenty of money, and I have also seen the time when I have been without the four dollars which would be required to pay this tax, and that time may come again. I do not know from the appearance of the times but it may be near at hand; but if it does come, I hope I shall stand up to it and not shrink from any responsibility.

I say, let the revenue which is to make our Government self-sustaining come from other sources. I have in my mind a proposition which I think will tend to make the judiciary self-sustaining, and I will submit that proposition in due time. At all events, do not let us make a property qualification, and say to every immigrant, to every man who comes into our State, that he shall not vote unless he has money in his pockets. I know of many men laboring in our mines who to-day could not pay four dollars if called upon—not only foreigners, but American citizens, plenty of of them. Now, sir, if we are going to disfranchise a man for poverty, and come down to a property qualification, I prefer that the voter shall be required to be the owner of a house, as in England, before he can be allowed to vote for representatives.

Gentlemen say it will not be a hardship, but I hope that this republican free Government will never stoop to anything of that kind. Never would I willingly go home and suffer such a clause to remain in the Constitution. I ask if it would not work a hardship upon immigrants, who, when they arrive here, find employment scarce and money unheard of, having, from some mysterious cause, all disappeared? I know that is the case from my own experience, though there may be other members with whom it is more plentiful. I think there is a statute which requires that every man commencing a lawsuit shall have paid his taxes, and I think the statute requires an exhibition of the poll-tax receipt. I do not know as there is much objection to that, but I do strenuously object to having any property qualification for the right of voting enter into this Constitution.

Mr. FITCH. I would like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. EARL. Certainly.

Mr. FITCH. If, in spite of the gentleman's opposition, this provision should go in, what does he propose to do about it?

Mr. EARL. Well, sir, I could only regret to see it there. I should be sorry for it, though it is true I would not be likely to emigrate in order to avoid living under such a Constitution. I do not wish to be responsible for such a provision as this. I shall not vote against the Constitution on that account, if it is put in, but I am satisfied that many will vote against it at the election, and I raise my voice against placing any such clause in the Constitution. I think it will work a hardship, by disfranchising the poor man.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not wish to detain the Committee at all, but I would like to have an opportunity to define my position upon this question, for, strange to say, the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) and myself, for once, agree in every particular. In regard to this section, I, like him, would prefer to see this word "may" changed to "shall"; and if any stronger term could be used, I would like to use that stronger term. I, perhaps, have not a right to state my experience in opposition to that of the other members of this Convention, being its youngest member, but in answer to the gentleman from Storey who last spoke, (Mr. Earl,) who I know has not had the experience, even in this Territory, that I have had upon this subject, I will say this—that I know who it is, in our section of country at least, who complain of this poll-tax. It is not your poor miner, for they have always come up nobly and contributed to that other poll-tax which has been devoted to the noblest of all uses, the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers in our army. It is not those men who object to paying two or four dollars a year, but it is your men who have plenty of funds, whose treasuries are overflowing. They are the men who, in order to throw some impediment in the way of our Government, have invariably complained of and refused to pay this loyal tax. I tell you, there is not an honest miner in this whole country who will refuse to pay his two dollars. Gentlemen have spoken about this amount of four dollars, ignoring the fact that that is the limit, and that the Legislature may fix the tax anywhere from two to four dollars. Those are the limits. I tell you, it is not your honest laboring man who will refuse to come up and contribute to this fund for the support of the Government, and if gentlemen wish to make this an economical and self-sustaining Government, this is one of the best provisions for doing it which they will find contained in the whole Constitution. Let every man feel that his right of suffrage is something worth paying for, even if it is the paltry sum of two dollars.

NOURSE—MURDOCK.

Why, sir, what has been the result of this policy in other States? I came from a State where a law of this kind has been in operation since long before you and I were born—the old State of Pennsylvania. There you always had to pay your poll-tax before you were entitled to vote. Is there any complaint made there? If there were any man so poor that he could not afford to pay the tax, there were always plenty of politicians to pay it for him ten days before the election, so that he should be recorded as a voter. The poor man felt it no inconvenience, and was still able to vote for whom he pleased, and at the same time the Government derived a benefit from it.

Now, sir, this section provides that one-half of the amount of the receipts of this tax shall go to pay the expenses of the State Government, and the other half for the benefit of the county; and, Mr. Chairman, if you pass that measure, your taxes will be so reduced that there can no longer be any dispute among the voters of Nevada Territory as to our capability of sustaining our own Government. And I contend that it is no hardship. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Earl,) says he may not be able to pay it, but I think he is able to pay fifty dollars where I am able to pay one, and I am willing that that should go into the record against me; and, if I cannot raise the two or four dollars, whichever it may be, then I am willing to be deprived of my right of suffrage, although I probably think as much of it as any other man upon this floor. If I have not the money I shall go to work by the day, if necessary, or take any other honorable means to obtain it, in order to secure my right of suffrage. And I think it will be so with every young man in this State. I know of no persons who would be unwilling to pay the tax, unless it be those persons who are altogether opposed to our State Government. The opposition to this feature comes from them, and I know it, because I discussed this question last fall in our county, and I know what the feeling is there. I expressed myself freely, as I always do, and I found that the only men who opposed this feature in the Constitution were the men who opposed the State Government entirely, and for no other reason in the world than because they were unwilling to assist the Federal Government.

Mr. NOURSE. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks of my friend from Storey, (Mr. Earl), although I thought him on the wrong side of the question. On one point, in the heat of his desire to carry his point, I think he has certainly been a little disingenuous, and not quite fair; though, of course, the gentleman did not intend it. His arguments, though very able, do not seem to me to be of a character well calculated to get at the truth in regard to this matter. It seems to me that he did not present this point in its proper light: it is not that we seek to sell this privilege of voting; with all respect to the gentleman, that is not so. The point is this: here this Government protects the persons and property of all that live under it. It protects persons no less than property. Property is taxed without objection to pay for that protection. The tax upon that property can be collected and secured, for the property is there to answer the demand upon it. Then the person is taxed for the protection that Government gives to the person, but that we cannot collect with certainty. We cannot sell the person. How, then, shall we secure the tax? We say that Government having performed its duty to the person, having given the protection of its laws, all the time, to the man, and he having neglected or refused to do his duty in return, to perform his part of the contract, he shall not be allowed to take part in our elections, in forming our government or electing officers to carry it on, until he does perform his part of the contract. There is no sale of the right of voting about it, but the man owes so much to the Government; every man owes it, whatever his proportion may be; and we compel him to pay it under the penalty of forfeiting his share in the Government. We call it a poll-tax, and it is only from two to four dollars a year, as I said before—merely one day's work at the outside.

Now the gentleman from Storey makes the broad assertion that there are thousands in Virginia City, or in Storey County, who cannot pay that amount; but I am yet of the opinion that, except in a very few exceptional cases—cases of sickness or something of that sort—there will be found no person, or no considerable number of persons, at least, in this Territory, who cannot in the course of a year, without any trouble, if he be industrious and temperate, lay aside this amount without any difficulty. We say to every person that he can and must do this. There may be some exceptions, but they only serve to prove the rule. We say to every man, it is your duty to do this, and if you do not comply with this obligation to your Government, you shall have no share in the election of the officers of that Government. Now, is not that fair? and does that savor of property qualification?

Mr. MURDOCK. I trust the committee will indulge me in making a few remarks. I am not accustomed to speaking, but I feel that I could not return to my constituents with a good face without expressing the reasons why I am going to vote no on this occasion. In the first place, I can see nothing in this provision short of a property qualification for the voter. We have in the first place said, that every white male citizen shall be allowed to vote. Now shall we turn around and say that if he happens to be so unfortunate as not to have one, two, three, or four dollars, he shall not vote? The principle is the same—I do not care for

KENNEDY—MURDOCK—EARL—LOCKWOOD.

[July 7.

the amount a picayune—it is the principle I contend for. I say it will impose a hardship in the county I come from. Though I happen to be the only one from that county, yet I represent more territory, and more sage-brush than half a dozen of these gentlemen who represent one county. I represent a great extent of our territory, a large amount of sage-brush, and very few, and very poor men. My constituents are digging and delving in the ground, prospecting and trying to develop the mines. They pay their poll-tax, and I am willing the Legislature should impose upon them a poll-tax of two, four or six dollars, if they wish, and they will pay it. They may make it as stringent as they please, and they will take their coats off and earn it. But for God's sake do not say they shall not vote if they cannot raise the money. Now, gentlemen, would you not be ashamed to say to an old man like me, who should step up to the polls to vote, that he was disfranchised because he was minus four dollars? I would not mind it, perhaps, but that is not it; it is the principle.

In my native State of New York, they once had a provision that every voter must be a householder to the tune of two hundred and fifty dollars, but that provision became obnoxious, and they abolished it. What are you doing here but the same thing? Now the gentleman from Ormsby says, that if you leave this out, the Legislature would have no power to make the poll-tax a condition. Well, I hope to God they will have no power. That is what I stand here to prevent. I should go back with shamefacedness to my constituents, if I did not stand up here and oppose a property qualification for the voter.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. How much is Churchill County paying in the way of poll-taxes now? Did it pay fifty dollars last year?

Mr. MURDOCK. I cannot answer that. I was there last year myself, but I was not the collector. I know that some of them paid, and I know that this year they are paying the poll-tax readily, and they are willing to pay it. I know they are generally disposed to pay their taxes, and, if they are not, I object to their being swindled out of their right to vote. Our county is as loyal, I believe, as any county, and I want every man in it to vote. You may make your law as stringent as you please; you may stop men in the roads and pull off their coats, and pull off their boots, to pay the tax, but, for God's sake, do not deprive them of the right of voting. Those are my views. It is the principle, and not the four dollars, that I am after, though I may not myself be able to pay it, and do not know that I will.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. In Ormsby County, at the present time, I am informed that the poll-tax hardly pays for collecting. Now, sir, I take it that no man in this Convention is trying to disfranchise anybody. The only question, to my mind, is, is it necessary to collect a poll-tax? and if it is necessary, we propose to adopt the most efficient means. Now this bugbear, that any man that is a man, and ought to be entitled to the right of suffrage, cannot raise the paltry sum of two dollars, seems to me like nonsense. I undertake to say that the sum of two dollars would not weigh as much as a feather in the mind of any man in the whole Territory of Nevada, and I believe there are few men in the Territory who did not, during the last year, spend more than two dollars for whiskey. Why, sir, I have no doubt that a majority of men in this Territory have paid out, at the very least, from twelve to twenty-five dollars a year in that way. Now, sir, the man who has not the energy, if he is allowed a whole year to do it, to raise two dollars to pay his poll-tax, ought not, in my opinion, to be allowed to vote.

Mr. EARL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. EARL. I want to know if you make it four dollars, or, if you please, you make it a horse, and demand the four dollars or the horse for the poll-tax, which is it that votes—the four dollars, the horse, or the man?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Really, I do not understand that there is any question about it. I was not talking about horses voting. I was talking about collecting a poll-tax of two dollars, and the most efficient way to do it. One half of this tax, in our county, goes to support the hospital, but we have got no hospital yet, and the fact is, that the tax is not collected. Now, I arrived in California without anything, and I have held my own pretty well for ten years, but I always paid my taxes; somehow, they always found me. [Merriment]. How does it work? Why, you go to ask a man for his tax one day, and he tells you he has got no money, and you must come some other day. They all say that. Well, you visit him three or four times, and charge the county ten dollars for it, while you only collect two or three dollars. I think this provision will secure the payment of the tax, and I think it is just and ample. To hear gentlemen talk here, one would think that the poll-tax was something new, or something preposterous; while in fact it has been in force ever since we have had a government of any kind. I hope the amendment will be rejected, and the section pass, exactly as it is.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to make one statement in regard to the speech of the gentleman from Churchill. (Mr. Murdock.) as I am a little acquainted with the finances of his county. I know that that county, in connection with Lyon, ran in debt, the first year of our organization, five thousand dollars, and Churchill County, since that time, has not paid fifty dollars in poll-taxes, and, I believe, never will.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have lived there some time, and I happen to know something about that. They do pay their poll-tax now, in proportion to the number of inhabitants, and the amount they have paid will come to much more than that, according to the records. I think they have paid as much, if not more, than the county which they were so unfortunately attached to, and they will have no more delinquents, in proportion to their population, than that county will.

Mr. KENNEDY. During last year?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes, during last year. Now, then, I wish to say something to the gentleman who was last up, (Mr. Lockwood,) who spoke about poll-taxes as not being new and unheard-of. Everybody knows that poll-taxes have been collected, and it is not so terrible a thing to collect them as some gentlemen suppose: people grumble a good deal, but they pay. I have done some of that collecting business in California, and I know it is not a hard thing to collect poll-taxes. Another reason why I am opposed to this section would be this: A man being a little short, and unable to raise four dollars, politicians would hover around him, and try to get him to go for What's-his-name, for Sheriff, on condition that they would pay his poll-tax. I know that some men, for the privilege of voting, would be willing to vote for the devil, for high-priest [laughter], and so, for the privilege of voting, they would sell their votes to politicians. I do not want that class of men to have anything to do with it.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to inquire of the gentleman, if that illustrative remark applies to Churchill County.

Mr. MURDOCK. No, sir; not particularly. I know that the poll-tax is no new thing, but the idea of making it a condition of voting is what I object to. I would as soon a man should say to me, "you shan't vote unless you own a pair of good horses," as to say, "you shan't vote unless you have got four dollars." If you can make it four dollars now, when the times are easy you might put it up to twenty-five or fifty dollars, and so make more money by it. In that way, by making it a condition of voting, we would have a rich State here presently, but I do not want a rich State on any such terms. It is the principle that I go for.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to ask if there are going to be many candidates for office in case this Constitution is adopted, because if gentlemen are themselves going to be candidates, they had better vote against it, or all the bunnies will be after them to pay their poll-taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that, in his opinion, there is no gentleman in the Convention better qualified to answer that question than the gentleman from Storey himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELONG. I accept the explanation. But in all seriousness, I would say to those who intend to be candidates, that they had better vote against this whole section. I hope that gentlemen will vote for this amendment, however, so that if the section is not stricken out, it may at least be improved.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, to insert after the word "may," the words, "in their discretion," and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. I move to amend, by striking out the words "of the age of twenty-one years or upwards," and inserting instead the words "between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years," so that the section would read:—

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax of not less than two nor exceeding four dollars from each male person resident in the State, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, one-half to be applied for State and one-half for county purposes; and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right of voting.

Mr. EARL. I shall vote for this amendment, because I want to make it as little obnoxious as possible; but I hope the section will not be adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "upwards," or rather after the words "sixty years," as now amended, the words "Indians excepted."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Earl, to strike out the entire section, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN. I propose to amend the section by striking out the words, "one half to be applied for State, and one half for county purposes," and inserting in lieu thereof, the words, "to be devoted to the support of common schools."

Mr. NOURSE. Then we lose every dollar for county revenue. If this poll-tax is taken from general purposes, and applied to schools, we certainly shall be short in our county finances. I think we should be just before we are generous, and provide the means for the payment of our county expenses, which must be met before we go to giving away money to the schools.

Mr. HAWLEY. As superintendent of public schools in the county I live in, I have had occasion to examine very closely the general condition of the school fund, and the approximate amount, at least, likely to be realized from the taxes which will be devoted to the purposes of education during the next year. So far as my own county is concerned, I am satisfied that ample provision is made by the enactments already on the statute book, to meet all the necessary and ordinary expenses, and to leave, probably, a surplus over and above those expenses. And in conversations I have had with the Superintendent of Public Instruction for the Territory, I have been led to believe that the common school system will derive from the present system of taxation—which will probably be continued, if we become a State, until the Legislature shall see fit to remodel it—a sufficient amount of revenue to meet all necessary and ordinary expenses in all the other counties in the Territory or State. I, sir, would not probably be a member of this Convention if it had not been for the earnest desire in my county, that some man from that county should be sent here, who would take a peculiar interest in the subject of education. I came here for the purpose, more particularly, of paying special attention to that subject, more than to any other that may come before us. I will state, that in my opinion, the position taken by the gentleman from Washoe. (Mr. Nourse), is correct, that the new State will need all the revenue derivable from all sources in the way of taxation, to enable it to carry on the functions of government without embarrassment; and therefore I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Storey will not prevail, but that the funds to be derived from the poll-tax will be applied in the manner originally proposed by the section under consideration, as adopted by the former Convention, whose labors we have taken as the basis of our action.

Mr. EARL. I shall vote for the amendment, and I hope it will pass. It is true, the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) seems to think they will obtain all that is necessary to maintain the schools under the present system, and the gentleman from Washoe. (Mr. Nourse,) is of the same opinion. I think it is very likely that that is true in our agricultural counties, but we have a very heavy population in our county, and a great many children to take care of, and I submit to this Convention whether we should not prepare ourselves for the education of those children. Are we to let them grow up without education? I have seen and felt the want of education myself, and I hope we shall have a large and liberal fund for educational purposes.

Mr. CHAPIN. I beg leave to say only a few words on this subject. I should regret very much to have the amendment offered by my friend and colleague adopted. Not but what I feel as deep an interest as any man in the welfare of common schools. But if gentlemen peruse this document—the old Constitution—through, they will see that the most ample provisions have been made for common schools. In regard to Storey County, I will say that that county, at this time, needs money more for hospital and other purposes than she does for common schools. And it is the same in this county, and every other county. They need it for county purposes, and I do hope my colleague will withdraw his amendment. The State will need her share. The tax will raise a handsome fund. If we have 14,000 voters, as we probably shall have, a tax of two dollars apiece will raise $28,000; or, if the Legislature fixes it at four dollars, it will amount to $56,000. That will be a very material aid in the support of our new State Government, and for the payment of the necessary expenses of the counties. I do hope that the section will remain as it is.

Mr. BROSNAN. My friend and colleague,

(Mr. Chapin.) refers to the ample provision which has been already made, in that Constitution which has not been adopted by the people of this Territory, for our common schools. I would remind the gentleman of the fact, and that is one of the reasons why I offered the amendment, that by the Enabling Act a large portion of the fund upon which we then calculated for public schools, is diverted from that channel—that is to say, the percentage derived from the sales of public lands. By the terms of the Enabling Act we cannot devote that percentage to the common schools, and therefore we are divested of that item so far as relates to educational purposes, being constrained by the Enabling Act to devote it to other purposes. That is according to my construction of the Act, and that is one of the reasons why I have moved this amendment.

I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot entirely agree with the gentleman from Douglas who has just spoken, (Mr. Hawley,) in regard to the prosperous condition of our common schools. If I am correctly informed by the State Superintendent, there is great need of funds for building school houses. I am informed that even in Douglas County a man might thrust his hands between the planks or boards which cover the school house there, and, if that be the case, I can think of no more sacred use to which this fund derived from the poll-tax can be put, than to the building and repairing of school houses for the improvement of the rising generation.

Mr. CROSMAN. Like other gentlemen who have spoken on this subject, I am willing to do what we can for the common schools, to nourish them and aid them; but I hope all the friends of this section will vote against this amendment, because it is not a friendly move towards the section. This money will be more needed for the purposes of the State and county governments than for the schools.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise for the purpose of explaining a statement which appears to have been made by the Superintendent of Public Instruction of this Territory, in relation to a school house in Douglas County. It is very probable that when he was there he found the school houses in a very dilapidated condition. But since he has been there, in the extreme southern district of the county, they have built a frame school house, at a cost of five or six hundred dollars, and it is now completed and will be hard-finished. In the Genoa precinct, a brick school-house, to cost about $2000, is building. It will be ready for occupancy in January, and only four hundred dollars remain unpaid of the entire cost. Twelve hundred dollars were raised by private subscription. In the extreme northern district, they have raised two hundred dollars, and preparation has been made to expend it for repairs. The school house will be thoroughly repaired, ceiled, painted, and furnished anew, and I think I may say, without boasting of our affairs at all, that we shall have as good school accommodations, and as accomplished teachers, also, in the three districts of our county, as can be found, at any rate in any of the cow counties, in this Territory. We cannot expect to compare, of course, with the wealthy county which the gentleman from Storey represents, but I think our schools are in a very creditable condition. Moreover, we have received from the public school fund three or four hundred dollars to expend in supporting our schools, and we do not owe any teacher a dollar. We have four or five hundred dollars to our credit, besides a prospect of probably a thousand dollars before December next.

Mr. BROSNAN. I wish to remove an impression which seems to rest upon the mind of my friend from Lyon. (Mr. Crosman.) that this is not a friendly move. I declare to the gentleman that I have no hostile motive whatever respecting this provision, and have been actuated by no such feeling in offering this amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN. I give notice that I shall move that amendment in Convention, and call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. EARL. I move to amend the section by striking out so much as provides that the tax shall be devoted to State and county purposes, and inserting instead, "to the Sanitary Fund during the war."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule the amendment out of order.

No further amendments being offered, the section was adopted.

THE VOTE UPON THE CONSTITUTION.

Section 10 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 10. All citizens of the United States and bono fide residents of the Territory of Nevada, at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be held under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors herein provided, shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election, and upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have an amendment to offer as a substitute for Section 10.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows:—

SL. 10. All citizens of the United States and bono fide residents of the Territory of Nevada on the twenty-first day of March, A. D. 1864, qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory, shall be qualified to vote for or against this Constitution.

Mr. PROCTOR. My object in offering this amendment is to comply with the provisions of the Enabling Act, which I will read:—

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory, at the date of the passage of this act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe, and also to vote for the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution.

This act was approved March 21, 1864.

Mr. FITCH. I do not exactly see the occasion of this amendment, and I hope it will not prevail. As I understand the Enabling Act, it provides that all persons who were qualified to vote for representatives to the last General Assembly shall be competent to vote for delegates to this Constitutional Convention.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes, sir, and to vote for or against this Constitution.

Mr. FITCH. But cannot we extend the privilege?

Mr. JOHNSON. It reads that they may vote for or against the Constitution "under such rules and regulations as the said Convention may prescribe." That is the language.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move to strike out the section entirely. It belongs in the schedule. I move that as an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken; but even if it does belong in the schedule, it is in the power of the Convention to arrange it afterwards. This appears to me, however, to be the proper place for it, right here in the article on the right of suffrage, because it is prescribing the qualifications of voters. And furthermore, I think my friend from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) is laboring under a misapprehension as to the purport and meaning, not only of this section, but of the language employed in the Enabling Act. Now, sir, by reference to that act, I find that it is true in part, as stated by him, that the laws which had existed in the Territory shall and do prescribe the qualification of electors in the election of delegates to this Convention. But, sir, beyond that Congressional action has not gone. Beyond that it is left in the power of this Convention to prescribe the qualifications of those who are to vote for or against this Constitution. I will read the provision:—

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory, at the date of the passage of this Act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe;— This absolutely fixes the qualification of voters for that election; and what follows is divided from the first part by a semicolon:—

—"And also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention, under such rules and regulation as the said Convention may prescribe."

Here are two clauses—one clearly relating to the election of delegates, and the other as clearly relating to voting upon the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution. Such being the fact, I think it is entirely within the province of this Convention to prescribe the qualifications of voters upon this instrument, and from thenceforth. All that Congress proposed to do was to fix the qualifications with reference to the election of delegates to the Convention,

CROSMAN—PROCTOR—COLLINS—JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 7.

and the representatives of the people so elected were then to have the power to prescribe such conditions of voting thereafter as, in their good judgment, might be deemed proper. And for the reasons which I suggested in the first place, I trust that the motion to strike out entirely will not prevail; and for the further reason, that the section does not conflict with the Enabling Act, I hope the motion of my friend from Nye to amend will not prevail.

Mr. CROSMAN. I was under the impression that this Enabling Act provided for this election, and therefore I thought the section was out of place. After the explanation given by the gentleman from Ormsby I am satisfied, and will withdraw my motion.

Mr. PROCTOR. I look upon this portion of the Enabling Act as giving us power to provide how the election is to be held, but not power to fix any rule touching the qualification of voters at all.

Mr. COLLINS. Upon reading this section, I am rather impressed with the conviction that the gentleman from Nye is correct in his interpretation. I will read it all:—

“That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the general assembly of said Territory at the date of the passage of this Act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe”;—

That is for the election of delegates, and that which follows, providing for the election upon the Constitution, relates to the same persons who were qualified to vote on the 21st of March last. It is a continuation of the same sentence, conjoined by the word “and,” as gentlemen will perceive:—

—“And also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention, under such rules and regulations as the said Convention may prescribe.”

Not in this instance under rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor, but the same persons are to vote under such rules and regulations as the Convention may prescribe. I think the language is very clear and explicit, and that those persons who, under our Territorial laws, were entitled to vote at the time the Enabling Act was passed, by the very reading of that Act will be entitled to vote for the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am very sorry indeed, on this or any other occasion, to be under the necessity of disagreeing with my friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) but my convictions are the same now as when I before addressed the Committee on this matter. I cannot conceive that there is any doubt of the power of this Convention to prescribe rules and regulations for the voting on the Constitution. Now, sir, the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) has sought to make a distinction between a rule and a law. What is a law but a rule? Why, sir, one of the very earliest writers upon law, in one of the first text-books placed in the hands of the student, defines law to be a rule of action. Upon this point there could, I think, be no question—namely, as to what was the intent of Congress in adopting that section. They had no conception probably of what provisions were contained in our Territorial laws in respect to the qualifications of voters, but so far as Congress has legislated, it has proposed to indicate what should be the manner of electing representatives to this Convention, and when that was done, then the Convention was clothed with the power prescribed in that Enabling Act. Then the Convention, composed of representatives of the people, had authority to say who should vote upon the adoption or rejection of the instrument they were framing, as well as who should vote for the officers thereafter to be elected. From thenceforth was removed from the halls of Congress the power of prescribing to us the rule of action, in respect to the qualification of voters.

I repeat that the word “rule,” or “regulation,” cannot be construed in any other sense than it would be if the word “law” had been employed instead. Why, sir, it is perfectly preposterous and absurd to say that an instrument shall be framed containing certain propositions, and that while you give a certain class power to vote upon the rejection or approval of that instrument, you at the same time say that the framers of it shall not have the right to declare that certain persons shall be prohibited from voting for the rejection or approval of that instrument, though they may have the right, at the same time, to declare who may and may not vote for officers to be elected under it. It is too preposterous for belief that Congress ever sought to do any such thing. Now, sir, in my mind, there is no doubt that the latter clause in the portion of this section which has been read, invests the Convention absolutely with the power of prescribing the conditions upon which all or any persons shall vote for or against the Constitution, and for officers to be elected under it. For that reason, I think this section should be retained as it now stands. Do not let us assert that Congress has said, much less done, so foolish and inoperative a thing as to prescribe the qualifications of voters upon this instrument.

Mr. DELONG. Upon examination of this Section 3 of the Enabling Act, I have come to the conclusion that it would be very dangerous to submit this Constitution with a provision regulating the qualification of electors different from what is prescribed in this section. The section says as plainly as anything can be, that all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the Assembly at the date of the passage of this Act, which was March 21, 1864, shall also vote upon the question of the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution. Now, why cannot we just as well save the whole matter by amending this section in the old Constitution so as to read in the language of this Act:—

Thursday.]

JOHNSON—DELONG—BANKS—FITCH.

[July 7.

"All persons who are citizens of the United States, and qualified electors, and bona fide residents of the Territory of Nevada on the twenty-first day of March, 1864, shall be entitled to vote," &c.

That, I think, would reach the whole thing. I think it would be unsafe to disqualify a man who was a qualified voter at the time of the election of delegates to this Convention. Perhaps it would be as well to provide that all who were voters on the twenty-first of March, or have since become so, shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman read the whole clause, or sentence?

Mr. DELONG. Yes, sir. It says:—

"That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory at the date of the passage of this act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for, and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe";—

That is one complete provision, and then follows:—

—"And also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention, under such rules and regulations as the said Convention may prescribe."

Now, will it be pretended that the Convention may prescribe such rules and regulations as will not allow them to vote at all? It says they may vote under such regulations as we may prescribe, but we cannot prescribe such regulations that they shall not be able to vote at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. We might prescribe rules which would prohibit anybody from voting. I think it is absurd to say that we cannot prescribe whatever rules and regulations we deem proper.

Mr. DELONG. I say it is absurd, also. We agree, possibly, better than the gentleman supposes. I think we had better pass over that one clause, and give members an opportunity between this time and the next meeting of the Convention, to draft a section which will suit the purpose. I am a little afraid to vote upon it, either one way or the other, as it now stands; I do not think it will answer the purpose. I certainly do not think we can prohibit any man from voting on the Constitution who was a qualified elector at the time of the election of the delegates. I think we have got to say they may vote, and as to permitting any person to vote that was not a voter on the twenty-first day of March, I am not so certain. I will ask for the reading of the substitute of the gentleman from Nye.

The substitute was read.

Mr. DELONG. What is the objection to that?

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not think it covers the ground.

Mr. DELONG. I see that a person may have since become a qualified elector, and yet, under a strict construction, he would not be entitled to vote. I think it possible that we are getting the thing mixed. [Merriment.]

Mr. BANKS. This is a much more serious matter than I supposed it was when we first commenced to consider it, and I must say that the spirit of the language here differs very radically from the letter. Now if there is any meaning in the language at all, it provides that those who at the date named were electors, shall have the right to vote upon the adoption of the Constitution. But there is this other, and very important question that I would like to see discussed somewhat, which has not yet been referred to except by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) incidentally; that is, that those who might not have been electors upon that day named, although they would be entitled to vote upon other matters to be voted upon at the coming election to be held for the purpose of adopting or rejecting the Constitution, would not be entitled to vote upon that very question. Now if we construe this Enabling Act as conferring power to vote on this question upon a certain class, and that those upon whom that power is not conferred cannot vote upon it, then we must arrive at the conclusion that those who were not voters on the twenty-first of March last, cannot be permitted to vote at all upon this Constitution. And I understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nye, provides for just that thing—that those who were qualified at that time, shall be allowed to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution, and that all other persons who, since that time, may have become qualified voters, shall not be allowed to vote upon that question.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will suggest that a clause has been prepared which will cover that objection.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to another clause in this same Enabling Act:—

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, that in case a Constitution and State Government shall be formed for the people of said Territory of Nevada, in compliance with the provisions of this Act, that said Convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of said State, for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein, at which election the lawful voters of said new State shall," &c.

Mr. BANKS. That says "the lawful voters of said new State." I would like to hear an expression of the opinions of gentlemen upon that point before we vote. I would like to hear the section read as now proposed to be modified by the gentleman from Nye.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

"All citizens and bona fide residents of the Territory of Nevada on the twenty-first day of March, A. D. 1864, qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory, and all who have become qualified voters and electors since that date, shall be qualified to vote for or against this Constitution."

Mr. BANKS. I understand that that covers the ground entirely. It provides that all who

Thursday.]

DELONG—PROCTOR—BANKS—DUNNE—HOVEY.

[July 7.

were voters at the date mentioned, whether they have gone out of the Territory, or in any other way have become disqualified under the Territorial laws, or not, shall be allowed to vote, and, also, every person who since that date has acquired a residence and the right to vote in this Territory. I understand that that is the condition of the thing, and, under the provisions of the Enabling Act, I certainly feel that it is indispensable for us to adopt that amendment. As I look at it, it is necessary for us to adopt a provision in conformity with this Enabling Act.

Mr. DELONG. Why should we leave out that they are "entitled to vote for the election of all officers?" I do not see why that is left out.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think that is provided for in the Organic Act.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that last year the officers were to be elected at the same time that the people voted upon the ratification of the Constitution, but this year I do not understand that there are any officers to be elected at that time.

Mr. DUNNE. From all the lights I have before me in the case, I do not think the last amendment proposed is necessary, nor that it will be in accordance with the Enabling Act. I think one great cause of the difficulty of understanding this subject has been, and is, that gentlemen forget the circumstances under which we are forming this Constitution. We are acting here under very peculiar circumstances. We are forming this Constitution simply and entirely by the permission of Congress. Congress has provided that if we comply with certain restrictions and requirements, which are laid down by the Enabling Act, in framing our Constitution, the President of the United States may, by proclamation, admit the State into the Union, with that Constitution. But there is no power to admit the State unless we do comply in all respects, and it depends wholly upon our having complied strictly in every particular with the Enabling Act. The case is therefore different from that of a community seeking of its own motion to become a State in the Union. In such a case, the Convention might make whatever limitations, rules and regulations they might see fit, because they would have still to go before Congress with their Constitution, and with their rules and regulations in connection with it, and then, if Congress chose to approve of their action, well and good; they would be admitted. Under such circumstances we would have a right to make these experiments—to make whatever regulations and restrictions we pleased, and then take our chances for admission by Congress. But we have no such liberty allowed to us here, as I understand it. The President can only, by proclamation, admit this State into the Union, if the people should adopt the Constitution, when it can be shown that we have complied in every particular with the Enabling Act granting us permission to form that State Constitution. Now Congress has pointed out, as I think, most distinctly, what course we are to follow in this regard. It defines most clearly who the persons are who shall be allowed to vote upon the adoption of the Constitution. It says most distinctly that only such persons shall vote upon that question as were authorized to vote for representatives under the Territorial law at the time of the passage of that Act.

Mr. BANKS. "Only?" Where does the gentleman get that word "only?"

Mr. DUNNE. It limits and defines it as distinctly as it can be done, in these words:—

"And be it further enacted, That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory at the date of the passage of this Act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe; and also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection," etc.

As I understand it, there are no other persons qualified to vote upon this Constitution, and if we allow any other persons to vote upon it, our Constitution will have been unlawfully adopted. And the same would be true if we did not allow all those persons to vote. Now, in the first part of Section 5, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) where the phrase "lawful voters" is used, it means, to my mind, not lawful voters under our laws, for the election of all officers, but lawful voters under the Enabling Act, under which this Constitution is framed, and according to this Act, those only are lawful voters who were legally qualified electors for representatives on the 21st day of March last. As I understand it, we have no right to allow any other persons to vote upon the adoption or rejection of the Constitution, and if we do allow other persons to vote, then the election would be fraudulent of itself, and the President would not be authorized to admit the new State by proclamation.

Mr. HOVEY. I understand that the reporters for the press here would like some opportunity to prepare their reports, and, as many of us are pretty well tired out, I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair, The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article II of the Constitution, had made some progress therein, and had directed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. DELONG. If the Convention is going to hold evening sessions, I propose that we meet at ten in the morning, instead of nine; then we can sit till twelve; meet again at one o'clock, and sit till five: then take a recess till seven o'clock, and sit in the evening as late as we please. I therefore move that the Convention adjourn till to-morrow at ten o'clock. The reporters must have some time to write out their notes, or we shall be entirely ignored by the press.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move to adjourn till to-morrow at nine o'clock.

Mr. DELONG. Very well, I am agreeable; I am satisfied that I am generally wrong on time. [Merriment.]

The question was taken on Mr. Crosman's motion, and it was agreed to.

Accordingly, at twenty-five minutes past nine o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FIFTH DAY.

CARSON, July 8, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, and, in the temporary absence of the President, was called to order by Mr. KINKEAD, on whose motion Mr. COLLINS took the Chair as President pro tem.

The roll was called and twenty-seven members were present. Those who failed to respond to their names were Messrs. Ball, DeLong, Fitch, Haines, Jones, Morse, Parker, Starrevant, Wellington, Wetherill, Williams, and Mr. President.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. A. F. White.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

During the reading of the Journal the President appeared and took the Chair.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. KENNEDY. Pursuant to notice given yesterday, I offer the following:—

Resolved, That the Convention, on and after this date, hold evening sessions, commencing at seven o'clock, P. M.

The question was stated on the adoption of the resolution.

[Mr. COLLINS in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON [the President.] I had hoped that there would be something said upon this subject by some other member of the Convention, for it occurs to me there are potent reasons why we ought not, at least at this stage of our proceedings, to adopt this resolution. It was probably well enough to hold an evening session as we did last night, but it is within the knowledge of the Convention that a number of standing committees have been created, to some of which, no doubt, will be intrusted matters of great moment, and if these committees are to be of any service to this Convention, it is quite important that they have some time allowed for the purpose of transacting the business delegated to them. Now, if this resolution be adopted, what time will those committees have to consider such business and prepare their reports? We meet here at nine o'clock in the morning, and take a recess from twelve to one o'clock—only one hour—we then sit from one to five o'clock in the afternoon, and then it is proposed by this resolution that we take a recess from five to seven o'clock, allowing only two hours for dinner. Then, if we meet at seven o'clock, under this resolution, our session may be extended indefinitely to any hour of the night. Under that arrangement I think it must be perfectly apparent that no time will be allowed for the labor of committees in the transaction of the business intrusted to them. And, in addition to that consideration, we have here an Official Reporter who has certain laborious duties to perform; and we have also a Secretary, and his assistant, every moment of whose time, it must be evident to gentlemen, is occupied, during our session, in simply keeping the minutes and arranging the papers and documents. The Secretary should be allowed sufficient time to write up his minutes, or he will be unable to give us, the next morning, an intelligible record of our proceedings of the preceding day. After a week or two, when the committees shall have completed their labors, and we find that the Convention has nothing to do but to discuss the matters before it, if it shall appear that the session of the Convention is being unreasonably protracted, it may be well enough to hold evening sessions, but at present it occurs to me that it is altogether unadvisable. I really do not think we shall gain anything by it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How long did the Committee on the Judiciary, of which he was a member, sit during the last Convention?

Mr. JOHNSON. There were several members of that committee who did not attend its sessions. At one session I remember there were four in attendance for about a half an hour. Subsequently, Mr. Stewart, the Chairman, made repeated efforts to get the committee together, but failed to do so, except on one occasion. After that the business of the committee was transacted mainly by Mr. Stewart and myself. The committee was not in session, as a committee, to exceed perhaps two hours in the aggregate, but if the members of that committee had performed their duties as they should have done, the committee would have been in session a much longer time. I bestowed a great deal of labor upon the business properly belonging to that committee, and Mr. Stewart did the same, and we then compared notes. It does not follow, however, that the committee ought not to have met, or ought not to have had opportunities for meeting. I hope this resolution will not be passed this week, at least; let us see what progress we make, and then, if we find it necessary, we can hold evening sessions.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will amend the resolution so as to hold evening sessions commencing next Monday.

Friday.]

JOHNSON—TOZER—DUNNE—CHAPIN—KENNEDY—BROSNAN.

[July 8.

Mr. JOHNSON. My only objection to that is, aside from considerations existing at the present time, that we do not know that there will be any necessity for evening sessions. Though I am opposed to the proposition now, yet at some future stage of our proceedings, when I conceive the necessity has arisen. I may be in favor of evening sessions. I prefer to postpone the subject till the necessity shall arise hereafter, if it shall arise.

Mr. TOZER. The labor of the Judiciary Committee of the last Convention, or the result of that labor, is now the property of the people of this Territory, and this Convention has resolved to make use of that public property. The gentleman from Ormsby tells us that individual members bestowed a great deal of labor upon the subject. Very well; we have adopted the results of their labor as a part of our own, and therefore we have all the benefit, without the necessity of losing time upon the subject. I do not know that any new matter is likely to come before the Judiciary Committee, or before any other committee of this Convention, that will so occupy them that we cannot hold evening sessions for an hour or two each evening, at least, and so greatly expedite our labors, and bring about an early adjournment. We now meet at nine o'clock, and occupy a considerable part of the time in parliamentary quibbles and pointless debates, which enlighten none of us. If we continue that course we shall prolong the session a week or two unnecessarily, and few of us can afford that.

Mr. DUNNE. I agree with the gentleman who last addressed the Convention, in regard to the time required by the Committee on the Judiciary to make their report. I think they will, in all probability, have ample time, even if we hold evening sessions, to prepare their report between now and Monday, and I do not think there is any chance of reaching that article, in its regular course, before that time. I imagine there is but very little change proposed to be made in that regard, upon the basis of action which we have adopted here: and I think there will be plenty of time for the committee to do all they have to do between this time and Monday. In regard to the Official Reporter, I recognize most distinctly the point made by the gentleman from Ormsby, our worthy President, respecting the additional labor which will be imposed upon him by holding evening sessions, and I will also recognize the propriety of giving him additional compensation, in consideration of such additional labor; and in the event of the adoption of this resolution, I shall propose to pay him one half-day's additional salary for each evening session. I am willing to make this distinction in favor of the Reporter only, for as to these other gentlemen, I do not think if we continue in session in the evening, it will make any considerable or material addition to their labors. I would like to see these evening sessions decided upon, because I think they will shorten our labors very much. As to the Secretary, I also recognize the point that it will be impossible for him to write up his minutes and report them the next morning, if he has to attend here at the desk in the evening; and as we wish to get through speedily, and it is all one thing whether we do it by working an additional time at night, or during the day, I would be in favor of having an additional Secretary to write up the minutes—anything and everything to shorten the session. I hope the resolution will prevail.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have been in favor of having evening sessions, in order to accomplish all we can, if it was any way consistent to do so; but there are many objections urged against evening sessions, and now, as a sort of a compromise, until we can hold our sessions a larger number of hours, I propose this as an amendment to the resolution:—

Resolved, That the daily sessions of this Convention be as follows: From nine o'clock, A. M., to one o'clock, P. M., and from two o'clock, P. M. to six o'clock, P. M.

Thus we gain one hour, in broad daylight, for the business of the Convention, and have the evening before us for the labor of the committees. I am sure that will shorten our labors.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to state my objection to that resolution. It provides for a session here, from nine o'clock in the morning till one o'clock in the afternoon—four hours, without intermission or rest—and I do not want to be shut up in this room for four hours at a time. I would prefer, if gentlemen are anxious to give the committees an opportunity to meet, that we should give them till three o'clock some afternoon, or even give them the whole of some afternoon in which to make up their reports, but let us have our night sessions—more frequent sessions, but shorter, at any rate; I do not care whether they are in the night or not. By having more frequent and shorter sessions we shall get through with more business, because, after we have been sitting here three hours at one time, we are all tired out, and unable to do anything well. Besides, this resolution would keep us here during the heat of the day, and I think that is possibly a mistake in the present arrangement. We ought not to meet till two o'clock in the afternoon, and so give all the officers and the committees the time from twelve till two o'clock. That, I think, is the best time to get the committees together; because I remember, at the Convention last year, it was very difficult to get meetings of the committees in the evenings, and we used to call meetings after the adjournment in the morning. I think this amendment of the gentleman from Storey would certainly wear us all out.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will move as an amendment, that we meet at nine o'clock, sit till twelve, and then take a recess till two o'clock.

Mr. BANKS. Does that contemplate evening sessions?

Friday.] BROSAN—CHAPIN—DUNNE—FRIZELL—TOZER—DELONG—WARWICK—MURDOCK. [July 8.

Mr. BROSAN. It leaves that matter open for the present. I will ask for the reading of the resolution as it would be with my amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:—

Resolved, That the daily sessions of this Convention be as follows: From nine o'clock, A. M., to twelve o'clock, M.; and from two o'clock, P. M., to six o'clock, P. M.

Mr. CHAPIN. I do not like that amendment; it is cutting our time all up. I would rather retain the old arrangement, giving the committees the whole evening, and in that way they can accomplish much more. Now we only get fairly warmed up, and ready for work in the morning.

Mr. DUNNE raised a question of order, that the original resolution being an amendment of the rules, the amendment of Mr. Crossman was an amendment in the third degree, and could not, therefore, be entertained.

The point of order was not sustained.

Mr. FRIZELL. Industry and close application are good things, but it is within the bounds of possibility to have too much of a good thing. I have never heard of a deliberative body that labored more hours than we do.

Mr. TOZER. And brought forth less.

Mr. FRIZELL. And brought forth less. Why, sir, our fathers, during the war of the Revolution, when there was real danger around them, did not work harder. Ben. Franklin and Sam. Adams and the other great men of that day, did not work harder, even when in the midst of danger. I am working, as we all are, for what I believe to be the best good of my constituents; but, at the same time, I do not wish to sit here and work more than nine hours out of the twenty-four. I really want time to sleep and take my meals, and, as it is an office of some dignity, I want an opportunity occasionally to take a cocktail and smoke a cigar, and get my feet up as high as my head, so as to show that I am a free American citizen. [Laughter.] I hope this resolution and all these amendments will be voted down, and that we shall continue to sit here nine hours a day, as we have been doing. Then, as the gentleman from Ormsby remarked, if it is necessary, towards the close of our labors, to hold evening sessions, we can at any time provide for them.

Mr. TOZER. I suggest that it might be dangerous for the gentleman to get his feet as high as his head, lest his brains should run down into his head. [Merriment.]

Mr. FRIZELL. No danger; I was not born in August, as I have heard my colleague was, consequently I did not melt and all run to feet. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Brosnan, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Chapin, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BROSAN. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "Convention," the words "until otherwise ordered."

Mr. DELONG. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and, upon a division, the vote was—ayes, 15; noes, 10.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

Mr. DELONG. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that "truth crushed to earth will rise again." [Laughter.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask leave of absence until Monday noon.

Mr. WARWICK. In view of the industry of the gentleman from Lyon, and his efforts in keeping the rest of us here, I certainly hope he will not lose so much time. [Merriment.]

The question was taken on granting Mr. Kennedy leave of absence till Monday, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. I ask leave of absence till Monday.

Mr. BROSAN. If there are good reasons why gentlemen should be excused, it is, perhaps, well that they should be; but I hope the Convention will consider the importance of the business we have come here to do, and that quite a number of members have not appeared here at all to help us in our deliberations. I certainly am not willing that any gentleman should be excused, unless there is good reason for it.

Mr. FRIZELL. I will state that my colleague who asks leave of absence has a good Christian reason—he was married only about ten days since. [Merriment.]

Mr. DELONG. That is a good reason why he should stay here and send for his wife.

Mr. HOVEY. I have really urgent business which requires my absence.

Mr. TOZER. I hope, if he is going to see his uncle, and his wife, too, he will have leave. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on granting Mr. Hovey leave of absence till Monday, and it was agreed to, upon a division—ayes, 23; noes not counted.

Mr. MURDOCK. In consequence of personal business, and further, perhaps, for the benefit of my constituents at home, I ask leave of absence until this afternoon.

The question was taken, and leave was granted.

Mr. BELDEN. I ask leave of absence from to-morrow morning until Monday morning.

The question was taken, and leave was granted.

title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Articles II, III, and IV.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. DeLong in the Chair,) for the consideration of the several matters referred to the Committee, first resuming the consideration of Article II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on adopting the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) for Section 10, of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed.

The SECRETARY read, as follows :—

SEC. 10. All citizens of the United States, and bona fide residents of the Territory of Nevada, on the 21st day of March, A. D. 1864, qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory, and all who have become qualified voters of this Territory since that time, shall be qualified to vote for or against this Constitution.

Mr. COLLINS. I find that Section 3 of our Enabling Act permits no one to vote on the acceptance or rejection of our State Constitution, except those who, by the laws of this Territory, were entitled to vote on the 21st of March, 1864. But subsequently, in Section 5, the same question is brought up again. I will read a portion of that section :—

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That, in case a Constitution and State Government shall be formed for the people of said Territory of Nevada, in compliance with the provisions of this Act, that said Convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, at such places, and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein, at which election the lawful voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against the proposed Constitution.

Evidently, the author of this section had in his mind the six months, or nearly that time, intervening between the 21st of March, or the date of the passage of this Enabling Act, and this second Tuesday of October; and evidently the design is here to give to all persons who may be lawful voters under the Territorial laws, at the time the Constitution is submitted, the privilege of voting on the adoption or rejection of that Constitution. I have therefore drawn up a section, a part of which is as nearly as possible in the language of that portion of the Enabling Act. I will read it :—

SEC. 10. All persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada on the 21st day of March, 1864, and all other persons who may be lawful voters in said Territory on the first Wednesday of September next following, shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution; and further, that all citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of said Territory at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be held under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors, herein provided, shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election.

I am aware that there are difficulties connected with this subject, inasmuch as it may probably be said that those parties who may be entitled by this section to vote in September, may have infringed some of the conditions prescribed in Sections 1 and 2 of this Article; but I see no way of escape from this direct obligation imposed upon us by the Organic Act, and I think it unsafe, and likely to jeopardize the Constitution if we attempted it; because Congress has made certain provisions, and marked out a certain path for us to pursue, and the President of the United States will not be entitled to proclaim that Nevada is a State in the Union, under the authority given by Congress, even after the adoption of the Constitution by the people, if we do not fulfil, in letter and spirit, all the requirements of the Enabling Act. Now, there may be doubt in the minds of some, whether or not this Section 5 does really contemplate that those parties shall vote on the Constitution who shall have acquired a residence, and become legal voters, subsequent to March 21, 1864—whether or not the writer had that in his mind. For you will readily see that if the provision in Section 5 did not exist, no one but those who were electors on the 21st of March, 1864, would be entitled to vote at the subsequent election. And if the 3d Section did not exist, but the 5th Section only, then all persons who were qualified electors at the time of the submission of the Constitution to the people, and none others, would be entitled to vote upon it. Then there may be a doubt either way, but if such a doubt exists, we have a right to interpret it in favor of allowing those to vote who are qualified under the provisions of this Enabling Act, as well as those who may have become qualified at the time of the submission of the Constitution; and I think the President of the United States, if the matter were brought to his attention, would be of the same opinion. I think it will be safe for us to amend this section as I have proposed, and then adopt it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I conceived there was any doubt as to who were authorized to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution, I should certainly vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor). But I do not think this amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey meets the difficulty; because if this section is susceptible to objection, as it stands in the original, without the amendment of the gentleman from Nye, on the ground that it does not give the right of voting to those who are prescribed as voters in the Enabling Act, then, with this amendment, it is liable to the same objection, because it gives the right of voting to others than those defined in the Enabling Act, as specified in the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins). Now, sir, if it be true that those who were legal voters on the 21st of March last, by the laws of the Territory of Nevada, are entitled to vote on the Constitution, it is equally true that nobody else is entitled to vote upon that instrument.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) offer his amendment as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nye?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir, as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope I may be able to make myself understood on this proposition. If we are bound by the Enabling Act, and that does prescribe who shall vote upon the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution, then, I say, you cannot go beyond it, and say that other than those shall vote. I think that is the logical sequence of the proposition. And, for that reason, I say that one of two things is true: either we are invested with the absolute power and authority—as I conceive to be the fact—of saying who shall vote, or else we are bound down by the conditions which gentlemen conceive are contained in the Enabling Act. There is no halting place between these two propositions. We can no more say that others shall vote, who were not legal voters on the 21st day of March last, than we can say that they shall possess other qualifications, such as those which are contained in the Constitution which constitutes the basis of our action. It is unnecessary to go over the ground, or repeat the arguments which were advanced by various gentlemen last evening. The examination I have made of this Act on repeated occasions has satisfied me, at least, that we are not bound and restricted in this respect, and that those restrictions as to the qualifications of voters under the laws of the Territory applied solely to the election of members or delegates to this Convention. I think, therefore, that it is not a tenable proposition to say that if we incorporate a provision admitting to the right of voting others than those, or others in addition to those who were voters on the 21st day of March, 1864, it would operate necessarily to induce a refusal on the part of the President to proclaim our State admitted into the Union. Because, if there were anything in our Constitution inimical or contrary to the provisions of the Enabling Act, the construction would be simply this, that the Enabling Act would take precedence, and override whatever there might be in the Constitution adverse to that Act of Congress; that any such adverse provision in the Constitution would be held in abeyance, and would be compelled to defer to the Enabling Act. The President is to admit us by his proclamation, upon our compliance with certain pre-requisites, amongst which are the adoption of a Constitution that must be republican in its form, and also the adoption of a certain resolution and ordinances. These are the conditions precedent to our admission. But as to other matters, in which there might seem to be to some extent a conflict between the Enabling Act and our State Constitution, there is no authority existing on the part of the President to refuse, and he would not assume the prerogative of refusing us admission on that account. In those matters, as I have said, the State Constitution would necessarily yield to the superior authority of the Enabling Act.

I care little what the action of the Convention shall be in this matter. If the judgment and sense of the Convention be that all those who were authorized to vote under the laws of the Territory on the 21st day of March, 1864, shall have the power and authority to vote for the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution, be it so; I am not particular about it, save in the matter of consistency. I do not propose, so far as my individual action goes, to prescribe rigid, strict, stringent rules in this Constitution to guide and govern every voter, in every election to be held hereafter, and yet, forsooth, upon the important question of the adoption of this same instrument, to say that persons who could not be allowed the privileges of voters under the terms proposed to be established by it, shall nevertheless have the privilege of coming in and voting under that same instrument, for its acceptance or rejection. That is my position, and I do not think that the Enabling Act has anything to do with the matter at all, or that it binds or restricts us on the subject in any degree whatever.

Mr. BANKS. Either the gentleman from Storey, who has just spoken, (Mr. Collins), and the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), are both very much mistaken in regard to this matter, or I am; and I would like to find out which, or who, are laboring under this very serious mistake. And in order to do that, if the committee are willing, I would like to ask those gentlemen a few questions. It has been claimed, I think with a great deal of force, by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins), that Section 5 of this Enabling Act provides that every person who shall be an elector at the time the Constitution is submitted, shall be allowed to vote. And he bases his argument, and I think properly, upon these words—I would like to call the especial attention of the gentleman from Ormsby while I read them:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power to command gentlemen's attention.

Mr. BANKS. The election at which this Constitution shall be submitted, the Enabling Act provides, shall be held "At such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein."

That is, in the Constitution.

— "At which election the lawful voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against the proposed Constitution."

That is, the lawful voters of the proposed new State shall be allowed to vote. Now, I did not desire to interrupt the gentleman from Ormsby, but I ask him, and I ask gentlemen of the Convention, whether the words referring to the electors of the proposed new State do not mean just this—those who, under our own local regulations, are allowed to vote? Certainly there can be no language more clear and plain than that. Now, in addition to that, it is prescribed in Section 3 that “All persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory at the passage of this act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention.”

Friday.]

JOHNSON—BANKS.

[July 8.

That is one thing, but it is not all. They are also authorized

“To vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention.”

Then, in Section 5, we have a clause which authorizes them to vote, and in Section 3 we have another clause which authorizes them to vote. These things are specifically provided in the Enabling Act, and I want to know why in the name of all that is reasonable we must not comply with them? If we do not comply with the terms of these two sections, so specifically laid down for our government and guidance. I do not think the President of the United States will have any right to admit us as a State by his proclamation. At any rate, I doubt whether he would do so. Therefore I think it is absolutely necessary that we should adopt either the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) or that proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.) I prefer the latter, for this reason, that it embodies the same ideas as that of the gentleman from Nye, but at the same time the gentleman has couched his amendment in the language of the Enabling Act, and thus, I think, has avoided any ambiguity or doubt which might arise under the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Nye.

Mr. JOHNSON. Whilst questions are in order, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, to elucidate this matter?

Mr. BANKS. That is just what I want.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Enabling Act provides that those who were voters on the 21st of March, 1864, shall have a right to vote for or against the Constitution, is it competent for this Convention to provide that any others shall have a right to vote on the same question?

Mr. BANKS. That is the question in point, exactly, and it brings out the strong point in this whole matter. The gentleman asks me, if I understand him correctly, whether, if the Enabling Act provides that all persons who are qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory on the 21st of March, 1864, shall be authorized to vote for the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution, anybody else can be authorized to vote. Is that the question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; whether we can authorize anybody else to vote, upon the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution. Is it competent for the Convention to enlarge the area of voters, as prescribed by the Enabling Act?

Mr. BANKS. Very good—I say no. It is not competent for this Convention to enlarge the area, as to who shall vote, but it was competent for those who made the Enabling Act, for those who made this Section 3, to make another section—Section 5—and to provide in that Section 5 as follows:—

“The lawful voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against the proposed Constitution.”

So, you will see, Mr. Chairman, that while a certain class of voters is provided for in the third section, a larger class is provided for in the fifth section.

Mr. JOHNSON. What does the gentleman understand by that term “lawful voters?” Those who are lawful voters under the laws of the Territory, or under this Constitution?

Mr. BANKS. That is another question in point. “Lawful voters of said new State” is the language, and the gentleman from Ormsby asks what that means. Some claim, and I think the gentleman claims it, that it means those who are authorized to vote under the terms of this Enabling Act. I say that is not what Congress meant. Congress meant by this term, all those who under our local regulations are authorized to vote at the time the Constitution is submitted. It says, “lawful voters of said new State.” If Congress had meant only those who were authorized to vote in Section 3, Congress would not have made use of this universal language, but would have said, “those who under the provisions of this Act are entitled to vote.” That would be the invariable phraseology in such a case. But they do not use it. They say what they mean, that the lawful voters of the proposed or new State shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman misapprehends me. I ask, does he understand that term “lawful” as applying to those who are lawful voters under the laws of the Territory, or those who are declared lawful voters under this Constitution?

Mr. BANKS. Under the laws of this Territory.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then how is it possible that, under this amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) we can admit, in addition to those who are lawful voters under the laws of the Territory, those who are lawful voters under the Constitution which we propose to adopt?

Mr. BANKS. I do not think that construction is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. That certainly is the effect of it. I will state the language of the amendment again, with the permission of the Committee. It reads:—

“All persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada on the 21st day of March, 1864, and all other per-

Friday.]

COLLINS—JOHNSON—BANKS—DUNNE.

[July 8.]

sous who may be lawful voters in said Territory on the first Wednesday of September next following, shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution; and, further, that all citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of said Territory at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be holden under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors herein provided"—

That is, in this Constitution provided——"Shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election."

Mr. COLLINS. The first part of it refers to that which is embodied in Section 3 of the Enabling Act. It says:—

"All persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada on the 21st day of March, 1864."

That embodies, in substance, the language employed in Section 3. Then, six months, or nearly that, intervening between the 21st of March and the second Tuesday in October, the time originally fixed for the election upon the Constitution, the writer of this Enabling Act saw the injustice which was being done to all those who would become legal voters in the interim, and he adds the words in Section 5, which are substantially embraced in the following clause:

"And all other persons who may be lawful voters in said Territory."

That is, who may be lawful voters under the laws of the Territory of Nevada. Because the Enabling Act, in Section 3, says that all persons who may be legal voters of the Territory of Nevada on the 21st of March, 1864, shall be entitled to vote, etc., therefore we have a right to suppose that the writer, when he drew the 5th Section, had in view the six months intervening time, and the idea that a considerable number of persons might become voters in the interim, and therefore provided that all other persons who might become lawful voters should be allowed to vote for the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution. Hence we provide, by this amendment, that both classes, or all who come within either description, on the first Wednesday in September, the date when, under the Act amendatory of the Enabling Act, the Constitution is to be submitted, "shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution." Now what follows that language has nothing to do with the vote upon the Constitution. The Enabling Act makes no provision in regard to the election of State officers under the Constitution, and this part of the amendatory section is added as nearly as possible in the language of the original Section 10, of Article II, of the old Constitution. That which I have already read has reference only to the adoption of the Constitution, and is drawn, or attempted to be drawn, in conformity with the Enabling Act; all following that, has reference solely to the election of the officers who may be created by this Constitution. I will read that portion:—

That all citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of said Territory at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election, to be holden under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors, herein provided, shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election."

Mr. JOHNSON. What do you do with the latter part of this clause? Upon the hypothesis that the Constitution cannot prescribe who shall be the voters at that election, upon what authority do you adopt the latter clause—"and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors herein provided?"

Mr. COLLINS. I will try to make myself clear on this third proposition, if I have succeeded in doing so on the other two. First, we provide who shall be the voters on the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, conforming our action in that regard to the requirements of the Enabling Act, and then comes in, after the adoption of the Constitution, another clause, which I have just read, in reference to those who are to vote in the election of officers under the Constitution, in regard to which election the Enabling Act is entirely silent, and therefore this Convention, I conceive, is omnipotent on that question. This is an entirely independent clause, as gentlemen will perceive.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then it might be made a new section.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; but in the old Constitution it is all in one section, and you will find that that requires and establishes the same qualifications for voters in the election of officers as in the election upon the Constitution. It goes on first to specify the qualifications, and says that all citizens thus qualified—

"shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election, and upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution."

Both subjects are embodied in the same section, and I have taken the liberty of doing the same thing here in my amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I am glad the gentleman has explained the matter, and I think we had better divide his amendment into two sections. Here he has provided for voting on the Constitution, recognizing the two classes of voters provided for in the Enabling Act; and he has provided in the latter part, which ought to constitute a separate section, I think, for the exercise of the constitutional right of suffrage under the Constitution, after its adoption. So far as the adoption of the Constitution is concerned, the construction of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) is not, I think, justified by the language of the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted substantially as proposed by the gentleman from Storey.

Mr. DUNNE. I confess that, notwithstanding the lengthy discussion we have had, I am still of the same opinion I was last night. I adhere to that opinion for this reason: I believe that the general rule in regard to the construction of statutes is, that where there are powers granted in any two different portions of the same statute, and where the subsequent portion seems to distinctly and intentionally enlarge or abridge the power granted in the first portion, and where it was evident that it was the intention distinctly of the Legislature so to do, the subsequent portion of the statute governs. I think gentlemen have been in error, or else I am, in considering that Section 5 of the Enabling Act intentionally enlarges the powers granted in Section 3. The powers are distinctly recited in Section 3, and Section 5 relates to another subject altogether. Section 3 relates to the right of suffrage; it defines who shall be allowed to vote; and Section 5 applies to another subject altogether, because it does nothing to further, explain, limit or abridge, in any way whatever, the right of suffrage. It relates expressly to a different subject, and whatever else is mentioned in it is mentioned incidentally, because the object of Section 5 is merely this—to empower the President of the United States, by his proclamation, to admit the new State, after it shall have complied with all the provisions and requirements of this Enabling Act. That being the intention of the section, and the words in it relating to the right of suffrage being used only incidentally, I do not think it can be considered as enlarging the powers granted in Section 3. I consider, again, if I understand the gentleman from Ormsby correctly, that I differ with him materially with regard to the powers which the people of this Territory have, by their representatives here in Convention assembled, with regard to limiting the right of persons to vote upon the ratification or rejection of the Constitution which we may adopt here. Because, I conceive, that whatever of political rights we have in this Territory, we derive altogether from the General Government.

Mr. JOHNSON (interrupting). I do not assume that Congress had not the power to restrict us—by no means.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman state his explanation again.

Mr. JOHNSON. It comes to this: I say that Congress has not done it; not that Congress had not the power to do it.

Mr. DUNNE. Then we still differ: because Congress has defined, I think, what powers we have. That is the point of difference. I hold that the only powers the people of this Territory possess, are derived from the express grant of Congress—that until our Organic Act was passed, we constituted no part of the people of the United States. We had no hand, nor vote, nor voice, in the making or framing of the laws; we had no power in regard to our own local affairs; we had no political rights whatever. The Organic Act is, in one sense, a Constitution to us. It is a charter of rights granted to us by Congress. Congress has the power of enlarging those rights, or of limiting them. The Enabling Act being subsequent to the Organic Act, so far as it contains anything in conflict with that act, is an amendment of it, and supersedes it, and from that I think it follows that we have no rights whatever, except what are expressly granted to us in this Enabling Act. Then the question in my mind is, whether or not Congress has prescribed the persons who are to be allowed to vote on this Constitution; and, then, if my theory be correct in regard to the effect of Section 5—that it does not enlarge the powers granted in Section 3, because it does not expressly relate to the Right of Suffrage, but mentions it incidentally, employing only the words "lawful voters," and not defining what are lawful voters—I think that the word "lawful," there employed, refers back to the third section of the Enabling Act, where the right of suffrage is specifically defined. If that position be correct, and I think it is, I shall be obliged to vote against the amendment.

Mr. FRIZELL. I suppose this debate has continued almost long enough, but I propose, nevertheless, to say a few words on the subject. Here we find that Section 3, which section applies almost entirely to the organization of this Convention, to the election of its members, contains certain provisions in regard to voting. Then we find in Section 5, where the Enabling Act directs that the Constitution shall be submitted to the people, that the same language precisely is used, or its equivalent—the phrase "lawful voters"—that we find in Section 3. Now, the query arises, as propounded by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), what meaning or construction you are to put upon that term "lawful voters." By taking Section 3 and Section 5 in conjunction, considering both together, I think the construction to be put on the two is perfectly and easily apparent. Then again, when you consider that this Section 3 applies throughout its entire construction, every way, to the organization of this body: that one portion of the section merely says who shall be legal or lawful voters at the time of voting for the delegates to this Convention, and also who shall be eligible as delegates to this Convention, I think it is rendered still more plain. It there declares who are the lawful voters. Now, how are they lawful? Under what laws? What law could it be that should make them lawful voters but the law of this Territory? Of course, Congress knew we had an organization and laws here under the Organic Act which had been passed by Congress, and it must be plain that this term "lawful voters," used in Section 3, refers to voters under the Territorial laws. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come down to Section 5, you find it reads:—

And be it further enacted, That in case a Constitution and State Government shall be formed for the people of the said Territory of Nevada, in compliance with the provisions of this Act, that said Convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the second Tuesday in October, 1864, at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein, at which election the lawful voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against the proposed Constitution.

Here we find precisely the same term used—"lawful voters." Now, looking at the matter philosophically, and from the point of law, are we to suppose that Congress, in passing this

Friday.]

CHAPIN—CROSMAN—PROCTOR—BROSNAN.

[July 8.]

Act, on the 21st of March last, intended to declare that the men who were then lawful voters in this Territory should be the only men allowed to vote at an election to be held six months thereafter? Did they intend, in other words, to cut off every man that should become a lawful voter within one, two, three, or four months after that date? Certainly not. Consequently, I think, on the score of reason and good sense in the interpretation of the language, the meaning of the Enabling Act on this subject is perfectly plain.

Mr. CHAPIN. I desire to say just a few words only, in explanation of my views. I think there is no use in trying to get around that third section. We have got to face that, and to provide that every person who was entitled to vote under our laws on the 21st of March last, shall be allowed to vote for or against this Constitution. Now this fifth section contains a further provision, by which we are also to allow every person who is a lawful voter in this new State to vote upon the adoption or rejection of our Constitution—that is, every person who shall have become a voter since the 21st of March, is also entitled to vote. That is my construction; and even if I had to force that construction, I would not insult the people of this Territory by attempting to crowd upon them a Constitution upon which they are not permitted to vote. A great number of men, no doubt hundreds and thousands, have become voters in this Territory since the 21st of March, and to say that they are to be deprived of the privilege of expressing their preference as to the adoption or rejection of this instrument, would, I think, be an absurdity, and I certainly would not sanction it by my vote. Now this amendment of my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) provides for both classes of voters to which I have referred, and I am in favor of adopting that amendment.

Mr. CROSMAN. I fully and heartily concur with the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that those two classes of voters are fully provided for by this amendment, and that they should have the right of voting upon the acceptance or rejection of this Constitution. I believe that the Enabling Act gives the right of voting to all who may, under the Territorial law, be legal voters at the time the Constitution is submitted. But, if I mistake not, the amendment of the gentleman from Storey provides for another class still—"all bona fide residents." I do not think that language should be there. I can see no good reason for it, unless it is because the same language occurred in the old Constitution.

Mr. PROCTOR. Before the question is taken, I should like to state my objections to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.) I look upon the requirements contained in this fifth section of the Enabling Act in a very different light from that in which some gentlemen view them, who have spoken here to-day. I look upon the section as providing simply for the manner in which the election shall be conducted, and I think that matter should be provided for in an entirely different portion of our Constitution from this article in which we are providing generally for the right of suffrage. If you read this Enabling Act carefully, you will observe that it requires us to provide, by an ordinance, for submitting this Constitution to the people, on the second Tuesday of October, or, as it has since been amended, on the first Wednesday in September. We shall have to provide by ordinance for some other matters, and there is where, it occurs to me, this requirement of the Enabling Act should be brought in, and complied with. But so far as relates to that fifth section affecting, in any way, the right of suffrage, as provided in the third section, I cannot, for the life of me, see how that application can be given to it. It looks to me so plainly and clearly expressed in this third section, that I am really astonished that any gentleman should get up here and say that we have a right to say or do any thing different, or that we have anything in the world to do with the right of suffrage in the elections there provided for, except to comply with that section of the Enabling Act.

Now, if we were going to submit the Constitution, after its adoption, to the next Congress, and ask for admission into the Union under it, it might be well enough to go outside of the provisions of the Enabling Act. But we are going to do nothing of the kind. We have got to comply strictly with the terms of that Act, and if we do not do that, we cannot hope for admission by the President's proclamation. And, sir, I shall move, before the vote is taken on my amendment, to strike out the addenda, or latter portion of it, for the reason that I do not think we have any right to confer the right of voting upon anybody who became a legal voter of the Territory after the 21st of March last. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Storey will not prevail; and at a proper time, I hope we shall pass an ordinance containing the necessary provisions, in conformity with the Enabling Act, for submitting the Constitution to the people. If this amendment is voted down, I give notice that I will move to amend my amendment, by striking out the latter portion, relative to those who may have become qualified voters subsequent to the passage of the Enabling Act by Congress.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have given this subject some consideration, Mr. Chairman, and the result of that consideration is briefly this: I consider, in the first place, that the terms, so to speak, of this fifth section, are wholly non-essential in this matter, even taking the section in its literal sense. I conceive that, in regard to the adoption of the Constitution which we may frame here, if it be voted upon and adopted by the people and then presented to the President of the United States, it will make no difference how we have regarded that section, because it will not be at all considered. It will not be regarded as material, whatever way the people may have voted, provided they have been legal voters and have given a majority for the Constitution. There are conditions precedent which I think are essentials, and which we have complied with, thus far. Now, it will be remembered that the intention of Congress could not certainly have been to disqualify any voters in this Territory. It must be assumed that the members of Congress who passed this Enabling Act understood the qualifications required in the Territory of Nevada, to entitle a citizen of that Territory to vote. That may reasonably be assumed, and therefore we may infer that they knew that the time required to become a voter in our Territory, so far as residence is concerned, was six months. And Congress fixed and established those qualifications in this third section, both for those who might be eligible as delegates to this Convention and for those who were to vote for such delegates, as electors. Then the act provides that after that body of delegates, so elected and by such electors, have in Convention formed this Constitution for the new State, the legal voters may vote upon the question of its adoption or rejection—that is, the legal voters of the Territory. The act says “the lawful voters of said new State,” but in place of that, suppose the words “of said Territory” had been used. It would not have made the slightest difference, and there can be no question that the legal voters of the Territory are intended, for necessarily there could be no State at the time of voting on the question of becoming a State. The language of the act assumes the fact of its being a State the moment the Constitution is framed, and if you follow out that language strictly, no person could vote at all, because there would in reality be no State. I say, then, it would be unreasonable to consider, or to believe, that Congress did intend to disqualify legal voters in this Territory from voting upon the adoption or rejection of the Constitution.

BROSNAN—COLLINS.

[July 8.

Now, who are the lawful voters? Why, they are the legal voters of this Territory at the time of voting. Besides, the Chair and the Convention will remember, in connection with that, that this Constitution was at first to be submitted in the month of October, a longer period after the passage of the act than was necessary to make a man a qualified elector by residence in the Territory. Is it, then, a possible, or rather, is it a reasonable construction, to say that Congress intended to cut off every person from the right of the elective franchise on so momentous a question, who did not happen at that time to have been six months in the Territory? Is it reasonable to believe that Congress would not consent to allow any man, though qualified by the laws of the Territory, to vote upon a question so important to his welfare, and to the welfare of the community? I cannot come to any such conclusion.

I would prefer to see this section, as proposed by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) separated, so as to have that portion which relates to the adoption of the Constitution by itself, and that which relates to the first election to be held under the Constitution as adopted, stand also by itself; which would greatly simplify the matter, and then I should be willing to vote for both propositions.

Mr. COLLINS. While I agree in the main with my respected friend the gentleman from Storey who has just spoken, I differ with him entirely upon the construction which he gives to this Section 5 of the Enabling Act. Now, I believe it is a general principle of interpretation that where two sections differ, or come in conflict, or do not perfectly harmonize, the general spirit and intention of the author should be discovered, if possible. Now, what is the general spirit and intention of Congress in giving us this Enabling Act? It is, first, that we shall organize a State government. It provides that electors shall be chosen as delegates to convene here and frame a Constitution. And in making that provision, Congress declares expressly that all persons in the Territory, who are legal voters at the time of the passage of the act, under the laws of the Territory, shall vote for the election of those delegates, and further, following that, that they shall also be permitted to vote for the acceptance or rejection of that Constitution which their delegates may frame. Now, while Congress contemplated giving us a State Government, and a State Constitution, it also contemplated that every legal voter should have a voice in the establishment of that Constitution and State Government. And how often, Mr. Chairman, have you and I, in drafting some document, omitted or failed to insert in the body of the document, some thought or idea which properly belonged there, and when the document was perhaps half written, the thought presenting itself, we have availed ourselves of the first opportunity to throw it into a subsequent portion, without re-writing the document. I take it that this was the way it was in Congress in the drafting of this Enabling Act. When the authors were writing the section providing for the election in October, the thought dislosed itself to their minds that they might be doing injustice to a great body of men who might subsequently to the passage of the act come in, gain residence in the Territory, and become legally qualified electors, and they availed themselves of the first opportunity to throw that provision in, in order to give that class the right to vote also on the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution. And I will show you, I think, by the very language, that that was what it contemplated. It is speaking of the State Government for the new State, and of those who are to be qualified to vote upon its adoption, and here in Section 5 it says:—

“At an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, 1864”—

The thought coming to the writer of the distance of time between the elections, and the great injustice which would be done to those who would become legal voters in the interim, he then endeavors to remedy the difficulty and remove the injustice, and goes on to say :—

—“At such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein, at which election the lawful voters of said new State.”—

“Lawful voters!” Now, if it had referred particularly, or only, to those lawful voters described in Section 3, it would have said “said lawful voters.” But it goes on, immediately following that, to refer to the State—“the lawful voters of said new State”—so that there should be no misunderstanding. If the writer had contemplated to embrace only those referred to in Section 3, those who were electors on the 21st of March, he would have drawn it to read, “at which election the said lawful voters.”

Mr. BROSNAN. In that I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I have certainly misunderstood my colleague. Now, I think it must be plain to the Convention that such must have been the intention of Congress—the meaning of the Committee or member that drafted, and the meaning of Congress in adopting this section. Neither you, nor I, nor any one else, can believe that Congress had a desire to disfranchise any of the lawful voters of this Territory. The aim and object of Congress was, as evinced by the declaration or language used in Section 3, to frame an Enabling Act, coming under the provisions of the Federal laws in respect to the right of voting; and whoever our law has declared to be a voter, Congress, also, by making use of that language, declares to be a voter. Now, I am willing to bow to the will of Congress, and however beneficial we might deem it to be to disfranchise certain classes, I believe that every loyal man here, when he sees it clearly, will be willing to obey the behests of Congress.

But an interpretation so monstrous as has been put by some upon this language, should certainly not be received, if it can be avoided. Shall we, by one sweep, disfranchise perhaps one-half of the voters of the Territory? Who believes that Congress ever dreamed of such a thing? I ask gentlemen to look at it. Of course, if we are forced to it by the plain language of the Act, we must do it; but I say, if there be a shadow of a possible doubt, then we have a right to construe it in favor of those who, according to the opinions of some gentlemen, were intended by Congress to be disfranchised.

Now, as to the proposed division of the section, I should have no objection at all to that. The original Section 10, in the old Constitution, embraces both features, and I have drawn this up accordingly, including the provision for the election of officers, on which subject the Enabling Act is perfectly silent. We are perfectly free to make any provisions we please, our power being omnipotent on that subject, and I have in this amendment blended the two elections together; but it is a very easy matter for the Convention to divide it into two sections.

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope we shall discard that portion entirely, and put it in the ordinance, which we must pass, to provide in full for the election.

Mr. COLLINS. The ordinance, as contemplated in Section 5, has nothing to do with the electors; it is merely to prescribe the mode and manner of the election. The section simply declares that this Convention will submit the Constitution to the people “at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed therein,” but it has nothing to do with the qualifications of the voters, nor with the election of officers.

Mr. PROCTOR. Has the ordinance nothing to do with the Constitution?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; the ordinance should be a part of, or, at least, with the Constitution. I think I should prefer to have it connected with the schedule.

Mr. JOHNSON. While this discussion embraced only what seemed to be comprehended in the proposed amendments, I was content that the vote should be taken by the Committee without further discussion on my part. But it seems to me that the two gentlemen who have last spoken, in their remarks have taken a wider range. The Committee has been told a great deal about the disfranchising of voters, and the intimation seems to be conveyed that possibly some of those who are opposing these amendments are the advocates of a proposition which would disfranchise a large class, or, at least, a large number of the voters of this Territory. Now, sir, it is only necessary to refer to the original proposition, as contrasted with these amendments, to ascertain whose proposition it is that is going to disfranchise the greatest number of voters.

Either of these propositions comprehend those who are legal voters under the laws of the Territory. Now it is unnecessary for me to tell this Committee that the laws of our Territory require that the voter shall be a resident for four months only. That is to say, under the operation of the amendment, as amended by the original mover of that amendment himself, the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,)—under that proposition in its enlarged sense, as originally introduced, only those legal voters who were voters on the 21st day of March last would be entitled to vote on this Constitution. That is to say, only those who had resided in the Territory four months anterior to the 21st of March could vote on the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution. As afterwards amended, on the gentleman's own motion, it extended the privilege to those who had been residents for four months preceding the first Wednesday of September, which occurs, I believe, on the 7th day of September.

Friday.]

CROSMAN—JOHNSON—WARWICK—DUNNE.

[July 8.

Mr. CROSMAN (interrupting.) Six months residence is the term required.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not material whether it is four or six months; my recollection is that it is four months. At any rate, whether it is four months or six months, necessarily, under the operation of the original amendment, no person could vote upon this Constitution who had not resided either the four or the six months, as the case may be, in the Territory prior to the seventh day of September. And the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Collins), is the same in its effect and operation. Now, sir, under this original section, how does that apply? It says:—

All citizens of the United States, and bona fide residents of the Territory of Nevada, at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be held under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors therein provided, shall be entitled to vote in the election of all officers to be elected at such election, and upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution.

Therefore, sir, I say, that under the operation of the section as it stood originally before the committee, all those who possess the legal qualifications provided in the Constitution, and who, at the time of that election, are bona fide residents of the Territory, can vote for or against this Constitution. Now, I think it must be quite obvious to the committee that if there be any amendments which would establish a rule operating to the exclusion of a large number of persons in the Territory from voting, they are the several amendments which have been proposed to this original section. That, it seems to me, absolves me from the intimation that I am advocating measures which are going to exclude a large number of persons from voting on this instrument. For one, I am in favor of the original section, and I think that we who advocate it—or I will say myself, for I do not know particularly who there are upon the floor, of this committee, who favor it as it stands—so far as I am concerned, I repeat, it is sufficient merely to explain the operation of these amendments to show that, so far from being in favor of excluding anybody from voting, unless of disloyal character, or such as are included within some of the inhibitions of this Constitution, (and upon such I do not care to confer the privilege mentioned, but prefer that they shall be excluded in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution as we have thus far established them), I am in favor of opening the door to all bona fide residents on the day of election. Though he may have arrived within the State only the day before, I am willing to give him the right to vote for or against the adoption of this Constitution under which we expect him to live.

Mr. WARWICK. I believe this subject has been already exhausted by these contestants who have been fighting over it for the last four hours, and believing that no further enlightenment can be had upon it, I trust we shall be allowed to have a vote upon it at once.

Mr. DUNNE. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) has indulged in a flight of imagination. Going entirely beyond the literal reading and the spirit of the Enabling Act, he has proposed to dive down into the imaginations of the Congressional Committee which framed that act. He has endeavored, by plausible representation to this Committee, to bring before us what he thinks were the inner motives which probably prompted and actuated that Committee in performing that labor. Now, if that is allowable in the gentleman's case, it must be allowable in mine. His supposition was a very plausible one indeed, but allow me now for a moment to make another supposition. At the time when this Enabling Act was passed, it was proposed that the election to be held under it should take place in October. I suppose all gentlemen present will agree with me, that one great argument in favor of the passage of that Enabling Act was the desirableness of having a new loyal State in the Union, with a loyal representation in Congress, that would be fully and heartily in favor of the Administration and the war. Now, that being the case, and, as I suppose it was, a strong point with Congress in securing the passage of the Enabling Act, let me indulge in the supposition that in putting in this clause limiting the right of voting to those who were voters on the 21st day of March, their intention may have been to cut off the possibility of a large number of persons, coming from the western portions of the United States, who would be opposed to sending a loyal representation to Washington—that their object might have been to provide that none but loyal men should be allowed to have a voice in framing our State Constitution. Thinking, perhaps, that the fate of war would terminate the residence of many disloyal men in these western and south-western States, and drive thousands of them to a residence in this Territory, it is possible that for the purpose of cutting off that immense immigration which was in prospect, that clause may have been put in, providing that none but the old residents, those who were then really interested here, and residents among us, should be allowed to vote. Knowing that we had at that time a loyal majority, there could be no doubt, or possibility of doubt, under such an arrangement, that we should have a loyal representation in Congress—that we should send men there who would heartily support the Administration. Then, again, many gentlemen seem to think that if we overcome the Constitutional scruples of the President in regard to issuing the proclamation admitting us into the Union, that is all the difficulty we have to encounter. But there is a great possibility—for anything is possible if not probable in politics—there is at least a possibility, a bare one it may be, but still a possibility, and one that we must consider, that in the approaching contest the election of a President of the United States may be thrown into the House of Representatives. It may be a matter of great moment, therefore, whether or not this State is admitted, whether or not the vote of this State shall be allowed to be cast for the President. And in such an event we have to encounter more than the constitutional scruples of the President; we have to encounter the advantages or the disadvantages of the vote likely to be cast here in favor of this or that particular candidate for the Presidency. I do not think it is probable, and I hope it is not, that the election will be thrown into the House of Representatives, but it is within the limits of possibility, and therefore a thing which we ought to keep in mind.

[Cries of "question, question!"]

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Collins, as an amendment to the amendment of Mr. Proctor, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. Now, I hope the amendment of my colleague which has just been adopted, as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Nye, will be substituted for this original Section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question pending.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to call the attention of the Committee to one matter in this connection. The language is, "shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election." Now, I think here is about as proper a place as any other to express our views as to having the election of State officers occur at the same time as the vote on the Constitution. If it is proposed by the Convention to have the election of officers take place at the same time, then let us incorporate the provision in this section; and if it is not the intention of the Convention to repeat that great act of folly which was committed last year—for I can characterize it as nothing less—then let us say so now. This provision, it seems to me, is entirely dependent on that question; and I think the author of the amendment will admit that it can only be in view of the supposition that our State officers are to be elected at the same time, that there is any necessity whatever for incorporating it into the section now under consideration. Therefore, for the purpose of taking the sense of the Committee upon the question, (as I conceive it involves no less than that,) whether or not we shall elect our officers under the Constitution at the time when it is submitted to the vote of the people, to wit: on the first Wednesday in September, I move to strike out the latter part of this section, as it has been amended.

Mr. WARWICK. I understand the gentleman proposes to strike out only so much as refers to the election of officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. My motion is, to strike out entirely the latter portion of the section, beginning—"And further, that all citizens of the United States" &c.,—so that the section will be left in this wise:—

SECTION 10. All persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada on the 21st day of March, 1864, and all other persons who may be lawful voters in said Territory on the first Wednesday of September next following, shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting the Constitution.

The part I propose to strike out can possibly relate only to the election of officers at the same time that the Constitution is submitted.

Mr. HOVEY. I certainly cannot see that this language proposed to be stricken out, has reference to the election of officers at the time the Constitution is submitted for adoption or rejection. It reads in this way:—

"And further, that all citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of said Territory at the time provided in this Constitution for the first election to be holden under its provisions, and who shall possess the other qualifications of electors, herein provided, shall be entitled to vote for the election of all officers to be elected at such election."

It does not seem to me to bear the construction the gentleman puts upon it, and we have got to specify, in some place, who shall be the electors of the officers to be elected under the Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is already specified, in a previous section, which takes effect immediately after the Constitution is adopted.

Mr. HOVEY. Very well; I am satisfied.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Johnson, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

Article III, entitled Distribution of Powers, was next taken up by the Committee of the Whole, and read, as follows:—

ARTICLE III.—DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

SECTION 1. The powers of the Government of the State of Nevada shall be divided into three separate departments—the Legislative, the Executive, and Judicial—and no persons charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases herein expressly directed or permitted.

No amendment being offered, the article as read was adopted.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, was next taken up by the Committee of the Whole.

Section 1 was read, as follows:—

SECTION 1. The Legislative authority of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated, "The Legislature of the State of Nevada," and the sessions of such Legislature shall be held at the seat of government of the State.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

BIENNIAL SESSIONS.

Section 2 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. The sessions of the Legislature shall be biennial, and shall commence on the first Monday of January next ensuing the election of its members, unless the Governor of the State shall, in the interim, convene the Legislature by proclamation.

Friday,]

JOHNSON—BROSNAN—BANKS—DUNNE.

[July 8.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state right here, as there may be some contrariety of views in regard to biennial sessions, that gentlemen will find in the latter portion of this Constitution, provision made for having annual sessions of the Legislature for the first two years, and thence after, biennial sessions. As it was thought proper by the Convention to inaugurate the system of biennial sessions, and as biennial sessions were to be the rule, and annual sessions the exception, it was deemed advisable—and I think there can be no better plan—to adopt the section as it reads here, and then provide subsequently in the Schedule, or in Miscellaneous Provisions, as may be judged best, in what years annual sessions shall be held.

Mr. BROSNAN. My recollection is that of the gentleman from Ormsby on this subject, but I would like to have him refer to the subsequent section, where provision is made for annual sessions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will refer my friend to Sections 14 to 17 of the Schedule, as here printed.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend the section by adding these words: "except as hereafter provided in this Constitution."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

Section 3 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially by the qualified electors of their respective districts on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election.

Mr. BROSNAN. I suggest that this section should be amended. I do not see the utility of the words—"on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November." Had not we better fix the day directly.

Mr. JOHNSON. The reason of that language is, that it is the day on which the Presidential election occurs. We expected the State Government to go into operation last winter, and gentlemen will find by referring to the "Miscellaneous Provisions," and "Schedule," in the old Constitution, that provision was made that the members of the first Legislature should hold office until their successors should be elected and qualified. Then, this being the first regular election, the next election would occur at the same time, and I think there was great propriety in the arrangement. The same reasons which existed then, exist now. The idea is to obviate the necessity of having two elections in the same year on which the Presidential election occurs.

Mr. DUNNE. I suppose, if the Constitution is adopted this fall, we desire to have a representation in Congress, the members of which will be there to take their seats at the opening of Congress. Is it possible to do that under such a provision?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. The 9th of September is the time on which the Constitution is to be submitted. Then it will necessarily take two or three weeks to collect the election returns and to transmit the report to the President, who is thereupon authorized to declare the State admitted into the Union. That will throw us necessarily into October, and it would not be possible before the time mentioned for the Presidential election, to hold a political election under the provision of the State Constitution. It will be remembered—and we have the evidence of it before us in the shape of the Enabling Act—that originally it was provided that the vote upon the Constitution should be taken in October; but after the passage of the Enabling Act, as it is here printed, a memorial was prepared and signed by many prominent citizens—the Territorial officers and others—asking Congress to amend that act so far as to provide for the submission of the Constitution to the people at the time of the Territorial election, on the first Wednesday in September. This was done with a view not only to obviate the necessity of holding another election so soon afterwards, but also to give time within which the election could be held, the votes canvassed, return made, and the State thereupon admitted into the Union, that we might, in part, then enjoy the privileges of a State. I think this may be accomplished, probably two or three weeks before the Presidential election, for we may be advised by telegraph of the action of the President in issuing his Proclamation, and when that act is done, we are at once admitted, and telegraphic information of the fact is sufficient to authorize us to proceed to put the machinery of the new State in operation. That would give time for the assembling of a Convention, and the nomination of candidates, if deemed necessary or advisable, and the presentation of the claims of those candidates before the people previous to the November election.

Mr. DUNNE. The object is, I understand, to have all the candidates elected on the first Tuesday of November; that gives us some eight or nine weeks, and if the election takes place at that time, which will be towards the close of the first week in November, it will then take a considerable time to get the returns of the votes in order to hold a session of the Legislature for the election of United States Senators. Then it will require another month for the Senators, after their election, to get to Washington, and I do not see how we could expect them to get there before the latter part of February.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe it is advisable to hold the election at the earliest possible time, and in that I agree fully with the gentleman from Humboldt; but I scarcely think under the operation of this provision, as we are to vote in September, and the votes have to be canvassed, the returns made to the President, and his proclamation issued upon those returns before we are invested with the right of electing any officers, that there is time, under such an arrangement, to enable us to put in operation the machinery of party usage, or to carry it into effect so as to hold an election earlier than the November election. If we are able under the operation of this provision to hold the election at the earliest day, and avoid the necessity of holding so many elections, I would certainly be in favor of having an earlier election, especially in view of the importance of having our members of Congress at Washington as early as possible. But if we postpone the election until November, I think it probable that our members will be able to reach Washington within two or three weeks after the assembling of Congress. That loss of time is one of the difficulties which we must inevitably labor under, from the fact that it is already so late in the season, and it is impossible to get an earlier vote on the adoption of the Constitution by the people. It is an inconvenience which I do not think it is possible for us to obviate under existing circumstances.

Mr. BROSNAN. Could not the matter be relieved of difficulty by a clause in the schedule, providing for a different, and perhaps more suitable time, for the first election under the Constitution, and leaving this section as it is here?

The CHAIRMAN. That question hardly comes up under this section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say, rather by way of answering the inquiry—and I am speaking on this subject by the indulgence of the Committee—of course it is entirely competent, if it is deemed proper, to have the election at an earlier day. This, however, should be borne in mind—that it is important to postpone the election of any officers under the Constitution to a period beyond the vote upon the Constitution itself. That is a proposition which I am decidedly in favor of. But there may be a medium time beyond the election upon the Constitution, which might be fixed upon for the first election by a provision incorporated in the Schedule, if the Convention deem it proper. As I said before, this which we are now engaged upon, is the general framework, and the exceptions to that framework should properly be included within the scope of the Schedule or the article on Miscellaneous Provisions. Though it may be a little out of place here, I will say that I was heartily in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) because this is the general framework, and any exceptions ought to be incorporated elsewhere, so that there may be no conflict in this permanent portion of the Constitution.

Mr. CROSMAN. There is one other objection to this section, which occurs in the last line, as it strikes me. It says: "their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election." Now we are aware that it is impossible to know, for a few days after the election, who are elected and who are not. It is all very well for the first election, and perhaps that might be provided for in the Schedule. But in all the States in which I have lived, there has been an interval of at least sixty days after the election before the officers elected took office. I suggest that it be amended so that their term of office shall be two years next after the 31st day of December, ensuing.

The amendment was not seconded.

There being no further amendment, the section was adopted.

TERMS OF OFFICE.

Section 4 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 4. Senators shall be chosen at the same time and places as members of the Assembly, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend the last clause of the section by striking out the word "two," and inserting the word "four," so that it will read—

"And their term of office shall be four years from the day next after election."

Mr. WARWICK. There appears to me to be very good reasons for that amendment, for, in Section 14, of Article XVIII, I find the following language:—

"At the general election in A. D. 1864, and thereafter, the term of Senators shall be for four years from the day succeeding such general election, and members of Assembly for two years," &c.

Therefore, in order to have some uniformity in this document, it will be necessary to make this amendment, providing that the term of Senators shall be four years.

Mr. JOHNSON. My recollection is that this is a misprint, and that the last Convention adopted the term of four years for Senators.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 5 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 5. Senators and members of the Assembly shall be duly qualified electors in the respective counties and districts which they represent, and the number of Senators shall not be less than one-third, nor more than one-half of that of the members of the Assembly.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 6 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 6. Each House shall judge of the qualifications, elections and returns of its own members, choose its own officers, (except the President of the Senate,) determine the rules of the proceedings, and may punish its members for disorderly conduct, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected, expel a member.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend by inserting instead of the word "elected," where it last occurs, the word "present."

The amendment was not seconded.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 7 was read, as follows:—

Friday.]

KENNEDY—JOHNSON—FITCH—BROSNAN—LOCKWOOD.

[July 8

SEC. 7. Either House, during the session, may punish, by imprisonment, any person not a member, who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not extend beyond the final adjournment of the session.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

OFFICES OF PROFIT.

Section 8 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 8. No Senator or member of Assembly shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, nor for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office of profit under this State which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term, except such office as may be filled by elections by the people.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to strike out the words, "nor for one year thereafter."

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it must be apparent to the members of this Committee what is the object of the incorporation of this provision. I think it is right as it is, and I hope those words will not be stricken out. It is to prevent the creation of offices which can be filled by those persons who themselves create them. Sometimes it may occur that a valuable and important office is proposed to be created by the Legislature, and a combination can be made to secure the passage of the bill establishing such an office by the efforts of the expected incumbent. Under this provision, if the amendment be adopted, the incumbency might be so arranged as to expire within a short time, and then it would, of course, be necessary to supply the office.

Mr. KENNEDY. I withdraw the amendment.

No other amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 9 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 9. No person holding any lucrative office under the Government of the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this State; provided, that Postmasters whose compensation does not exceed five hundred dollars per quarter, or commissioner of deeds, shall not be deemed as holding a lucrative office.

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend the section by striking out the words, "postmasters whose compensation does not exceed five hundred dollars per quarter, or," so that the proviso will read:—

"Provided, that commissioners of deeds shall not be deemed as holding a lucrative office."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to modifying this provision, but to strike out the whole clause, I think, is not advisable.

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman will move to make it "per annum," instead of "per quarter," I will accept it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well; I will make that motion, to strike out the word "quarter," and insert the word "annum."

Mr. FITCH. I accept the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment as modified was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

BRIBERY.

Section 10 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 10. Any person who shall be convicted of the embezzlement or defalcation of the public funds of this State, or who may be convicted of having given or offered a bribe to procure his election or appointment to office, or received a bribe or reward to aid in the procurement of office for any other person, shall be disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in this State.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend that section by adding the following:—

"The Legislature shall, as soon as practicable, provide by law for the punishment of such defalcation, bribery, or embezzlement, as a felony."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move further to amend by striking out the following language:—

"Or received a bribe or reward to aid in the procurement of office for any other person."

I wish to say, in explanation of my amendment, that because I may happen to desire to get some man, whom I believe to be capable, to fill a certain office, or to prevent some man, whom I believe to be incapable, from filling it, and because I may take a notion to spend money in order to get my friend into that office, I do not believe that I ought for that to be disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in this State. I do not believe that is a consequence which should follow from doing such an act, when I believe I am doing a service to the public.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not believe that such an interpretation can be given to the section, and I think the whole force and vitality of the section would be impaired, if not destroyed effectually, by the gentleman's amendment. Gentlemen will see how easy it will be to avoid the operation of the provision. Here, for instance, I am a candidate for office,—[a laugh.] Well, there are a good many in the same category, I think. [Merriment.] A man is a candidate for office, and, under the operation of this section, as it is proposed to be amended, he may go and offer a reward to an individual to aid him in procuring the appointment or election to such office. We incorporate a provision here prohibiting him from doing this, but there is nothing which would prevent some other person from acting for him, and thus the whole effect of the law would be destroyed. I hope these words will not be stricken out, for they certainly could not have the application which my colleague has suggested.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I would suggest that it would take only the same amount of evidence to prove that the candidate was instrumental in getting some other man to offer a bribe for him, that it would take to prove that he offered it himself. It seems to strike at the glorious prerogative of electioneering for a man's friends. If I have a friend whom I believe to be particularly fitted for a particular office, and I have a desire, for the sake of the public good, to get him into that office, I have a right to use all honorable means to that end, and, if it is necessary, to buy a little whiskey, also.

Mr. HOVEY. Another objection is, that it might cut off some of the revenue of the State in the way of poll-taxes.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Lockwood, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Brosnan.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend by striking out, after the word "bribery," the words, "or reward."

It does seem to me that those words would cut off the power or right to contribute money to the funds of a county committee, for instance, for the purpose of securing the election of a particular man. There are a great many legitimate expenses connected with an election. We have to pay for the printing of ballots, and their distribution, and I fear that these expenses might be construed as coming within this provision. I do not know that I am right, but I fear that that would be considered a legitimate construction.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks, and it was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Brosnan, and it was agreed to.

No further amendments being offered, that section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 11 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 11. Members of the Legislature shall be privileged from arrest on civil process during the session of the Legislature, and for fifteen days next before the commencement of each session.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 12 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 12. When vacancies occur in either House, the Governor shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 13 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 13. A majority of all the members elected to each House shall constitute a quorum to transact business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner and under such penalties as each House may prescribe.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 14 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 14. Each House shall keep a journal of its own proceedings, which shall be published, and the ayes and noes of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of any three members present, be entered on the journal.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

SECRET SESSIONS.

Section 15 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 15. The doors of each House shall be kept open during its session, and neither shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be holding their sessions.

Mr. FITCH. I would like to inquire what would be the interpretation of the language of this section. Does it mean that one body cannot adjourn to another place without the consent of the other, or that they cannot adjourn to any other place at all? It seems to me that one construction of this section would be that neither House shall adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other, nor adjourn, in any event, to any other place than that where they may be holding their sessions.

Mr. WARWICK. Having seen this question tried under rather peculiar circumstances, I think I can enlighten the gentleman. When that contest comes, the House can go where it pleases, as our Chairman very well knows.

Mr. PROCTOR. I would inquire if this language will not preclude either the Senate or the House from holding a secret session. I think it would; and I would ask other members if they do not think it would amount to a prohibition of secret sessions.

Mr. JOHNSON. In my opinion it would, and I am in favor of preventing them, as I was in the last Convention. My view of the subject is, that the Senate and the House are composed of representatives of the people, and therefore they should possess no authority to transact any business of which their constituencies shall not have full knowledge. I do not think there is anything so sacred that can gather about an organized body, termed a Senate or a House of Representatives, which should give it the right to transact any public business whatever, without the people knowing what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. We have had occasion in California to exclude the lobby.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. But we have a provision here which you did not have there to protect the Legislature against the lobby. Here that power is given, in a preceding part of this article, which reads:—

Either House, during the session, may punish, by imprisonment, any person not a member who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not extend beyond the final adjournment of the session.

This provision is additional, I believe, to the clause of the California Constitution, and gentlemen who were present during the discussion on this subject, in the former Convention, will recollect that the application of this feature was referred to. As the body has ample protection against any contemptuous or disorderly behaviour, although occurring without the limits of the assemblage, I think it may well be coupled with this other proposition, that neither the Senate nor the more popular branch shall have the power of doing what their constituency or the other branch of the Legislature have not the privilege of knowing.

Mr. HOVEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question—and that is, whether in case of a rebellion, it might not be necessary, at some time, to have a secret session?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that would be one of the great occasions when the people ought to know exactly what their representatives are doing.

Mr. PROCTOR. I would certainly be in favor of making an amendment here, giving the Senate the right to close its doors while doing a certain class of business; as, for example, in cases where the concurrence of the Senate is required in nominations to office by the Governor. In such a case, if the doors were open while the Senate were engaged in discussing the character of the person recommended, there would undoubtedly be a certain amount of restriction thrown around the members of the Senate. I mean that a man would not like to express his opinions as freely in the presence of the whole world as he would if there were nobody present except the members of the body. I move to amend, by inserting after the word "session," in the second line, the words "except the Senate, while sitting in executive session."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

VACANCIES.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Before we go any further, I think we should make a little amendment to Section 12, and I wish to call the attention of the Committee to it, although not strictly in order. ["Leave, leave."] It is this word "shall." The language of the section is:—

When vacancies occur in either House, the Governor shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

I will move, if there is no objection, to amend the section by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may," and I will give my reasons for proposing the amendment. It may be that a member would resign, or a vacancy might be caused, either by resignation or otherwise, within the last few days of the close of the session; and yet by this provision there would be no option with the Governor. It says he "shall" issue the writs of election in any such case, although it might be impossible to have an election before the session would actually expire.

Mr. JOHNSON. The change of words which the gentleman from Washoe proposes is susceptible to this objection: If the Governor is clothed with this discretionary power, it may possibly happen under circumstances such as have occurred in our political experience, not in this Territory, but where political parties have been so evenly balanced that it was impossible to effect an organization of one branch of the Legislature without the presence of all the members of that body, that no organization could possibly be effected without supplying a vacancy through the instrumentality of an election. Under such circumstances, the Governor might chance to belong to a political party differing from the one supposed to preponderate in the place where the election was to be held, and for that reason he might refuse to issue the writ calling such election.

This matter was discussed somewhat in the former Convention, and for these reasons—and I conceive very properly—it was deemed necessary by that Convention to incorporate here the word "shall," or in some way to make it imperative upon the Governor that in case of a vacancy, from any cause whatever, the duty should devolve at once upon him to apply to the people to fill that vacancy, so that no county should be deprived of its just representation in the Legislature. It may be very important that the Executive shall have no power to refuse to provide for such representation. It might never happen that the Executive would do anything of the kind, but it is best to prevent the possibility of such a case occurring.

The question was taken on Mr. Sturtevant's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Section 16 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 16. Any bill may originate in either House of the Legislature, and all bills passed by one may be amended in the other.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 17 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 17. Each law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject, and matter properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title; and no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but, in such case, the act as revised, or section as amended, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

FINAL PASSAGE OF BILLS.

Section 18 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 18. Every bill shall be read by sections on three several days, in each House, unless, in case of emergency, two-thirds of the House, where such bill may be pending, shall deem it expedient to dispense with this rule; but the reading of a bill by sections, on its final passage, shall in no case be dispensed with, and the vote on the passage of every bill, or joint resolution, shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be entered on the journals of each House; and a majority of all the members elected to each House shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution, and all bills or joint resolutions so passed, shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses.

Mr. BANKS. Is it intended by this section that the ayes and noes shall be taken upon the reading of the bill, or only upon the final passage?

Mr. JOHNSON. Upon the final passage.

Mr. GIBSON. That is what it says.

Mr. BANKS. It says—

"But the reading of a bill by sections on its final passage shall in no case be dispensed with, and the vote on the passage of every bill or joint resolution shall be taken by ayes and noes."

Now, upon the final passage it must be read

by sections, but is it intended that the ayes and noes shall be taken upon each of the readings?

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill cannot be passed but once.

Mr. BANKS. Well, I think that would be the reasonable construction.

Mr. PROCTOR. I see one very serious objection here, as it appears to me, and that is, that it requires a majority of all the members elected to pass a bill, and the House might get down so low that, under this provision, one vote might kill a bill. We might have a quorum of only one more than a majority; that is, forty members constituting the House, only twenty-one might be present, and then one man could kill a bill, under this section, as it was read. I move to strike out the word "elected," and insert the word "present."

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, it must be apparent to gentlemen who have had legislative experience, and even to those, also, who have not, what the object of this provision is. It is to prevent a great deal of unnecessary special legislation, and not only that, but to defeat the usual course of proceeding of outside operators. If they have a bill before the Legislature, and that bill has not enough merit in it to secure the votes of a majority of all the members elected, I am, for one, prepared to say that it ought not to pass. I concede the extent of the objection made by the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) that if members are absent from the House in such numbers that it is reduced to a quorum merely, the vote of a single man would defeat the passage of any bill; and, sir, the object of this provision is to reach just such cases, for I have seen, and many others have seen, that when an obnoxious bill came up there would be a general skedaddling of members, who would get out of the way, leaving perhaps less than a quorum to defeat the bill. It was to prevent just such operations as these that I had the honor of drafting this section as it is here, and I hope it will be allowed to remain without any change. The effect of it must be beneficial at least to the people, although it may defeat the machinations of those who are interested in this obnoxious character of legislation.

Mr. WARWICK. I have only one word to say on this question, but I have known of very important instances in point. One of the most important measures which ever came before the Legislature of California, of which I had the honor to be a member, was passed at a time when the absence of a few members would, under this provision, have defeated that measure. I have known a case where one man has absented himself, apparently to defeat the conviction of certain parties whom it was deemed very desirable to convict. Therefore, I would like to see this section amended by substituting the word "present" instead of the word "elected."

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope no amendment will be made in this section, because we rely upon it for protection against those "bumming" bills which are brought up at every session of the Legislature. I hope the section will remain as it is.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I cannot help agreeing with the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) and those other gentlemen who have spoken on that side, in the greater part of what they have said; but I desire to call the attention of men who have had much experience in the Legislature of this Territory to the facts as they exist; and I ask them, in all sincerity, if they do not positively know that the most beneficial acts ever passed in the Legislature of this Territory have been barely carried through by, perhaps, one vote. When there comes up in the Legislature a bill of very great consequence to the public, that is sure to be a measure that has enemies—zealous enemies and warm friends. There is no such thing as a good law but what there are two sides to the question, and often there are two political parties divided upon it, and divided pretty equally. I think, when we cannot rely upon a Legislature of our own choosing, we had better choose again. Although it may work detrimentally, in certain instances, yet, I say, "sleepers" are worse than "bummers." I am opposed to letting men run away and shirk the responsibility. I think this amendment is a proper one, and I have spoken only of what I have myself seen in this Territory.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am perfectly willing to admit the force of the position taken by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) in regard to parties who have that sort of bills to get through the Legislature; but it seems to me that a better way to provide against thieving bills can be devised. Under this provision, I can see how a whole session of the Legislature might pass away without enacting a single law, merely because five or six members happened to be absent; and gentlemen will observe that more than that number of members are absent from this Convention now.

Mr. CHAPIN. In such a case, let them move a call of the House and compel the absent members to come in. They can always do that.

Mr. PROCTOR. Not until they have taken the oath of office, I think. If you had but twenty-five members in the House, and a bill came up which five members only were opposed to, you could never get that bill passed. I have more confidence in legislative bodies than some gentlemen here seem to have, and I think the better way is to provide other restrictions against thieving bills.

Mr. DUNNE. The very objection the gentleman urges constitutes one reason why I am in favor of this section. It will prevent too much legislation. The fact is, that whenever the Legislature is in session, the people wait with fear and trembling for it to adjourn, and then they thank God that it is over. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITCH. I do not esteem myself so highly, perhaps, as some of the rest of the gentlemen around me, but I may be pardoned when I say that I do not think all the honesty, intelligence, and statesmanship that the present Territory and future State of Nevada is ever likely to produce is concentrated in this Convention; and I do not know that we have a right to make imputations upon Legislatures which may be elected after us, or to say that they will not be quite as able, honest, and intelligent as we are.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, we have a perfect right.

Mr. FITCH. I see a disposition, I think, to endeavor to make this Constitution a little too near perfection, not leaving enough to the representatives of the people who are to be elected hereafter. For that reason, I shall vote for the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. Proctor's amendment, and it was not agreed to—ayes, 7; noes, not counted.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend the section, by inserting the word "final," before the word "passage," so as to read—"and the vote on the final passage of every bill," etc. I offer this amendment for the purpose of making it correspond with the term supposed to have the self-same meaning which occurs just previous.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Articles II and III of the Constitution, and had instructed him to report them back to the Convention, with some amendments, in which he was instructed to ask the concurrence of the Convention. Also, that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article IV, had made some progress thereon, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

Leave to sit again on Article IV was granted.

Mr. DELONG. I move to suspend the rule requiring Articles II and III to go on file, and that they be now ordered engrossed.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendments to Articles II and III, as adopted in Committee of the Whole, and the amendments were agreed to.

The question was taken on ordering Articles II and III to be engrossed for a third reading, and they were ordered engrossed.

The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the President declared the Convention at recess until 1 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at one o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish to call the attention of the Convention to Section 9 of Article II, on the Right of Suffrage. I think that article has passed to its engrossment, and I would like to know if it would not be in order now to move a slight amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the amendment will be read for information.

EXEMPTION OF INDIANS.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish to amend the section by inserting a proviso, exempting Indians from paying the annual poll-tax, and I would suggest the propriety of describing the class of Indians exempted, in some way, because here, as in other States, an Indian may acquire property, and settle down like other people, and in that case he should be subject to pay a poll-tax.

Mr. DELONG. I will second the amendment, because the Supreme Court of California have decided that Chinamen are Indians.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment can be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman might shape his motion so as to instruct the Engrossing Committee to make the amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would suggest further, that in the case of an educated American Indian—because they may become educated, occasionally, since we have provided for institutions of learning—if he becomes, also, a man of property, then if he is to be taxed, it seems to me he should also have the right of suffrage.

The PRESIDENT. I will state, in illustration, that I have knowledge of one instance in point. A member of the Pah Ute tribe is now living here who is an educated Indian, and in the service of the Government, I believe, at a regular salary. There may be other instances of that kind, and I do not suppose it is the desire of the Convention to exempt such persons from taxation. The person of whom I speak is in the service of our Government, in the capacity of an interpreter.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest that the amendment be, to insert the words, "uncivilized American Indians;" and then a man of that class would not be exempted.

Mr. COLLINS. In some of the Southern States, the Cherokee tribe of Indians are civilized, and hold property, which is protected by the Government and the laws. The time may not be far distant when the Indians of this Territory may come under beneficent influences, and become a civilized body of men. As soon as that is done, it seems to me that they should become citizens, at least so far as to share in the support of the Government. I think, by using the words, "wild American Indians," or "uncivilized Indians," we shall make a clear distinction between the Chinese, Kanakas, and Mongolians, and the Indian tribes whom we do not desire to tax.

BROSNAN—COLLINS—BANKS—LOCKWOOD—HAWLEY—KENNEDY—DUNNE.

[July 8.

Mr. BROSNAN. In the California Constitution they have provided that enlightened and educated Indians may be permitted to exercise the right of suffrage.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe that the motion is that the Engrossing Clerks be instructed to insert these words. I will modify the motion so as to read, "wild and uneducated Indians."

Mr. BANKS. I think "uncivilized" is best — "wild, uncivilized, and uneducated Indians."

Mr. BROSNAN. The corresponding section of the California Constitution reads thus :—

Every white male citizen of the United States, and every white male citizen of Mexico who shall have elected to become a citizen of the United States, under the treaty of peace exchanged and ratified at Queretaro on the 30th day of May, 1848, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State six months next preceding the election, and of the county or district in which he claims his vote thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now, or hereafter may be, authorized by law; provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature, by a two-thirds concurrent vote, from admitting to the right of suffrage, Indians, or the descendants of Indians, in such special cases as such portion of the legislative body may deem just and proper.

The PRESIDENT. That only has reference to the right of suffrage.

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COLLINS modified his amendment so as to move that the Committee on Engrossment be instructed to amend Section 8, (formerly Section 9), of Article II, entitled "Right of Suffrage," by inserting the words "uncivilized American," before the word Indian, so that the section would read :—

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax of not less than two nor exceeding four dollars from each male person resident in the State of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, uncivilized American Indians excepted; one-half to be applied for State, and one-half for county purposes; and the Legislature may make such payment a condition to the right to voting.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to ask one question for information. Under this section, would the Legislature have the power to exempt sick or indigent persons from the payment of a poll-tax?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Then I desire to amend, or rather I will throw it out as a suggestion, that an amendment should be made in that respect.

The PRESIDENT. The section can only be amended at this stage of the proceedings, by unanimous consent.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I merely desired to call attention to the fact, because the Constitutions of most of the States which I have examined, have a provision of that kind in them.

Mr. KINKEAD. I think the amendment suggested might be submitted, with the other.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit whether it would not be better to allow this whole matter to lie upon the table until we reach it in the regular course of business, and then let us examine it thoroughly. With all due deference, I will move to lay the subject on the table.

Mr. COLLINS. If it should happen that I should not be present when this article comes up again, will the gentleman see to it that such an amendment is brought before the Convention?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly, I will, if I am present.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I am willing to withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that there is unanimous consent to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood)?

Mr. KENNEDY. I cannot agree to give unanimous consent, for the reason that I should be opposed to such an amendment.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do not wish to offer the amendment now; I only called attention to it.

The question was taken on Mr. Collins's motion, and it was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the Chair, for the further consideration of Article IV, entitled the Legislative Department.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think it would be well, before putting that motion, to read Article V, and refer that also to the Committee of the Whole. I think we may get through them both, to-day.

Mr. DUNNE. I will withdraw my motion, for that purpose.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY, Article V, entitled Executive Department, was taken up, read a second time by title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DUNNE. I now renew my motion that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of the residue of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, the President remaining in the Chair.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the Chair, and resumed consideration of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department.

Section 19 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 19. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money shall be attached and published with the laws at every regular session of the Legislature.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Section 20 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 20. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Justices of the Peace and of Constables; for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors; regulating the practice of courts of justice; providing for changing the venue in civil and criminal cases; granting divorces; changing the names of persons; vacating roads, town plots, streets, alleys, and public squares; summoning and empanneling grand and petit juries; and providing for their compensation: regulating county and township business; regulating the election of county and township officers, and their compensation for the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county, and township purposes; in relation to fees and salaries; in relation to interest on money; providing for opening and conducting elections of State, county, or township officers, and designating the place of voting; providing for the sale of real estate belonging to minors or other persons laboring under legal disabilities.

Mr. BANKS. I move the following amendment: after the words "streets, alleys, and public squares," insert the following:—

"And the granting of franchises for the construction of toll-roads, toll-bridges, and street-railroads."

There are enumerated in this Section 20, a number of things, upon which it is designed to prevent special legislation. Now, I am not willing to concede that all special legislation is wrong, and I therefore desire to see some such section adopted, and to see those things where there obviously should be no special legislation enumerated. Among those things, I think, should properly stand street-railroads, toll-bridges, and toll-roads. There is no material provision concerning the construction of a toll-road in one part of the country which will not apply to another part of the country, and therefore it can all be provided for in a general law, leaving it to the Supervisors or County Commissioners, or whatever officers we provide for in that connection, to determine who shall enjoy such privileges under a general law. And the same remark applies to toll-roads, toll-bridges, and street-railroads.

Mr. FRIZELL. I rise for information. This section says that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in certain cases, and then the cases are enumerated. One clause of it seems to refer to the fees and salaries of county officers. Now, it appears to me, that, although it might be possible to fix the fees of office at a uniform rate, yet, in cases where they are paid by salaries, those salaries must necessarily be different. In the county of Storey, for example, the county officers should have greater salaries than the same officers should be allowed in the county of Churchill, or some of the other counties.

Mr. BANKS. I will endeavor to make an explanation on that point, and it is one which covers a great many other things in this section. The point which the gentleman makes, as I understand him, and I hope I shall be corrected if I am wrong, is this: How can we provide a general law, or how can we make or cause to be made, a general law which will provide equitably for the salaries for the same officers in different counties where the duties are different? Now, take the case, if you please, of the County Recorders. Suppose we provide that the County Recorders shall be compensated by salaries instead of fees, as they did in San Francisco, doing away with the fee system entirely, and adopting a salary system instead. Suppose we say the Legislature shall pass a law providing for salaries, instead of fees. Then, the way it would be adjusted would properly be, that where the receipts are greater, the salaries should be greater in proportion. Of course, the general expenses of the office would be paid from the fees, and the salaries would be paid from the county treasury. The fees being paid into the county treasury, the Legislature could provide that in cases where the fees so paid by the County Recorder reached a certain amount, the salary should be so much, and where the fees reached another certain amount, it should be so much more, regulating the matter upon a scale very much like that established in the matter of mercantile licenses. In that way they could have a general law which would be adapted to the wants of each particular county, no matter what amount of business was done in such county.

Mr. COLLINS. Take the case of a Post Office, for instance.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir; that is an illustration exactly in point; I did not think of it.

Mr. FITCH. I wish to express my opposition to this amendment. I think that the granting of toll-road and bridge franchises, when granted at all, should be left to the Legislature; and I suppose the gentleman does not propose to prohibit them altogether, but only to leave them to the local authorities—the various little local Legislatures of the respective counties—and I have to say, in respect to that, I am of opinion that franchises of that kind are absolutely necessary to the development of a new country, and the granting of them can be left with greater safety to a Legislature consisting of from fifty to seventy-five men, and often a larger number, than to a Board of County Commissioners, consisting of only three, five, seven, or nine men. For that reason I oppose the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I observe that in the Schedule, it is provided that—

"Bodies corporate, including counties, towns, and cities, shall continue as if no change had taken place; and all process which may issue under the authority of the Territory of Nevada, previous to its admission into the Union as one of the United States, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State of Nevada."

And Section 2 provides as follows:—

Sec. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada, in force at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this Constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the Legislature.

Now, sir, it occurs to me, although I may be jumping hastily to the conclusion, not having paid especial attention to the subject heretofore, that if we incorporate a provision that the Legislature shall have no power to grant these franchises, by that act, the several acts of incorporation under the local and special laws existing at this time on the statute books of the Territory of Nevada, granting to these bodies corporate, enumerated as counties, towns, and cities, certain powers, become, to a certain extent, at least, invalidated.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir; they have their vested rights.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, even if that view is correct, still I am very much disposed to think, taking into consideration the immense value of many of the franchises which have been granted to individuals, and bodies corporate—for many of them are extremely valuable, and held by individuals as individual property, without any act of incorporation—I say, it appears to me that we are imperiling the rights of the owners of such property. Now, sir, any intelligent man who will take into consideration the cost of the construction of the Kingsbury Grade or the King's Canon road, or many other of our toll-roads which have helped to give us access to the world outside, and by that means have conferred such inestimable benefits upon the Territory, will, I think, come to the conclusion that those public benefits are such as should entitle the holders of those franchises to every safeguard which can be thrown around their rights. It certainly cannot be the wish of this Convention, nor, I think, of any member of it, to interfere with their rights in any way, shape, or form.

Now, sir, taking it for granted that my first suggestion was founded neither in law, nor fact, nor reason—setting that aside altogether, still, I say, that, by this provision, we take the power of granting and regulating those and similar franchises out of the hands of a body infinitely better capable to legislate upon and determine with propriety the question of a renewal of any franchise, than would be, by any possibility, a board of county commissioners composed of two, three, four, five, or six members, as they are now, or may hereafter be organized in this Territory; and I say there is danger that we may imperil the rights of men who have in good faith invested large amounts of capital in these important enterprises, and who deserve, instead of the hue and cry which has been raised against franchises, the thanks of the community. These franchises have been of almost inestimable value to the Territory. By means of them, public works have been constructed, under the only auspices which could have resulted in their construction, and, in consequence, we to-day occupy a position far superior to that which we should have occupied in respect to our general prosperity, to say the least of it, without these franchises.

It would be a very dangerous movement, it appears to me, notwithstanding the various allegations of fraud and corruption which have been made from time to time, to transfer the control of these franchises to the boards of county commissioners in this Territory. Already charges of fraud and corruption have been brought against these last named bodies, and grand juries have been sitting upon and investigating their deeds. They have been examining and inquiring carefully into the acts of certain boards of county commissioners, and in some cases they have reported adversely upon the acts of such boards, although they have been governed in a few cases, it may be, by a disposition to allow members of those boards to retrieve their past errors, more than by a sense of duty in the present, which would have impelled them to present those members to the authorities by indictment. I say, while such a condition of affairs exists in this Territory, it is infinitely better that we should leave the disposal of these enterprises, in which so much money has been and is continually being invested, and the prosecution of which has conducted so much to promote the interests of this Territory, to a legislative body coming fresh from the whole people, consisting of men who are well prepared to determine the rights of applicants, and who will be more disposed, if I may say so without reflection upon the character of the people of this Territory, to do justice in granting or regrating these rights, than any little body of county officials can be.

Now, sir, I submit my first proposition to the consideration of the Convention, and, of course, I shall yield to their views upon it. If it be disputed, I freely admit that I am not prepared to assert or maintain that it is correct; but I say that on the face of it, it would appear that by incorporating this provision suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks), we should be interfering with vested rights; and I repeat that, in my opinion, we should be taking the matter from the hands of the body infinitely better calculated to do justice to applicants, and placing it in the hands of bodies, which do not, to say the least, stand fair and above reproach in the different communities in which they exercise their functions.

Mr. HOVEY. As salaries have been mentioned in this connection, I would like to move, when it shall be in order, to strike out so much of this section as relates to salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion would not be in order at this time.

Mr. COLLINS. I am decidedly in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks). The great curse that has afflicted this Territory, and that afflicts every State and Territory where it is not proscribed by law, is this matter of special franchises. I am therefore in favor of proscribing it, so far as it can possibly be done consistently with the wants of the public. Now we had thought that the two Legislatures of this Territory, preceding the last, had given away everything that could be given; but if you look at the proceedings of the last session of the Legislature, you will find that nearly one-third of all the acts of that body consisted in the giving away of franchises and special privileges, to individuals who were lobbyists about the Legislature.

Friday.]

FITCH—COLLINS—BROSNAN—JOHNSON.

[July 8.]

Now, why should not these matters be conducted in such a way as to allow those franchises and privileges to be equally open to every citizen? The first Legislature granted numerous special railroad franchises; and what is the result? Why, sir, those franchises have been knocking at the doors of capitalists for three years past, and still our railroads have not been built. And if they remain in the same hands, they will not be built for, perhaps, ten years to come, and possibly never; whereas, if there had been a general law on the subject of railroads, a party could go and locate his road, and set his men to work upon it without delay, and I venture to say that, between the valley of Washoe and Eagle Valley, and the valley of the Truckee, we should to-day have been enabled to hear the steam-whistle, and see the locomotive tramping up and down upon the iron rails. I say this special legislation ought at once to have the brakes placed upon it, so far as the public safety will admit.

Open, if you please, the lids of the volume which contains the enactments of the last Legislature, and there you will find some thirty-four or thirty-five special acts, in that neighborhood at least, providing for the building of toll-roads and toll-bridges, for floating logs down the rivers, etc. They have left nobody else a right, even if they own ever so much upland, to float logs down the adjacent streams; but, by these special franchises, they have locked up the rivers as effectually as if they were chained by ice. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt puts a veto upon this kind of legislation. It goes still farther; it not only prohibits this special legislation, in respect to building bridges and toll-roads, but it goes into the cities, and attacks that other system of monopoly, in regard to the railroads which traverse the streets of cities and towns. I would like to see the system of free competition extended to water-works, gas-works, and hundreds of other things which I might mention, in regard to which, in my judgment, there should be no special privileges granted. Let them all be open to every citizen.

But it is suggested that if a railroad is built across the country, between certain points, somebody else will find an adjacent line upon which he can build another and competing road, which will injure the one first constructed. Now, when capitalists invest their money, they invest it with their eyes wide open, and they will exercise more judgment when they are investing it under general laws than they would manifest by coming here to lobby for franchises under a system that would tie them up forever. A railroad from here to Virginia has been proposed. Now, suppose that road was built; then, I say, if capitalists will run the risk of running another road over the same route, by all means let them do it. The owners of the first road have pushed it forward at their own risk, and let the others do the same. I have no fear but that the common sense and judgment of business men will be sufficient for their protection, and, in the end, these matters will regulate themselves. I have no fear of any bad consequences likely to result from leaving them to regulate themselves, and I am decidedly opposed to special legislation. The fact is, we are already legislating too much, and the sooner we put the brakes on the wheels, the better for us and for the new State we desire to establish.

Mr. FITCH. I do not see that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt is calculated to reach the evils of which the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) complains. The amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt is merely to the effect that the Legislature shall not have power to pass special laws granting franchises for toll-bridges, toll-roads, and street railroads. It says nothing whatever about the navigation of rivers or about gas pipes and water pipes, and those other and various evils concerning which my colleague complains; and I do not think it reaches even what it is intended to reach. It simply proposes to take the power of granting franchises from the Legislature and to vest that power in bodies of less responsibility, because they are less numerous.

Mr. COLLINS. Under general laws.

Mr. FITCH. Under general laws, of course; but under general laws by which you give this power to County Commissioners.

Mr. BROSNAN. I call attention to the next section, which supplies the omission to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. FITCH. I perceive it, but in regard to special legislation I do not agree, Mr. Chairman, with the views which have been expressed. I think there is nothing so well calculated to develop and open up a new country as this very special legislation, about which so much has been said. I think that the present system of granting toll-road and toll-bridge franchises, while it has its evils, secures more than compensating benefits. If these franchises had never been granted, and these roads and bridges never built, the country would not have been developed as it has been. It is true that lobbyists do surround legislatures, but that is an evil inseparable from the existing condition of things. I do not see any way to avoid it. I think that the good prevented from being done by this amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt would be greater than the evil it proposes to destroy, and for that reason I oppose the amendment.

[Mr. DeLoxg in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire in the outset, Mr. Chairman, to be understood in this, that I am opposed, as a matter of principle, to the whole system or scheme of special legislation, and, so far as it can be made applicable, I desire all legislation upon those several matters to be general in its character. But it will be seen, I think, that general legislation, on the subjects embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) cannot be made applicable. Now, let us suppose a case, in connection with

Friday.]

JOHNSON—COLLINS.

[July 8.

toll-roads and bridges. These are subjects upon which a great deal of legislation has been had heretofore, and general laws, similar to such as are now proposed, have been enacted. The power has ordinarily been lodged in a Board of Supervisors or of County Commissioners to grant franchises of this nature, under certain restrictions and regulations. We all admit, in the first place, that in very many cases these special franchises are beneficial to the public, and very often they inure to the benefit of the public in a much greater degree than they do to the profit of the individuals who undertake the enterprises contemplated by such franchises. Now, in respect to toll-roads and bridges, it will be seen that difficulty will be encountered in the delegation of the power of granting franchises, under any general law which can be devised. The controlling power must necessarily be conferred upon some general authority. Take the instance of a toll-road passing through more than one county, and suppose the franchise for such road is to be granted by the authority of the Board of County Commissioners or Supervisors of the counties where the work is located. Suppose, and it is no unreasonable or improbable supposition, that one county may happen to be in favor of granting the franchise, but the other is opposed to it; or that there is a conflict of private interests—that whilst one county is in favor of giving the franchise to one applicant, the other county is equally as favorable to granting it to another applicant. In that manner, the granting of a franchise, which might have resulted in conferring incalculable benefits upon the public, would be utterly and entirely defeated by the practical defects of the law.

It is only necessary for me to refer to the provisions of the California Constitution, and the legislation of the last session in that State, to illustrate my views on this subject. I will instance a case, which now occurs to my mind. An application was made to the Legislature of California for a franchise for a toll-road from some point in Amador County to the newly-created county of Alpine. It was brought to the knowledge of the Legislature, that the authorities of the counties in which the road was to be constructed refused to concur in their action in regard to it, and thereupon, in a manner which I conceived to be entirely contrary to the spirit of their State Constitution, the Legislature proceeded to regulate that matter. I believe that, in accordance with a just interpretation of the Constitution of California, their lands were so tied, that they were not at liberty to grant any such special franchise, but nevertheless, they did pass the bill asked for. The Governor, for constitutional reasons which he alleged in his message, vetoed the bill, but upon arguments advanced and reasons assigned by the Legislature, that, and other similar bills, received the necessary constitutional majorities and became laws, notwithstanding the Governor's objections. There have been in California, undoubtedly, instances where beneficial enterprises would have been defeated by the legitimate operation of a constitutional provision like this now under consideration, and it is not unreasonable in our own case to suppose that there may be similar cases arising in the State of Nevada.

Again, take the case of bridges. There are streams which at present do not mark the boundaries of counties, but they may do so in the future, as our population increases. Consider the Truckee River as a boundary between two counties, for example. Every gentleman familiar with that stream, knows the fact that it is impossible, at most seasons of the year, to cross it without a bridge or a ferry. Now suppose a county were organized on one side of the Truckee River, and another on the other side, in that valley, and in that condition of affairs, a person or a company desired to build a bridge across that stream. Application is made to the local authorities of the two counties, but the authorities of one county reply that citizens of their own county shall have the franchise, while those of the other county insist that some of their citizens shall have it, and consequently refuse to concur in the action of their neighbors; so there is, and can be, no united action had in the matter. Although the public necessities demand the construction of the work, yet the public interests are sacrificed, and the enterprise defeated by the incorporation of a feature of this kind into our Constitution.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Most undoubtedly.

Mr. COLLINS. I would ask if there is anything in this rule, as prescribed in the Constitutions of most of the States, which would prevent the Legislature from providing, by a general law, for the regulation of toll-roads, so that where a road passes through two or more counties, its construction can, nevertheless, be provided for? I think it may be done in the same manner as in the case of railroads. There are general laws in relation to railroads which prescribe the mode in which property shall be condemned, etc., and I ask if the same rule could not be applied to toll-roads, by a general law framed under the sanction of this Constitution?

Mr. JOHNSON. I can see that, under the operation of the proposed amendment, cases might arise which no legislation could reach. Take, for instance, the county of Ormsby and the county of Douglas. Here is a road to be constructed material to the welfare of each; but those counties are jealous of their respective rights, and if it is proposed to incorporate in the law a provision that the county of Ormsby shall have the right to dispose of and regulate the franchise, the county of Douglas, naturally jealous of its rights, will oppose such a provision, and it would not be likely to pass. And the same would be the result, for the same reasons, if the case were reversed.

Friday.]

JOHNSON—BANKS.

[July 8.

The consequence would inevitably be, that no law could be placed upon the statute-books which would be practically operative in such cases. I can conceive that many cases of that kind would be likely to arise, in the event of the adoption of the proposed amendment. I repeat, that I am willing to go as far as the furthest in preventing special legislation, wherever it is practical to do so, but not farther than such prohibition can be rendered of practical utility. The moment you transcend that limit, I am opposed to taking another step in that direction.

Something has been said about our Territorial Legislature having granted franchises. Well, they have been pretty liberal in that respect; but in reference to the failure to build railroads under the franchises granted, I can suggest a better reason, I think, than has been given, why such franchises have been unimproved, and that is, not because too much power has been given by these franchises; not because peculiar privileges have been granted, and because everybody else could not enjoy the same privileges, but quite the contrary; the true reason, I conceive, is exactly the reverse of that—because everybody could enjoy the same privileges in the future, if the Legislature deemed it proper to grant them the same privileges. I have had some little experience in these matters. And, by the way, I may be allowed to say, in this connection, that a bill, granting certain franchises and creating a corporation, was passed at the last session, in which my name was used as one of the corporators, but I had no knowledge of it at the time, and I soon thereafter conveyed to another party all the interest I had in that matter. But circumstances have brought me in contact with those corporators, and I know that not only they but other persons did propose to invest in that enterprise. I am referring now particularly to the franchise for building a railroad from Virginia, through Ormsby and Washoe Counties, and I suppose the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins), in his remarks just now, referred to the same thing. If gentlemen will inquire into that matter, they will find that what I have stated was the reason, and the sole reason offered by capitalists, men with abundance of capital, for not investing in that enterprise. Not for a single instant after they had thoroughly examined the route, and the plans and prospects of the road, did they entertain a doubt but that it would prove to be one of the most judicious investments of capital, but they objected to undertake the enterprise for this very reason—that they had not and could not have the exclusive privilege. They said the next session of the Legislature might grant the same privilege to some other company running over a portion, if not entirely the same route, and that consideration rendered the franchise comparatively valueless, when otherwise it would have been one of the most valuable corporate rights ever granted by a Legislature, both to the corporators themselves and to the public at large. That is the only reason why this enterprise has not been entered upon, and why, up to this time, this road has not been built or commenced.

Now, whilst I am in favor of trammeling the Legislature to the utmost possible degree of propriety in this matter of special legislation, yet, I say, let us not go beyond a practical point; and when we reach that point, let us there rest. When we see, as I think we can in this matter of the power of special legislation, that there are evils growing out of our proposed restrictions much greater than any benefits which can possibly be secured by them, then we ought to refrain from making any such restrictions.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to say a few words in reply to the arguments of the gentleman from Ormsby. He has called up imaginary objections and difficulties supposed to have arisen in California. Now, it is better, in my opinion, to look to history, than to devote our attention altogether to the future, calling up imaginary cases, that may, and may not, arise. In the State of California, a few years ago, under the influence of a number of Executive vetoes, men who desired to invest in works of this kind began to do so under the general laws of the State, which were eminently wholesome and proper; but more recently, it seems, they came to the conclusion that the provision on the subject of special legislation in the amended Constitution of that State did not require such laws, or at least, did not prohibit the granting of special franchises. Under those general laws, the most expensive, the most desirable of public works of this kind, have been carried on and completed. But since the system of special legislation has been adopted, the Legislature of California has been surrounded by a set of vampyres, whose business it has been to rob by statute, and steal by law. These men have systematically filched from the Legislature valuable franchises, and have demanded from capitalists extortionate prices for procuring them. In that way, many beneficial enterprises have been defeated. I have known an instance where a franchise of considerable magnitude was pending, in which not less than $10,000 were expended for whiskey bills, and matters of that character alone, to say nothing of other things, about which the public knew nothing.

Now I contend that there are no difficulties about toll-bridges, such as the gentleman from Ormsby has suggested. We have no large streams in this State where heavy expenditures of capital are required in the construction of bridges. In California, where such streams exist, it has been found not at all difficult to enact such laws as to authorize the counties on the two sides of a stream proposed to be bridged, to regulate the matter satisfactorily. Neither has there been found in California any difficulty in enacting laws covering the whole case of roads extending through two or more counties. The experience of California, in a word, demonstrates this, that while a system of general legislation was enforced there, in this matter of toll-road and bridge franchises, satisfaction was given to all parties—to the franchise-seeker, or the capitalist, and to the public—while, under the more recent system of granting franchises, under the new interpretation of the Constitution by the Legislature, there has grown up a system of lobby influence which is most disgraceful to the State, and which, I hope and trust, never will be suffered to grow up in the State of Nevada.

Mr. HOVEY. I move to amend by inserting the words "and other," between the word "street," and the word "railroad," so that the amendment will read: "The granting of franchises for the construction of toll-roads, toll-bridges, and street and other railroads."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FITCH. I am opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, but I want to have it as perfect as possible, in case it should pass, and I therefore move to amend by inserting the word "canals."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 11; noes, 12.

COMPENSATION OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

The question recurred on the adoption of the original section.

Mr. FRIZELL. I move to amend the section, by striking out after the words "county and township officers," the words, "and their compensation;" also, by striking out the words, "in relation to fees and salaries."

The SECRETARY read the section as it would stand with the proposed amendment.

Mr. FRIZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Committee, my motives in offering this amendment are these: I do not think that any law can be made which will bear uniformly in regard to the fees and salaries of officers in this proposed State. I do not think that any general law can reach that subject fairly, if a general law can be made to reach it at all. I have no sinister motive in proposing this amendment, but I think the subject is sufficiently regulated in Section 21, which follows, where it is made obligatory on the Legislature to make all laws uniform and general in their operation, in all cases where general laws can be made applicable. But, conscientiously speaking, I do not see that any general law can operate uniformly and correctly in this matter of the compensation of officers, and therefore I proposed to strike out those words. Then if the Legislature find that such a law can be made to work uniformly, just as well, of course, under Section 21, it is obligatory on the Legislature to pass such a law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

INTEREST ON MONEY.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is another matter here to which I desire to call attention, and that is in relation to the interest on money. I do not think that subject ever had any proper place in this instrument. I will, therefore, submit an amendment to strike out the words, "in relation to the interest on money." It is not likely that the Legislature ever would pass a special law upon this matter of interest on money; but this section appears to have been copied from the Constitution of Kansas, and, possibly, it was found also in the Constitution of Indiana. It seems that it was at the solicitation of one member of the committee to whom the matter was entrusted that this language was retained; but, inasmuch as it is not probable that the Legislature would ever pass any special act in relation to a subject of that kind, I deem it to be entirely out of place, and, therefore, hope it will be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. MCCLINTON. I propose to amend this section further, by striking out the words, "providing for their compensation," in the clause relating to petit jurors.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 21 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 21. In all cases enumerated in the preceding sections, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the State.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 22 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 22. Provision may be made by general law for bringing suit against the State as to all liabilities originating after the adoption of this Constitution.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 23 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 23. The enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: "The people of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows"—and no law shall be enacted except by bill.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 24 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 24. No lottery shall be authorized by the State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 25 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 25. The Legislature shall establish a system of county and township government, which shall be uniform throughout the State.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 26 was read, as follows:—

[July 8.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Board of County Commissioners, in each county, and these County Commissioners shall jointly and individually perform such duties as may be prescribed by law.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

QUALIFICATIONS OF JURORS.

Section 27 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 27. Laws may be made to exclude from serving on juries all persons not qualified electors of this State, and all persons who shall have been convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, larceny, or other high crimes, unless restored to civil rights; and laws shall be passed regulating elections, and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influence thereon, from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to amend Section 27 by striking out the words, "all persons not qualified electors of this State, and." My reason is simply this: that perhaps it would be found a very difficult matter to get twelve men, or twenty-four men, rather, to serve on a jury, who have paid a poll-tax, and a man may purposely refuse to pay the poll-tax, in order to get rid of jury duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman will recollect that it is within the power of the Legislature to adopt such an enactment or not, as it pleases, and it can also make the non-payment of a poll-tax a ground of exemption or not. Now, I would prefer that laws should be made to exclude from jury duty all except qualified electors, so as to prevent the picking up of jurors for a particular occasion, or a particular action, who have been, perhaps, but a short time in the Territory. I think the section had better stand as it is.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend the section by striking out the words, "bribery, perjury, forgery, larceny, or other high crimes," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the word "felony."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend by striking out the word "may," and inserting the word "shall" in the first line. My reason is this: I think it is a very important section, and I do not like to have it left optional with the Legislature whether such laws shall be made or not. I think it is very essential that those laws should be made.

The question was taken, and on a division the amendment was agreed to—ayes, 12; noes not counted.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 28 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 28. No money shall be drawn from the State treasury as salary or compensation to any officer or employe of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, except in cases where such salary or compensation has been fixed by a law in force prior to the election or appointment of such officer or employe; and the salary or compensation so fixed shall neither be increased nor diminished so as to apply to any officer or employe of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, at such session; provided, that this restriction shall not apply to the first special and regular sessions of the Legislature.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 29 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 29. The first regular session of the Legislature under this Constitution may extend to ninety days, but no subsequent regular session shall exceed sixty days, nor any special session convened by the Governor exceed twenty days.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

THE HOMESTEAD.

Section 30 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 30. A homestead not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land, outside of the limits of a town or city, or not exceeding one acre within the limits of any town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, of the aggregate value of five thousand dollars, shall be exempt from forced sale under any process of law, and shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists; but no property shall be exempt from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife; and laws shall be enacted providing for the recording of such homestead within the county in which the same may be situated.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to amend this section by striking out after the word "homestead," in the first line, to and including the words "five thousand dollars;" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as provided by law." I will state briefly my reason for this amendment. I do not think that we ought, in this Constitution, to fix the amount or value of this homestead to be exempted. At some time it may happen that five thousand dollars would be an excessive amount, and at others it may be too small. I think the amount is properly something for the Legislature to fix upon, and I am therefore in favor of leaving it for the Legislature.

The question was taken, and, on a division, the amendment was agreed to—ayes, 17; noes, 6.

Mr. JOHNSON. I give notice that at the proper time, in the Convention, I will move to re-incorporate the words which have been stricken out.

Mr. BANKS. I had risen with the intention of giving the same notice.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

SEPARATE PROPERTY OF THE WIFE.

Section 31 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 31. All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to strike out the entire section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to hear the reason for that motion.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

No other amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

SOLE TRADERS.

Section 32 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 32. No law shall be passed authorizing married women to carry on business as sole traders.

Mr. FITCH. I move to strike out that section.

Mr. WETHERILL. I hope the section will not be stricken out. We have seen the evils of the system of "sole traders" in California, in divers instances. It has led to abuses throughout the State. Dishonesty is practiced under it in every shape, and I hope the section will be retained.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope, too, that section will not be stricken out. In striking out that section you benefit no class of men or women save one, and that is the proprietors of newspapers; for every newspaper will be likely to have about twenty advertisements a day, of women who are going to set up for themselves as sole traders.

Mr. BROSNAN. I hope the Convention will not strike out that section. I recollect that in the last Convention there was a great deal of discussion on this subject. It occupied much of the time of that Convention, and although this Convention is not, of course, bound by the action of that, yet some consideration is due to the investigation and the consideration which was given to this important section by that body. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Wetherill,) this business of sole trading has been a fruitful source of fraud and litigation in California; in fact it became at one time a by-word and reproach in that State. Cases were tried in the Courts of that State, in which it appeared that the most unbecoming occupations were pursued, or said to have been pursued by the female branch of the domestic circle—classes of business, sir, that female modesty would blush at, but which, nevertheless, were carried on, or said to be carried on, by wives, as sole traders, although in reality merely for the purpose, as was frequently found there by juries, of covering up the indebtedness, or the property, rather, of the head of the family, so that he might avoid the payment of his honest debts. For instance, wives have been known to carry on, ostensibly, the farming business, and the farm and the implements of agriculture, the horses, the cows, and everything of that description pertaining to the farm, was said to be owned and managed by the wife, whilst she was still living under the roof of the husband, owning property to the amount of thousands of dollars, while, at the same time, some laboring man who had perhaps a few hundred dollars due him for work done for the husband, was unable to obtain his pay.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is charging these things upon the farmers; now, in my opinion, farmers do not do such things; they are done more in the big cities. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BROSNAN. I was stating that such cases had been before the courts in California, where the heads of families have been sued for indebtedness due from them to their employers, and have set up as a defense, in order to escape from that indebtedness, that the property all belonged to their wives. Cases of that kind have not been infrequent, and it was with the knowledge of these things, of the great abuses and evils which might possibly arise from allowing a man to carry on business under the cloak of the wife's doing business in her own name—the possibility, I say, that under such a system great wrongs might be perpetrated, and honest creditors defrauded by debtors—that I was in favor, in the other Convention, of inserting that section in the Constitution. I have seen nothing since then calculated to change my views. It is equally as necessary now as it was then, and I hope the section will be retained in the Constitution which we are going to adopt.

Mr. CHAPIN. The gentleman has alluded to the passage of this section in the last Convention. It did so pass, but it was by a bare majority only, and I have heard the most bitter complaints about that provision in that Constitution since that time. I am more firmly convinced now than I was then, of the importance of having it stricken out. Most of us are aware that many wives in this Territory are now suffering from having miserable, intemperate husbands who are incapable of transacting business, and those wives only get a living by carrying on business for themselves.

Mr. FRIZELL [in his seat.] Well, let them get a divorce.

Mr. CHAPIN. They are doing that to a liberal extent here now. [Laughter.] And now I propose to strike out this provision, and let them, if they will, go into some honorable, honest business, and get a living by it. I hope the section will be stricken out.

The question was taken on the motion to amend, by striking out the section, and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 11; noes, 14.

Mr. FITCH. I give notice that I shall renew the motion when the question comes up in the Convention.

No other amendment being offered, the section was adopted, upon a division—ayes, 13; noes, 10.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Section 33 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 33. The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, County Recorders, who shall be ex-officio County Auditors, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, County Surveyors, Public Administrators, and other necessary officers, and fix by law their duties and compensation ; provided, that in no case such compensation shall exceed in the aggregate, as salary and fees in office, the sum of four thousand dollars per annum, to any one of such officers, exclusive of the necessary expenses attendant upon the discharge of the duties of the office, except the Sheriff's, whose compensation in fees and salary shall in no case exceed the sum of six thousand dollars per annum, exclusive of expenses necessarily incurred in the discharge of the duties of said office. County Clerks shall be ex-officio Clerks of the Courts of Record in and for their respective counties.

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend the section by striking out, after the word "compensation," the proviso down to and including the words, "duties of said office," so that the section, if amended as I propose, would read thus :—

SEC. 33. The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, County Recorders, who shall be ex-officio County Auditors, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, County Surveyors, Public Administrators, and other necessary officers, and fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex-officio Clerks of the Courts of Record in and for their respective counties.

My reasons for proposing this amendment, are briefly these : I wish to leave the fixing of all salaries, especially those of local and county officers, to the Legislature, and I do not desire to have those salaries defined and fixed in the Constitution. That was one of the main objections to the old Constitution when it was submitted to the people, and the same objection will, of course, be urged against the new one if we retain such a proviso. I regard it as bad policy to fix, in the fundamental law of the State, the amount of salaries, which, by the operation of changes in the currency, or on account of some increase or decrease of values, may, in a very short time, be practically greatly reduced or increased. Perhaps the salary of the County Clerk, fixed now at four thousand dollars as a maximum, may be entirely correct and sufficient at the present time, but the national currency may hereafter be adopted, and a large increase of values result ; in such a case, four thousand dollars would be an insignificant and paltry sum. For that reason I am opposed to putting that or any other specific sum in the fundamental law of the State. I think it is exclusively within the province of the Legislature, and altogether out of place here.

Mr. EARL. I agree fully with the gentleman in the opinion that, in the event of our having a paper currency, the amount here established will not be sufficient, especially in some of the counties ; indeed, I know it will not be sufficient. I also concur in the objection that it is improper to specify the amount of any salary in our fundamental law.

Mr. JOHNSON. If we could do it—if it were practicable, as it seemed to be at the time this Constitution was framed in the former Convention, to make a maximum for the salaries of all these officers—I should, for one, like to adopt that course. But I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I have learned one thing since that time, and that is, that these county officers wield a very potent influence, and I am not willing to incorporate in this Constitution the elements of its own destruction. I am willing to leave this whole question of salaries and fees to the Legislature, rather than incorporate such a provision here, because I do not desire to provoke any opposition which can be avoided.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

COMPENSATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Section 34 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 34. The members of the Legislature shall receive as compensation for services, the sum of eight dollars for each day's actual attendance upon their legislative duties, at any regular or special session, and thirty cents for each mile traveled by the usual route in going to and returning from the place of meeting of the Legislature, and no further compensation or allowance shall be made to any member of the Legislature for the performance of his official duties ; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers and stationery, not exceeding the sum of forty dollars, for any general or special session, to each member ; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant Governor, as President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have an amendment here which I desire to offer. It is a copy of the provision contained in the California Constitution on this subject, and I move its adoption as a substitute for the section.

The SECRETARY read as follows :—

SEC. 34. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury ; but no increase of the compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that there should be an amendment to provide for the compensation of the first Legislature.

Mr. WARWICK. I will move to amend, by allowing the members of the first Legislature eight dollars per day, and thirty cents for each mile of travel.

Mr. KENNEDY. That can be done in the Schedule.

Mr. WARWICK. There is a suggestion on my left that it can be altered in the Schedule, and therefore I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am opposed to the substitute. So far as the provision is made applicable to members of the first Legislature, I am not particular about it ; but, Mr. Chairman, I am earnestly in favor of the proviso contained in this section, to wit :—

Friday.] WARWICK—KENNEDY—JOHNSON—BANKS—FITCH—LOCKWOOD—CROSMAN. [July 8,

Provided that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of forty dollars for any general or special session for each member.

You may fix the amount at forty, sixty, or one hundred dollars, if you please; but you and I know, that a great proportion of the items which go to make up the sum of legislative expenses, consist of these apparently trifling matters. My observation has shown me that these small items amount in the aggregate to an enormous sum, and I propose, by this provision, to make every member responsible for whatever of expense for stationery, papers, etc., he incurs—to provide such guards and restrictions as will prevent members of the Legislature from being quartered on the Treasury, so far as to compel the State to pay not only for what they use, but also for what they may choose to carry away, or waste and destroy. I care not what amount may be fixed upon, but at all events, let us designate some amount, so as to make each member the guardian and custodian of the public revenue, and, if you do that, you will avoid what I know has been a crying evil in the State of California—more particularly so there, perhaps, than here.

As to the salaries of members, I am quite satisfied to leave that matter to the Legislature, after we shall have fixed the salaries for the first session. In that respect, I do not think it is necessary to have such a guarded restriction.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "eight," and inserting "ten."

Mr. KENNEDY. I am inclined to accede to the views of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) who has had more experience in these legislative matters than I have; but I think the sum named here is entirely too small, and will suggest that it be amended, so as to make the amount named in the proviso eighty, instead of forty dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that we pass over the section temporarily. I think we can harmonize our views, and readily agree upon the amount to be allowed.

No objection being made, the section was passed over temporarily.

ELECTIONS OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Section 35 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 35. In all elections for United States Senators, such elections shall be held in joint convention of both Houses of the Legislature. It shall be the duty of the Legislature which convenes next preceding the expiration of the term of such Senator, to elect his successor. If a vacancy in such Senatorial representation from any cause occurs, it shall be the duty of the Legislature then in session, or at the succeeding session thereof, to supply such vacancy. If the Legislature shall at any time, as herein provided, fail to unite in a joint convention within twenty days after the commencement of the session of the Legislature, for the election of such Senator, it shall be the duty of the Governor, by proclamation, to convene the two Houses of the Legislature in joint convention, within not less than five days, nor exceeding ten days, from the publication of his proclamation, and the joint convention, when so assembled, shall proceed to elect the Senator, as herein provided.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to offer a slight verbal amendment here, although it is not a matter of great importance. It says: "If a vacancy in such Senatorial representation from any cause occurs." I think the word should be "occur," using the subjunctive form. I move to amend, by striking out the letter "s" from the word "occurs."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

PAY OF THE LEGISLATURE—AGAIN.

The consideration of Section 34 was resumed.

Mr. FITCH offered the following, which Mr. Kennedy accepted, in lieu of the substitute which he had offered :—

SEC. 34. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation, to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury, but no increase of compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of eighty dollars for any general or special session to each member.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I see that there is no provision here for the additional compensation of the Lieutenant-Governor and Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will have to be amended in that respect, perhaps.

Mr. FITCH. I think the Legislature may be allowed to fix the compensation of the Lieutenant-Governor and Speaker. They can place it higher than that of the other members, if they choose.

The question was taken on the adoption of the substitute, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CROSMAN. Now, I move to amend the substitute, by striking out the word "eighty," and inserting the word "fifty."

Mr. FITCH. I would suggest that this is not only the allowance for postage, but for newspapers, and stationery, also. A large amount of stationery must be used, and as greenbacks may be adopted as the currency, it seems to me that fifty dollars would be too small an allowance for a three months' session.

Mr. CROSMAN. It is proposed that the first session only shall continue for three months, and that is provided for elsewhere. After the first session the time is to be materially shortened, being fixed at sixty days, I believe. Besides, we do not expect greenbacks to remain at their present rates a great while. We can fix the amount to be allowed for the first session, in the Schedule.

Mr. FITCH. If we place the amount at eighty dollars, we do not necessarily thereby compel members to use the whole.

Friday.] CROSMAN—FITCH—JOHNSON—KENNEDY—CHAPIN—DUNNE—EARL. [July 8.

Mr. CROSMAN. I would ask the gentleman if he ever knew a case of a limitation of that kind, where the limit was not reached. I have witnessed it repeatedly.

Mr. FITCH. I will state, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, that I know of three or four members of a recent California Legislature, who went away and left a hundred dollars worth of stationery, which they might have appropriated as well as not, if they had seen fit to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state, on the other hand, that I have known of some who sent away trunks full of stationery.

Mr. KENNEDY. Gentlemen should inquire what it costs for newspapers, and for letter postage, as well as for all the stationery used. I do not think that the sum mentioned will pay the whole cost of those things, and I know, that for my own part, I use more than that amount.

Mr. CROSMAN. This amendment is to apply, as I understand, to the State Legislature only when the State Government shall be in working order, which will probably be about two years hence. The Schedule will be likely to fix the per diem and expenses of the first Legislature, if we do not do so in the body of the Constitution. It may be, that greenbacks are not worth now more than fifty cents on the dollar, but two years from now, when the Constitution will be fairly in operation, I calculate that fifty dollars in greenbacks will be fifty dollars.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Crosman, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to amend, by striking out "eighty," and inserting "sixty."

The question was taken, and, upon a division, the amendment was agreed to—ayes, 13; noes, 12.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

THE VETO POWER.

Section 36 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 36. Every bill which may have passed the Legislature, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it originated, which shall enter such objections upon the journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it again pass both Houses by ayes and noes, by a majority of two-thirds of the members elected to each House, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the Governor's objections. If any bill shall not be returned within five days after it shall have been presented to him, (Sunday excepted,) exclusive of the day on which he received it, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature, by its final adjournment, prevent such return, in which case it shall be a law, unless the Governor, within ten days next after the adjournment, (Sunday excepted,) shall file such bill, with his objections thereto, in the office of the Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the Legislature at its next session, in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor; and if the same shall receive the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, upon a vote taken by ayes and noes, to be entered upon the journals of each House, it shall become a law.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest a verbal alteration in this section. Where the word "Sunday" occurs a second time, the plural form should be used—"Sundays."

The CHAIRMAN. It is a verbal error only; the Secretary will make the correction.

No further amendment being proposed, the section was adopted.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The Committee of the Whole next took up for consideration Article V, entitled Executive Department.

Section 1 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 1. The supreme executive power of this State, shall be vested in a Chief Magistrate, who shall be Governor of the State of Nevada.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

GOVERNOR'S TERM OF OFFICE.

Section 2 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and places of voting for members of the Legislature, and shall hold his office for two years from the time of his installation, and until his successor shall be qualified.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by striking out the word "two," and inserting the word "four," so as to read:—shall hold his office for four years from the time of his installation, and until his successor shall be qualified."

The question was taken, and upon a division, the amendment was agreed to—ayes, 16; noes, not counted.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

ELIGIBILITY OF GOVERNOR.

Section 3 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, who is not a qualified elector, and who, at the time of such election, has not attained the age of twenty-five years; and who, except at the first election under this Constitution, shall not have been a citizen resident of this State for two years next preceding the election.

Mr. EARL. I wish to offer an amendment; to insert in the second line, after the word "elector," the words, "who has served one term," so as to read:—

"No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, who is not a qualified elector, who has served one term, and who, at the time of such election," &c.

My idea is, that after a person has served four years, he should not be eligible until he passes over one term.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

ELECTION RETURNS.

Section 4 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 4. The returns of every election for Governor, and other State officers voted for at the general election, shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of Government, directed to the Secretary of State, and on the third Monday of December succeeding such election, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Associate Justices shall meet at the office of the Secretary of State, and open and canvass the election returns for Governor and all other State officers, and forthwith declare the result, and publish the names of the candidates elected. The persons having the highest number of votes for the respective offices, shall be declared elected, but in case any two or more have an equal, and the highest number of votes for the same office, the Legislature shall, by joint vote of both Houses, elect one of said persons to fill said office.

Mr. McCLINTON. I move to strike out this section, for the reason that we can provide for all that in the Schedule.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 5 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the military forces of this State, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 6 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 6. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of the Government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing, from the officers of the Executive Department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 7 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 7. He shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

VACANCIES IN OFFICE.

Section 8 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 8. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the next election and qualification of such officer.

Mr. DUNNE. That section seems to require some amendment. I do not know exactly what it should be, but there should be some change in the concluding lines—"which [commission] shall expire at the next election and qualification of such officer." That seems to apply to the next incumbent.

Mr. NOURSE. I will move to amend the section in that particular by striking out the words "such officers" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the person elected to such office," so as to read, "which shall expire at the next election and qualification of the person elected to such office."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRIZELL. I do not think that all offices which it is in the power of the Governor to fill by appointment are filled by issuing a commission. The language of this section is to the effect that the Governor shall issue a commission, and it occurs to me that it would read better if we should strike out the words "by granting a commission," and insert the words "by appointment." I will move that as an amendment. This is a question, I confess, as to the facts of which I am not very well posted; nevertheless, it occurs to me that many offices are filled by the Governor for which it is not necessary for him to issue a commission.

Mr. BANKS. The real object is to require the Governor to appoint by giving a commission, and whoever receives such commission takes it as he would a certificate of election to the body appointed to receive it, and upon that he takes his seat, or enters upon the duties of his office, as the case may be. It is merely providing what shall be the evidence of appointment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one matter, in this connection, to which I desire to call attention. When this section was adopted by the former Convention, in the language which is used in the printed copy, the Convention proceeded on the theory that no provision was to be made by law for appointment to office by the Governor, except to supply vacancies. If it is the sense of the Committee that it is proper to invest the Governor, in any case, with the power of original appointment, then it occurs to me that something more is necessary to be added here. If, however, this Convention agree with the preceding one in withholding from the Governor the power of appointing to office, except in cases of vacancies, then it will not be necessary to make any change. If the Convention do not agree in that particular with the former Convention, then I suggest that we insert, after "next election," the words "or appointment." That, it seems to me, would be necessary if you give the Governor original appointing power. I do not make a motion, but simply suggest the matter to the Committee.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 9 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 9. The Governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature, by a proclamation, and shall state to both Houses, when organized, the purpose for which they have been convened, and the Legislature shall transact no legislative business except that for which they were specially convened, or such other legislative business as the Governor may call to the attention of the Legislature while in session.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 10 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 10. He shall communicate, by message, to the Legislature, at every regular session, the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 11 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 11. In case of a disagreement between the two Houses, with respect to the time of adjournment, the Governor shall have power to adjourn the Legislature to such time as he may think proper; provided, it be not beyond the time fixed for the meeting of the next Legislature.

BROSNAN—JOHNSON—NOURSE—HOVEY—BANKS.

[July 8.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 12 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 12. No person shall, while holding any office under the United States Government, hold the office of Governor, except as herein expressly provided.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

PARDONING POWER.

Section 13 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves for a period not exceeding sixty days, dating from the time of conviction, for all offenses, except in cases of impeachment. Upon conviction for treason, he shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. And if the Legislature should fail or refuse to make final disposition of such case, the sentence shall then be enforced at such time and place as the Governor, by his order, may direct. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of fine or forfeiture remitted, or reprieve, pardon, or commutation granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, its date, and the date of the remission, commutation, pardon or reprieve.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend this section by striking out the words, "to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures." I do not like to give that power to any single man.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it will not be found that this section invests the Executive with that extraordinary power. It will be seen by a close examination of the section, that it does not propose to invest the Executive with the power of pardoning at all, but he is to constitute one of a board which is invested with that power. Now, the object of this and the succeeding sections, and the extent to which they go, is merely this—that until such time as the Pardoning Board can meet to consider any given case, it shall be within the power of the Executive to suspend the enforcement of sentence—to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, for a period not exceeding sixty days." Then, after such suspension, the pardoning power is lodged in this Pardoning Board. I had the honor of submitting this section to the former Convention, and I then conceived it quite improper that the Executive should have the extraordinary power of absolutely pardoning any one, and for the strong reason that the responsibility should not rest upon one man alone. This portion of the section only operates to confer a power of suspension until such time as the Pardoning Board can pass upon the case, and I think the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) will see the propriety of that provision.

Mr. NOURSE. Was it intended that the sixty days limitation should apply also to the matter of fines and forfeitures?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the language can bear no other construction.

Mr. NOURSE. Then I think the word "to " should be stricken out where it occurs before the word "grant," so as to read, "and grant reprieves," etc.

Mr. BROSNAN. Upon examination of the section, I see that the gentleman from Ormsby is right—that the power here granted is merely to postpone sentence. I, therefore, withdraw my amendment. But I am not satisfied with the section yet. It says :—

"The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of fine or forfeiture remitted, or reprieve, pardon or commutation granted."

Now, if a forfeiture is remitted, it is blotted out forever. If these things are to be done by the Governor, there is no use, it seems to me, in applying to any ultimate power, stating the name of the offender, the character of the offense, and what is to be, or has been done, in regard to such offense.

Mr. HOVEY. I would suggest that the gentleman refer to the next section, by which the Pardoning Board is to be established.

Mr. BROSNAN. Well, the language here is, nevertheless, inappropriate. For, I hold that the word "remit," implies to blot out entirely. It says "the Governor shall communicate every case of fine or forfeiture remitted," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to suggest that the pardoning power is exercised by the board, and the Governor is merely required to report their action to the Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is it, exactly. And I think the recollection of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) will serve him in that particular. We thought, in the last Convention, that the Governor would be the proper person upon whom to devolve the duty of reporting to the Legislature the official action of the Board of Pardons, of which he is ex-officio a member.

Mr. NOURSE. I think a careful examination of the first few lines of the section will show that, as it at present stands, the power of the Governor is unlimited, for the suspension of fines and forfeitures, at all events. In order to make sure of this matter, I suggest that we strike out the word "to," after "forfeitures, and."

Mr. BANKS. I hope that will be done, and that we shall also strike out the comma after the word "forfeitures," also.

Mr. NOURSE. No; I think that is not necessary; the meaning is plain, if we take out the word "to." I move to strike out the word "to."

The question was taken on Mr. Nourse's amendment, and it was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 14 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 14. The Governor, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Attorney General, or a major part of them, of whom the Governor shall be one, may, upon such conditions and with such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments, and grant pardons after convictions, in all cases except treason and impeachments, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, relative to the manner of applying for pardons.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

STATE SEAL.

Section 15 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 15. There shall be a seal of this State, which shall be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called the "Great Seal of the State of Nevada."

Mr. NOURSE. I supposed that the practice was that the great seal of State should be kept by the Secretary of State. I will ask whether that is not the case?

Mr. BROSNAN. I think the custom is, that it is kept by the Governor, and I think the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) will tell you the same.

Mr. BANKS. I believe the Governor is supposed to keep it, but the Secretary of State really keeps it for him.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 16 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 16. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and the authority of the State of Nevada, sealed with the Great Seal of the State, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest whether the word "by" should not be inserted there before the words "the authority."

Mr. NOURSE. Most certainly. I move to insert the word "by" between the word "and" and the word "the," so as to read "in the name and by the authority of the State of Nevada."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 17 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 17. A Lieutenant Governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor, and his term of office, and his eligibility, shall also be the same. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, or be absent from the State, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor, until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 18 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 18. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, and at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of the military force of the State.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to know how that compares with the former section, which provides that the Governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the militia, except when called into the actual service of the United States? I suppose, however, as a State we shall have no war.

Mr. BANKS. We may have an insurrection in this State.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

SURVEYOR GENERAL.

Section 19 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 19. A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, a Controller, and an Attorney General, shall be elected at the time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor. The term of office of each shall be the same as is prescribed for the Governor. Any elector shall be eligible to either of said offices.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "Controller," the words "a Surveyor General," so as to read, "a Secretary of State, a Treasurer, a Controller, a Surveyor General, and an Attorney General, shall be elected," etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "Controller" the words "a Superintendent of Public Instruction."

Mr. BROSNAN. There is another section which provides for that.

Mr. DUNNE. Very well; if that office is provided for I will withdraw the amendment.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

Section 20 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 20. The Secretary of State shall keep a true record of the official acts of the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all matters relative thereto, before either branch of the Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not prepared, at the present moment, to say that this section is, or is not, exactly right, but it occurs to me that it is not. Would it be right to require the Secretary of State to keep a true record of the proceedings of the Legislature, when the records of the proceedings of that department are also required to be kept by the proper officers of the respective branches of the Legislature? He is made, or should be made, the custodian of the records of the Legislature, when prepared by the proper officers, as well as of the other departments. The language of the section can be amended hereafter, however, if necessary.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I would like to inquire if the term of the State Treasurer and the other State officers is intended to be four years. I see it says they shall be elected at the time and place and in the same manner as the Governor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the term must be the same from the reading of the section. If there is any error, the Chair will entertain a motion to reconsider.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I shall certainly oppose that in the Convention.

Friday.]

DUNNE—BANKS—LOCKWOOD—COLLINS—BROSNAN—JOHNSON.

[July 8.

Mr. DUNNE. I think their terms should be the same as that of the Governor; but as there is to be a reconsideration moved hereafter, in respect to the term of the Governor, I will not offer any amendment at this time.

No further amendment being offered to Section 20, the section was adopted.

Section 21 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 21. The Governor, Secretary of State, and Attorney General, shall constitute a Board of State Prison Commissioners, which Board shall have such supervision of all matters connected with the State Prison as may be provided by law. They shall also constitute a "Board of Examiners," with power to examine all claims against the State (except salaries or compensation of officers fixed by law,) and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend this section by adding to it the following:—

„ And no claims against the State, except salaries, or compensation of officers fixed by law, shall be passed upon by the Legislature, without having been considered and acted upon by said Board of Examiners."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I may be more obtuse than other gentlemen, but I really do not understand that amendment.

Mr. BANKS. It merely provides that no claims against the State shall be acted upon by the Legislature without first passing through the hands of the Board of Examiners. The Chairman will recollect that in California, having no constitutional provision on the subject, the Legislature passed a law, and agreed to be bound by it, of the same purport. It was a sort of tacit understanding, by which succeeding Legislatures required all claims presented to be first passed upon by the Board of Examiners. Under that understanding, so long as it was observed, they stood in California just where this provision would place the Legislature of the new State of Nevada; but, sometimes, ignoring that law, gentlemen would bring in claims, and have them acted upon in the Legislature, by means of lobby influence, in spite of the Board of Examiners. Now, I want this rule understood and firmly established, that all claims, except salaries fixed by law, shall first pass through the hands of the Board of Examiners before they can be obtruded in any way upon the Legislature.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. I rise to make an inquiry. I see it is provided here that—

"The Governor, Secretary of State and Attorney General shall constitute a Board of State Prison Commissioners, which board shall have such supervision of all matters connected with the State Prison as may be provided by law."

Now, I think, that at the time of the election under the old Constitution last year, a person was chosen as Attorney General who was a resident of Lander County, and I would inquire if the intention of this section is that the Attorney General shall be required to be a resident at the Capital of the State; and whether it would not be more proper to constitute some other of the State officers a member of that board? Would it not be better, for instance, that the Controller should be named, who, with the Secretary of State, would be at the Capital at all times, when required to consult with the Governor. It seems to me that would be better than to impose this duty upon a party who may reside at the remotest part of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. I would suggest that this objection could be removed by requiring all the State officers to reside and keep their offices at the Capital.

Mr. BROSNAN. That matter was discussed at the former Convention, and it was then thought that there was not salary enough attached to the office of Attorney General to justify such a requirement.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will be seen that the Attorney General is one of the State officers who are not required to reside at the Capital. As the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan), remarked, it was thought, in view of the limited amount of salary, and for other reasons, perhaps, that it was not advisable to require him to keep his office here, and I will state one special reason, which has not been adverted to, why it was thought best to designate him as one of the members of the State Prison Board, premising it with the suggestion that, for my own part, I do not think it absolutely necessary that either of the members of this Board should reside at the seat of Government. They will undoubtedly have stated times for their meetings. I know it is so in California, where they act under the operation of a law similar to this provision; and the Attorney General may be occupied in Washoe, in Storey, in Lyon, or in any other county, perhaps in some one of the more remote counties, so that it possibly may not be convenient for him to be a frequent attendant at the meetings of the Board. Yet, even if he were absent, there would still be a quorum for the transaction of business, and therefore I do not know that it is essential for him to attend upon all the sessions. Now, the reason why these other officers should not be placed upon the Board of State Prison Commissioners is this—that in such case, in the capacity of members of the Board of Examiners, they would be required to pass upon their own expenditures. For example, the Controller would have to issue, and the Treasurer would have to pay the warrants drawn by the Board of which, respectively, they are members; and it was deemed improper to constitute an officer a member of the Examining Board, whose duty it would thereupon be to pass upon his own accounts. The members of this Board of Examiners are not clothed with extraordinary powers as individuals, but they may, as a Board, refuse to pass upon claims brought before them; hence the Attorney General was mentioned as one of the officers to constitute this commission, and I think the reasons I have mentioned should influence the committee and induce it to retain him in that position.

Friday.]

DUNNE—CROSMAN—DELONG—BANKS—CHAPIN—NOURSE—PROCTOR.

[July 8.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 22 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 22. The Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, Attorney General, and Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CROSMAN. No, no! Let us recommend the passage of the articles we have gone through with.

Mr. DUNNE. Very well; I will make that motion, then.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair, The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Articles III, IV, and V of the Constitution, and had made sundry amendments thereto, in which they had directed him to ask the concurrence of the Convention.

The report was accepted.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the articles just reported from the Committee of the Whole be ordered engrossed as amended, for a third reading.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF ARTICLES.

Mr. DUNNE. As Article VI, entitled Judicial Department, has been referred to a committee, I will move that Articles VII, VIII, IX, X, and XI, be taken up and committed to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. Has the Convention taken action upon referring the article on the Judiciary? I do not recollect such action; and if it was had, I think it must have been taken at some time when I was absent.

Mr. DUNNE. If there be any question about that action, it had better, perhaps, be decided. I will withdraw my former motion, and move instead, that Article IV, entitled Judicial Department, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend the motion by referring, also, Article VII, entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office, to the same committee.

Mr. DUNNE accepted the amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion, as modified, was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations; Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt; Article X, entitled Taxation, and Article XI, entitled Salaries, were taken up, read a second time by title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. DELONG. I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of these articles.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. DeLong in the Chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the matters referred to it.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, was first considered.

Section 1 was read, as follows :—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall pass no special act in any manner relating to corporate powers, except for municipal purposes; but corporations may be formed under general laws; and all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS.

Section 2 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 2. All real property and possessory rights to the same, as well as personal property in this State, belonging to corporations, now existing or hereafter created, shall be subject to taxation the same as property of individuals; provided, that the property of corporations formed for municipal, charitable, religious, or educational purposes, may be exempted by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests an inquiry, whether this does not contain the celebrated mining-tax clause.

Mr. BANKS. I think not.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that it be adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to propose an amendment.

Mr. BANKS. All that this section provides, if the Chair will allow me to make a suggestion, is just this. It provides that corporations, like individuals, shall be taxed on whatever property they own—that corporations having property, and A, B, and C, as private individuals, having property, that property shall all be taxed under the Constitution and laws of this State, the property of corporations being taxed just as though it were held by individuals.

Mr. NOURSE. That is all it does.

Mr. PROCTOR. But what does "possessory rights" include?

The CHAIRMAN. It includes anything that a man has possession of, or a legitimate right to hold and use.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend the section by the insertion of these words, after the words "hereafter created"—"mines, and possessory claims thereto."

Mr. CHAPIN. That is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. NOURSE. This section simply provides, as the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) has said, that corporations shall be taxed just as individuals are taxed. I suppose nobody objects to that.

Friday.]

DUNNE—NOURSE—BANKS—HOVEY—WARWICK—EARL.

[July 8.

Mr. DUNNE. Yes, sir; I object to the taxation of mines.

Mr. NOURSE. But it does not relate to the taxation of mines. It only provides that where an individual would have to be taxed, whether upon mines or anything else, a corporation shall be taxed just the same. It only provides that all property subject to taxation shall be taxed just the same, if in the hands of corporations, as the same property would be taxed if in the hands of individuals.

Mr. DUNNE. I see the point the gentleman makes, and I withdraw my amendment.

No other amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 3 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 3. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law; provided, that corporators in corporations formed under the laws of this State shall not be individually liable for the debts or liabilities of such corporation.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 4 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 4. Corporations created by or under the laws of the State of Nevada, shall be subject to the provisions of such laws until the Legislature shall pass laws regulating the same, in pursuance of the provisions of this Constitution.

Mr. BANKS. I think the word "State," in the second line, has been accidentally substituted for "Territory." It is obviously a clerical error. The section should read—"Corporations created by or under the laws of the Territory of Nevada, shall be subject," &c. I will move to amend, by inserting the word "Territory," in place of the word "State."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

Section 5 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 5. Corporations may sue and be sued in all Courts, in like cases as individuals.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

CURRENCY.

Section 6 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 6. No bank notes or paper of any kind shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency, under the laws of Congress.

Mr. HOVEY. I move to strike out that section.

Mr. NOURSE. What is the object of that?

Mr. BANKS. So that we can have banks here, if we want them.

Mr. NOURSE. And paper money?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Yes; paper money.

Mr. NOURSE. Well, I go against all such stuff.

Mr. WARWICK. There is one very good reason why this section should be stricken out, and that is, that as it stands now, it is in contravention of the laws of the United States. It is well known that under the General Banking law passed by Congress, banks which issue paper money can, and doubtless will, be established here, and, quite probably, during the coming year. That may be expedient, or otherwise; and whether it is or not, is an open question, in my own mind; nevertheless, we have the fact staring us in the face, that a general banking law has been enacted by Congress, and that under it we may look, daily and hourly, for the circulation of paper money in our midst, under the sanction of the Government of the United States.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; I understand that all those banks are included in the term, "Federal currency." They are established by the Federal banking law, and their issues being thus made currency by the Federal Government, therefore become Federal currency. Now, does the gentleman wish to have any other kind of banks? This provision, I understand, only keeps out State banks, that is, all banks whose currency would be other than Federal currency.

Mr. WARWICK. There is little doubt, I think—and any man who has watched the currency for the last year can hardly doubt—that before many years, the national currency will absorb every issue now emanating from every bank in the United States. Consequently, any such provision as this stands in contravention of the law of the United States. Judging from the peculiar circumstances under which we start out as a State, and from the general demand which is coming up from the people throughout the State for a change, or at least, for some alteration in our currency, there is no doubt in my mind that, under the banking law enacted by the Federal Government, in spite of any and every law which we can enact, banks will be established in this State; and that those banks, established under the sanction of the National Government, and issuing the national currency, will, in spite of anything which we can enact, go into operation immediately here in our midst. Consequently, I am in favor of striking out this whole section.

Mr. EARL. I hope the section will be stricken out, because of the fact that if we do have a paper currency here, we may at some future time want to regulate it in a little different way from the provisions of that Act of Congress. We may want a paper currency here redeemable in a particular manner, different from that in which the paper currency circulating in other States is redeemed, founded upon a basis more especially appropriate to this coast. We may want a currency, if you please, redeemable in gold and silver. But if this clause remains we cannot have it; we can have only a Federal currency under the laws of Congress. We can have no other class of banks than those which are established or authorized by the Act of Congress. I think we shall undoubtedly want some change; and we desire to establish a banking system peculiar to our own interests and necessities here. In order that we may do that, I hope this section will be stricken out.

Mr. FITCH. I have an amendment here which I think will meet the case and be generally acceptable. I propose to amend the section so as to read as follows:—

SEC. 6. No bank notes, or paper of any kind, shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency under the laws of Congress, and the currency of banks established under acts of Congress.

Mr. EARL. That is the same thing.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to say a few words in regard to that amendment. I know that most of the members of the Convention have lived in California, where they have only a metallic currency, and consequently they have had little or no experience in this infernal paper trash which has cursed almost every one of the Eastern States. But I come from a State which has been cursed for years with paper money, and I go for sustaining the currency of the United States, and the national banking law, which provides for a uniform system of paper money that will be safe and reliable. How far that can be done here, is a matter of business experiment, and not at all a matter to be settled by law. I hope gentlemen will profit by the experience of other States in regard to general banking systems, and that they will not, after seeing State after State swamped with paper money—after seeing all the evils which have come upon those States year after year, in consequence of having banks of issue which were perfectly worthless—attempt or consent to throw our new State right into the same vortex of ruin in which those States have been engulfed. In Minnesota, before the crash came, in 1857, there was plenty of gold and silver; but from the time of the crash not a dime remained, but year after year we had nothing but county scrip or State scrip, indorsed sometimes by swindling bankers. We had the Gosport Bank, from the State of Indiana—

Mr. JOHNSON. That was the best you had, was it not?

Mr. NOURSE. Well, if it was, that was not saying much for the rest. The last I saw relating to that bank, was a notice stuck up on a little building in the rear of another building, which read in this way: "Gosport Bank taken here at par." That was about the only thing it was fit for.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much was the balance of your banks worth then?

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman can draw his own inference. We had railroad banks, and all sorts of wild-cat banks. They would adorn their bills beautifully, with the prettiest of pictures, so as to make them current, and just as soon as they got into circulation down they went, until they struck the bed-rock. Then we took the Illinois and Wisconsin State Banks, and thought that their notes were particularly safe; but just as soon as they began to appear prosperous, down they went, to somewhere about forty or forty-eight cents on the dollar. How many men were ruined by this means, it is impossible to say; but I know that the whole community was crushed under the load. I do hope that gentlemen will not insist on inaugurating such a system here, when they know that such has been the history of every State where paper currency has been tolerated.

Now we are not going to set ourselves up against the action of the General Government. I have no doubt that "when this cruel war is over," greenbacks will go up so as to be worth about their face in gold, and continue so; and the bonds of the United States will be as good as gold, and will buy gold at par. But as to having anything else foisted upon us here—as to attempting to set up a system of State banks, with the right to issue bank-notes, and all that sort of trash—I tell you, if we do it, we shall be guilty before God and man. We shall have such a sin to answer for, that we shall not know where to hide our heads, because if we sin in that way now, we do it with our eyes open; we do it with the experience of the whole country before us, and with the full knowledge of all the ruin that has been brought about in other States by this miserable, wild-cat, paper trash. I hope the motion to strike out will not prevail, but that this section, substantially as it is, will be adopted.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I propose to act upon this matter somewhat in the light of expediency. I have been opposed to such action as might endanger this Constitution before the people, upon the loyalty clause, but I warn members of the Convention that if we strike out this clause, or insert the clause proposed to be inserted in the Constitution, authorizing the issuing of paper money, it will be the skull and cross-bones of the coming canvass. It is my honest conviction, Mr. Chairman, that not one third of the people in this Territory will vote for this Constitution with such a clause in it as that proposed to be inserted here, authorizing banks of issue. Designing men will go before the people, and tell them all about banks which have broken in the Eastern States, and ruined the people of those States.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman give way one moment; I believe he is mistaken as to the nature of the question. It is not proposed to insert any clause here authorizing a general banking system.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will speak of that in a moment. I am not, myself, opposed to banks, if they are founded upon a proper basis. If the Congress of the United States, sitting at Washington, has passed laws which provide for a general banking system, whether we will or not, that system will certainly be established amongst us. We cannot prevent it by any constitutional provision whatever. And, sir, provided such a system shall come among us under circumstances like that, then this provision cannot be made a bug-bear of in the canvass, when we take this Constitution before our constituents.

Friday,]

WARWICK—FITCH—JOHNSON—BANKS—CHAPIN—KENNEDY—EARL.

[July 8.

If it were proposed to inaugurate here a general system of wild-cat banking, I certainly should vote against it, and against a Constitution containing such a provision; but if, upon the other hand, it is only proposed to sanction what Congress has done, which we are bound to do, volens volens, it does not amount to anything that could be used against us. Let us look at this matter just as it is, and act accordingly.

Mr. WARWICK. The people seem to have a holy horror of banks.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to make a verbal alteration in my amendment. I will modify it so as to read as follows:—

SEC. 6. No bank-notes, or paper of any kind, shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency and the notes of banks authorized under the laws of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, sir, I am in favor of adopting the amendment rather than striking out the whole section. From my political antecedents, I think I cannot be regarded as being opposed to any and every system of banking; yet, sir, I am as much as any gentleman opposed to this wild-cat banking system which has been spoken of. I think, however, that by adopting this section, with the amendment as it is now proposed, we shall relieve the new State from any possible danger of any such evils arising as have been suggested by some gentlemen who have preceded me on this occasion. I am therefore in favor of retaining the section with this amendment; otherwise I would advocate the striking out of every thing relating to this subject.

Mr. BANKS. Let us hear the amendment again.

The SECRETARY read the section, as proposed to be amended by Mr. Fitch.

Mr. BANKS. Now that is about right, and I hope it will be adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

RIGHT OF WAY.

Section 7 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 7. No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation be first made therefor.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to move to amend by inserting in that section the words, "or secured," so as to read: "until full compensation be first made or secured therefor." But before submitting the amendment, I wish to ask a question. My recollection is that the word "tendered" was not inserted in the section of the Declaration of Rights relating to taking private property for public use, which was under consideration the other day, and my desire is to make this section correspond in its phraseology with that. I would inquire whether or not my recollection is correct?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; we did not insert the word "tendered." That is the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. BANKS. Then I move to amend this section, by inserting after the word "made," the words "or secured."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

MUNICIPAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Section 8 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide for the organization of cities and towns by general laws; and restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, except for procuring supplies of water.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest whether it would not be well to strike out this exception—"except for procuring supplies of water."

Mr. WARWICK. It is the experience of every town and county, that sometimes public debts are necessary, and actually requisite for the well-being, and for the carrying on of such Governments. It is sometimes absolutely necessary that the credit of the town or city should be loaned.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him. This section does not provide that the Legislature shall prohibit these powers, but that it shall restrict them, and the words which I propose to strike out, would intimate that, in that respect, cities and towns should be under no restriction.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope it will not be stricken out. That subject was very thoroughly discussed in the former Convention. It was there considered that this was a privilege which should be accorded to every town in the State. Do not, for heaven's sake, restrict the towns in regard to procuring supplies of water, but let the section remain as it is.

Mr. KENNEDY. There is one objection which I have not heard advanced in connection with this subject, and that is, how can you make a general law which will be applicable in cases like this? For instance: in the town of Austin a much larger expenditure of money may be required to supply the town with water than would be necessary to supply other towns, and for that reason I think we cannot make a general law in regard to this matter. It is an absolute necessity to have water, and if a town needs it, let it go to as heavy an expenditure for that purpose as it sees fit.

Mr. EARL. The only argument in favor of the exception that I can see, is this: that if a city has been limited to an expenditure of two or three hundred thousand dollars, and if the authorities of that city find that that amount has been exhausted in endeavoring to procure supplies of water, without this provision they must have their charter amended before they can have the right to exceed that amount of expenditure. I do not know but it would be as well, on that account, to leave the section as it is now.

FITCH—PROCTOR—BANKS—NOURSE—JOHNSON.

[July 8.]

Mr. FITCH. I am not particular about the amendment. I understand it was left in at the particular request of some gentlemen who are engaged in a project for supplying the city of Virginia with water.

Mr. CHAPIN. No, sir; that is not so.

Mr. FITCH. Then I have been misinformed.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Fitch, and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 6; noes, not counted.

No further amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Section 9 was read, as follows :—

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money on its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes; provided, that the State may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three million dollars, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi River; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to amend the section by striking out the word "three" in the proviso where it occurs before the word "million," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the word "ten."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend by striking out the word "three," and inserting the word "five;" also by inserting after the word "bonds," the words "or secure the payment of principal and interest, or both principal and interest on bonds so issued." I have also a further amendment to offer to the section, when these shall have been disposed of.

The section was read as proposed to be amended by Mr. Banks.

Mr. FITCH. If we are going to give five millions, I do not know but it would be as well to go a little further. I move to amend by striking out "five," and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. NOURSE. That is it; I second the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. Fitch's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this is getting a little heavy, [laughter] and particularly so, when we consider that we shall have to go before the people with this Constitution. I am perfectly content to go before the people, and say that we have given the Legislature power to issue bonds to the extent of three millions of dollars, to aid in this railroad enterprise. I am quite willing to let the section stand without any alteration or change. But if you increase the amount, I am opposed to it. Now, sir, three millions of dollars is a large sum of money—quite as large as we can afford to contribute to this enterprise. And, in my judgment, the people of this State in prospective, will not be willing to see incorporated into their Constitution, not only a possibility, but indeed the probability, of very soon having added to the indebtedness of the State, an amount of five millions of dollars. I believe that if we make this amendment, it will exercise a most potent influence against the adoption of our Constitution. Independently of that fact, sir, we have not the means to justify us in issuing these bonds. We shall not be able to pay the five millions of dollars when the bonds become due, nor to pay the interest upon the bonds, and support a State Government at the same time. What was the great objection of the people last fall, against the adoption of a State Government? It was, that we could not then support a State Government. We are not much better able now, than we were then. This is a matter which is proposed to be left to the people, it is true, and the people have the power to ratify or reject it hereafter; but the amount specified in this amendment would induce many men to vote against the Constitution, who would otherwise vote for it. As I said before, I am willing to leave the section just as it stands in the old Constitution, but I am opposed to increasing the amount a single dollar.

Mr. FITCH. Is another amendment in order at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is, if it is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FITCH. I propose to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in the amendment now under consideration, the words, "provided further, that no bonds shall be issued bearing interest for a greater sum than ten per cent. per annum.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Fitch, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, as amended on the motion of Mr. Fitch.

Mr. BANKS. At the request of a number of gentlemen who are interested as much as I can be in the construction of the Pacific Railroad, I withdraw so much of my amendment as proposes to strike out "three millions of dollars" and insert "five," leaving that portion of the section as it stands now.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the amendment can be withdrawn, after it has been amended.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Leave. Leave!"

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment may be withdrawn. The Chairman hears no objection, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BANKS. The reason I have for proposing to insert the other words contained in my amendment is just this: I desire that the power shall exist in the Legislature to provide for the payment of the interest upon the bonds of the company, instead of having bonds issued directly by the State. That is a policy, in the encouragement of railroad enterprises of this kind, which I think is fully as good as, if not better, than that of the issuing of bonds directly by the State, and I want to leave the Legislature discretionary power in that matter. The proviso will then read :—

“Provided, That the State may issue bonds or secure the payment of the principal or interest, or both principal and interest of bonds to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars ; provided, further, that no bonds shall be issued bearing interest for a greater sum than ten per cent. per annum, on such terms”—etc.

—I will suggest, however, that this latter proviso ought to be made a separate section.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I propose, as an amendment to this section, to strike out all after the words “charitable purposes,” so that the section will read as follows :—

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association, or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that amendment is not in order just at present, as there is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. FITCH. I will suggest that my amendment, already adopted, will read better if inserted immediately after the words “navigable waters of the Mississippi River.”

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section as it will then stand.

The SECRETARY read the section, as proposed to be amended by Mr. Fitch.

Mr. FITCH. I perceive a still further difficulty with that sentence, as it applies only to the issuing of the bonds, and not to the security upon the bonds. If the Convention will permit me, I will withdraw it.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. FITCH. Now I move to add, after the words “three millions,” the words “at a rate of interest not exceeding ten per cent. per annum.”

The question was taken upon Mr. Fitch’s amendment, and upon a division it was agreed to—ayes, 18 ; noes not counted.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now I propose a further amendment, which is, to strike out the word “ten,” in the amendment just adopted, and insert the word “seven,” so as to read—“at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum.”

Now, sir, I do not propose to go before the people of this Territory with a Constitution which provides, if we become a State, for paying ten per cent. interest on our State securities. That is a rate of interest far beyond any which can be found established by any State of this Union, and I think the rate I propose is quite enough. At seven per cent. per annum, if the credit of the State is to be established upon a just basis, there can be no question but that the bonds of the State will be as good as any railroad bonds in the market ; and to issue bonds bearing the rate of ten per cent. would only operate to the injury of our credit.

Mr. FITCH. I will say, that I shall be entirely satisfied with that rate of interest. I think seven per cent. is enough.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to ask if the gentleman from Ormsby is aware of the present rate of interest paid by the General Government ?

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe it is less than seven per cent.

Mr. NOURSE. It is seven and three-tenths per cent., I believe.

Mr. WARWICK. Is there not some portion of the government loan on which ten per cent. is paid ? That is my impression.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. Johnson, and it was agreed to.

The question was next taken upon Mr. Banks’s amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend the section by adding the following :—

“Provided, further, that the amount of money so raised, if raised on State bonds, shall be expended upon such railroad within the boundaries of the State.”

Mr. FITCH. I am opposed to that amendment, because I consider it to a certain extent impracticable. For instance : if the Legislature enacts that such bonds, to the amount of a million or more, shall be given to the railroad first reaching the State line, then under due process of law those bonds are issued, and although of course the railroad company cannot expend them until they get them, yet after they are issued the State has practically no control over the direction the money shall take, as to whether it shall be expended within or without the State.

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to inquire the reasons for the amendment proposed by my colleague ?

Mr. BROSNAN. My reason is, that the money could then be expended in doing some of the work within the State, and not to do it all within the limits of another State or Territory. That is the only reason.

Mr. WARWICK. I sincerely hope that this proviso will not be adopted. The main object of this Territory or State is, or should be, to secure a connection with navigable water. It is well known that we are now paying out millions and millions of dollars for freights, and it is exceedingly desirable that we should have, as early as possible, some means of communicating with navigable water. The proposition made here, is for the encouragement of the building of a road for our own benefit, and we offer this as a bounty to the railroad company, for that end. I contend that we are just as much benefited by the road reaching our doors, if the greater part of the expenditure for the improvements are made in another State, as we should be if the whole of the three millions were expended within our own borders. The benefit derived will still be commensurate with the amount expended, wherever it may be necessary to expend it upon the road, and I sincerely hope, therefore, that this amendment may not be incorporated into the section, but that this bounty will be granted to any line which will first connect this State with navigable waters, without specifying whether it shall be expended within our own borders or in reaching our borders. The requirement is, that the road should connect us with navigable waters, and for that purpose alone, the people of the State are authorized to make such a loan.

HAWLEY—FITCH—NOURSE.

[July 8.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that we are paying out enormous sums, annually, for freights. We carry on an immense business with the other side of the mountains, and that business is increasing every year, causing immense outlays for the building of roads, and for freights. The money which we shall pay for freights within the next two or three years, would, of itself, be sufficient to pay this loan ten times over. And, in addition to that, by securing the construction of this road, we shall be developing our State, to an unexampled extent. I do not know but it would be worth twice or three times the amount proposed here, if the railroad could be made to reach the far-off County of Lander, so as to connect that region with navigable waters. It is well known that we have fabulously rich mines in that county, many of which are still undeveloped; but they will be opened very speedily when we once obtain facilities for communication, such as a railroad would give us. Why, sir, if the railroad were once completed to Lander County, there are thousands of tons of rock now lying there, regarded as worthless, which would make their owners millionaires. It is for these reasons that we propose to offer this bounty, and I sincerely hope that no selfish project for ruining the value of this loan, by attempting to secure its expenditure within our own borders, will be allowed to prevent the completion of this grand railroad.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been absent a few hours, and have not had an opportunity to converse with gentlemen upon this question; but the idea has suggested itself to my mind, that it is an invariable rule that when an article of this sort is incorporated into a State Constitution, it should prescribe the manner in which the interest shall be paid. If I am mistaken on that point, I should like to be corrected; but I think the Legislature should be authorized to issue bonds, with proper coupons attached.

Mr. FITCH. The section provides that the bonds shall be issued "upon such terms as the Legislature may prescribe," and the Legislature can attend to those matters of detail.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand the question to be now on the adoption of the section as amended. If that is the case, I move to strike out all after the word "incorporation," so that the section would read as follows:—

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in any stock of any company, association or corporation.

I suppose I shall be in the minority on this subject, but I am used to that. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, I wish to say that I think I have had experience, which perhaps not all the members of the Convention have had, and opportunities of seeing the working of these things. I propose to state to the Convention, in about two minutes, the result of my experience and observation. I do not make any charge for it. [Merriment.] I am as desirous as any member of having the Pacific Railroad built, and indeed, it would be very singular if any man living in Nevada Territory could be found who was opposed to having a railroad built to cross our mountains and reach our mines here. I suppose nothing could be more desirable than that for this community; and if I supposed this proviso would help the road at all, or, at all events, to a degree bearing any fair proportion to the amount of debt which it provides for incurring, I would most certainly be in favor of the section as it stands. But I wish to strike out all that latter portion of the section, because I believe, and I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that you will hereafter find it to be true, that instead of hastening the road by this means, we shall be putting it back. That may not seem to be a sensible conclusion, but I will tell you how such a provision will work. In Minnesota, I was one of a minority of sixty-six, when there were twelve hundred votes against us, opposed to granting aid of this sort for a railroad in that State. For the want of such a railroad our business there was prostrated, and this railroad was expected to build it up. The railroad was to run through some of the finest lands in the world, and it had liberal grants from Congress, consisting of alternate sections of land for a breadth of six miles, for the whole length of the road, to begin with, and the route was one over which it was easy to construct a road. We were all impatient. We must have a railroad; and as we thought we could not wait until it could be built in the natural course of things, by the development of the industry and the resources of the country through which it was to pass, we were called upon to aid it. We were asked to give our credit to the extent of five millions of dollars to this and other railroad enterprises in the State. Well, we went through that operation, and voted to issue the bonds, and the result was that, at the end of only one year from that time, instead of barely sixty-six, who originally voted against the proposition, you could not have found, if the question could possibly have been submitted again, six men in the State who would have voted for it. Now, how does it work? This railroad, which we are asked to aid, has secured, in the first place, most magnificent grants from the General Government. It is abundantly aided by the Government—so abundantly that, if there is any good faith about its management, I believe it will be built very speedily, provided you will only let it alone. It can and will be built reasonably fast, if there is nothing to be gained by delay. We cannot get it here in a minute, do what we will, but it will be built as fast as it is possible to build it, if it is not interfered with. But you leave this clause in your Constitution, giving the railroad another chance for securing help from the public, and you find the managers hanging back, and hanging back continually, until they get their hands upon that three millions of dollars. If you shut down on that, if you make them understand that the State cannot give or will not give a cent, knowing that they have sucked the Federal Government dry, and have got all the help that they can expect to receive from the State of California, they will be ready to push on and try to make the road, and will expect, as good managers, to make it a paying road. They will display whatever energy they possess, and they will undoubtedly get it through in some way. They have enough means already to put it through in a reasonable time, but they are like other men, and if they can see a chance of getting anything more they will try to get it. If, in addition to the magnificent United States grants, and the help they have already received from California, they obtain the three millions which they are endeavoring to get from Nevada, they will be able to build this road without the cost of one dime out of their own pockets, or a liability of one dollar upon the road itself. Of course they will do that if they can, and if you sanction this project of a grant to them by the Legislature, or a loan of the credit of the State, you in effect hold out an inducement for them—to do what? To hurry up the road? No; to hang back, and keep hanging back, until they can grab that three millions of dollars. Now I assure you that that was just the result in the State of Minnesota. They went on building and grading the road, and apparently putting forth great efforts, as long as they could get bonds issued to them, and when they had got all they could, then the thing collapsed; and now the State of Minnesota is saddled with the load of two and a half millions of those bonds, upon which not a cent of interest has ever been paid. The State has struggled along under this burden until she stands at last in a position where she must either repudiate those bonds outright, or she must pay them. And the brokers are so confident that she will have to pay them eventually, that they are now paying from 20 to 30, and even, in some cases, 40 cents on the dollar for the bonds.

Friday,]

NOURSE.

[July 8.

Now sir, for my part, I do not believe that this system of State loans is a good system anywhere. Let us look at the history of other States, and I ask, should we not learn something, gentlemen, from the experience of other States? If you look through the history of about every State in this Union, you will find that that system has proven to be most injurious. Take New York, if you will; a State which has derived more benefit from internal improvements than any other, and has been more liberal, perhaps, than any other in granting State aid. But what do we find? That the Erie Railroad, which was so munificently aided by that State, had at last to be built by private enterprise. As long as it was the child of public patronage, living upon public plunder, it hung fire, and never did get through until all hope of further State aid had been exhausted. Then, and not till then, it was put through by private means, and became a good paying investment. So it has been in every other State. The system of State loans to internal improvements has in every State proved a disastrous failure, and in every State where it has been adopted, the load of debt has been saddled at last upon the State. That has been the experience of New York, of Pennsylvania, of Missouri, and of many other States which I might name. Look at the enormous debt with which some of those States have been saddled for the building of railroads which have never been built, and some of which very likely never will be built. Now, shall we, with all this experience before us, when the cry against our State organization is "poverty, poverty, poverty!" when the people say "we cannot possibly afford to run a State Government," adopt this same ruinous policy?

If we cannot pay for the running expenses of a State Government, what is going to be the value of our guarantee to pay the interest on these bonds, the interest alone on which will amount to two or three hundred thousand dollars a year? How much is such an indorsement worth? It is ruinous to us, because it plunges us hopelessly into debt, and it does not help the parties to whom we give such a guarantee. It is entirely useless to them—a mere mockery. While we are plunging ourselves into debt, we are not helping anybody. Now, will not gentlemen pause before they assume so grave a responsibility? Circumstances are very different now from what they were when this section was passed by the other Convention. Our ability to pay is certainly smaller at the present time than it was then. What will be the value of our scrip or of our bonds, which we shall be obliged to issue for the necessary expenses of the Government, if we also guarantee the payment of this enormous amount of interest, to the tune of two or three hundred thousand dollars a year, which we are to pay for the benefit of this already rich corporation, in addition to the two or three hundred thousand dollars which we shall have to pay for our running expenses? It is well enough to be generous, and far-seeing, and not niggardly, but certainly I think we ought to take care to cut our garments according to our cloth. We certainly have not the means to pay this enormous amount of interest; then why should we go through the farce of guaranteeing it?

FITCH—NOURSE—STURTEVANT—CHAPIN.

[July 8.]

I do not know as I shall have on this question a single vote to help me, but I could not refrain from giving the results and conclusions which a little experience has impressed upon my mind. And I do not see why we should take stock even in corporations for educational or charitable purposes. Anything we have to do in that line we can better do for ourselves, without taking part in somebody else's enterprises. There is no saying better or wiser than this, that that government is best which governs least; and when we come to taking stock in corporations of any kind, I think we go far beyond the proper sphere of government.

Mr. FITCH. I admire the ingenuity with which the gentleman from Washoe has argued his side of the question, but it occurs to me, sir, although I may perhaps in that do the gentleman injustice, that there may be other reasons underlying his opposition. Now, sir, if I were so fortunate as to represent the county of Washoe, I might perhaps be opposed to granting aid to this road, or to any other road designed to connect this State with the navigable waters of the Pacific Ocean, or the navigable waters of the Mississippi River. For, however important such a road may be to the rest of the community, it is well known that the county of Washoe has grown rich, and is to-day rolling in wealth, on account of the necessities of Storey County. Our miners in Storey County are developing mines of enormous wealth, of extraordinary richness, but the high prices of freight which they are compelled to pay, and the high prices of all the necessaries of life which are an inevitable consequence, have resulted hitherto in preventing all but a very small proportion of that wealth from remaining in Storey County. Now, these high prices of freight would be obviated by a railroad across the mountains. But we have no railroad, and the consequence is that the produce of Washoe County has sold and is selling at enormous prices, and Washoe to-day is rich, while the county of Storey, which produces more wealth than all the rest of the Territory together, is poor.

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman from Storey allow me to interrupt him? I wish to say merely that I am sorry such a motive as that suggested by the gentleman could have been attributed to me. No thought ever entered my mind in regard to the effect upon Washoe County. My own view of the matter is this—that Storey County is this Territory. Without Virginia there could be no Washoe and no Carson, and as Virginia prospers so do we prosper. No such idea as that which the gentleman suggests ever crossed my mind.

Mr. FITCH. I am glad that the gentleman has had no such idea, but nevertheless, it is a fact that, while we find Washoe rich and her representatives clad in purple and fine linen, driving blood horses, and drinking champagne cocktails, on the other hand, we find the representatives of Storey County in a state of impecuniosity. [Merriment.] Now, I do not want a blow struck against Washoe County, but I want to see some portion of the wealth of Storey County allowed to remain at home. I would like to see the miners of Storey County reaping some portion of the rewards of their toil; and not only the miners in Storey, but in some other portions of the Territory, in regard to which it is not necessary for me to speak at length. We all know that if we had railroads we should not only be enabled, by the reduction of the enormous tariff of freights and the high cost of food, to get the necessaries of life at a low figure, but also to send a larger amount of our ores to points where water power, fuel and labor are comparatively abundant and cheap, and thus we should vastly increase the wealth of the Territory. I honestly believe that if the whole three millions of dollars here provided for were issued, the first year after the railroad should be completed it would save three times that amount to the people of Nevada in the matter of freight alone, to say nothing of numerous other important advantages.

Now, as to the assertion that State aid will not build the railroad, I can only say that the Pacific Railroad is now in process of construction from Sacramento in two different directions, and is making very considerable progress; but the managers are impeded in their progress by a lack of money, and by the indisposition of capitalists to invest in the enterprise, because it does not promise immediate returns. Now, if we authorize our Legislature to provide for offering a bounty for the first road which shall cross the mountains to our boundary, it is not to be supposed that they will necessarily go to the full extent of the three millions of dollars, but they may fix it at one million, or two millions, or any other sum they please. The result of that will be, that the most desperate efforts will be made by the rival roads, to get to the State line first, and probably the building of the road would be expedited in that way as much as twelve months, or six months, at the very least. I believe it would hasten the completion of the road a full year; and by having the road here one year sooner than it would otherwise come, we should save three times the amount it would cost us. But I will not dilate on this subject at great length, lest members should wish me to die early.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Storey. If we will go for this railroad proviso, will the gentleman coincide with the views of the Washoe delegation in relation to Article X?

Mr. FITCH. I think when that article comes up, the gentleman from Storey will be found not very far from the Washoe delegation.

Mr. CHAPIN. It seems to me that the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has entirely overlooked the careful provisions made in this section. This donation cannot be made until the road shall have reached the line of the

[July 8.

State, and I cannot see the philosophy of the argument of the gentleman, when he states that there is every inducement for the managers of the road to hold back, and not prosecute the work until this grant is made. Why, sir, it seems to me there is every inducement for them to hurry up, and put the road through rapidly, so that by reaching the line they may secure this bounty. I think, when it reaches that State line, we shall be in such a condition that we can well afford to grant these three millions of dollars; and we could well afford to give even five millions, to secure that object, and still save money by it. We should be the gainers, by hastening the road one year, upon transportation alone. I had thought that there was every possible inducement for them to put forth all possible speed in order to secure this grant; and, certainly, the amount which the State would save in a single year, will more than twice cover the cost.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and it is one which strikes me as being highly proper.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order until the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) shall have been disposed of.

Mr. NOURSE. I think the Chair is in error. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected; the amendment will be in order.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move to amend, by striking out all after the words "charitable purposes." The difference between this amendment and that offered by the gentleman from Washoe is, that my amendment leaves in the words, "except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes." It still strikes out all of the proviso. Now, it is well known that provision has been made by act of Congress for donating to this State, when it shall become a State, certain lands, for the establishment of a State Seminary. If we inaugurate a State Government, the State will be interested in that matter; and I do not believe we ought to cut the State Government off from the privilege of taking an interest in a corporation of that kind.

Now, gentlemen have talked here very flippantly and lightly about this amount of three millions of dollars. In the commencement, however, let me disclaim any motive of hostility to the Pacific Railroad. I think we are all in favor of that enterprise; but for one, while I would like to be possessed of property, still I do not believe in the propriety of robbing somebody else in order to obtain it. The taxable property of this Territory amounts, at the present time, to about twenty-five and a half millions of dollars, and there was paid into the Territorial treasury last year about ninety thousand dollars for taxes. I am referring now to facts and figures. The interest on this three millions of dollars, at seven per cent. per annum, is two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, or about three times as much as we received for taxes last year. Now, Mr. Chairman, a proposition of this kind, under such a state of affairs, reminds me of an anecdote which is related of a gentleman in my county who, it was well known, did not own property to the value of a cent, in the world, but who, one day, supposing himself to be in the last stages of his existence, sent for a lawyer and requested him to draw up his will. The lawyer went on, and the man proceeded to bequeath a hundred thousand dollars to this charitable institution, another hundred thousand dollars to that charitable institution, a like sum to another, and so on; and upon the attorney asking him where the money was to come from to pay these munificent bequests, he replied, that it was no matter about that, he only wanted to show his good will.

I do not believe that this grant of three millions of dollars would bring the railroad one month sooner into our State than it would otherwise come. I do not believe that the people now inhabiting this Territory are able, in addition to the expense of supporting a State Government, to pay the interest on those three millions of dollars. These are facts—stern, stubborn facts—and they will stare the people in the face when they come to vote upon the adoption of the Constitution we are framing. Do gentlemen believe that this railroad, which is to cost a hundred millions of dollars, is going to be expedited in its onward course by a paltry grant like this, or that it is going to be retarded for the want of three millions in bonds of the poor little State of Nevada? I am utterly opposed to doing anything of the sort, and shall certainly vote against it. I hope that some gentleman who is advocating the issuing of these bonds will show us how we are going to pay them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a few words on this subject, and more especially since the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) which I had expected would have fallen stillborn in the Convention, has met with a second. But for that fact I would not have taken occasion to trouble the Convention with any views of my own upon this matter. If there is any one subject which has attracted my attention more than another throughout my life, it is this subject of internal improvements, and I therefore desire to offer a few remarks in opposition to the views expressed by the gentleman from Washoe. My attention has been called, however, to the fact that the hour of adjournment has about arrived, and I will move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

[July 9.

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, had made some progress therein, and had directed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. BROSSAN gave notice that the Judiciary Committee would meet this evening.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, at five o'clock, the Convention adjourned.

SIXTH DAY.

CARSON, July 9, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M., and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and twenty-eight members responded to their names; those who failed to respond being Messrs. Ball, Fitch, Folsom, Haines, Jones, Kennedy, Morse, Parker, Warwick, Wellington, and Williams.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. Riley.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Warwick until Monday afternoon.

Mr. McCLINTON. I wish to state the reason of the absence of my colleague, Mr. Wellington, as a matter of justice to him. I am informed that he is so much indisposed as to be unable to be here.

Mr. STURTEVANT. My colleague, Mr. Folsom, also is quite unwell, but I think he will be here, nevertheless, in a short time.

REPORT.

Mr. TOZER, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported that that committee had carefully compared the ordinance, preamble, and Article I of the Constitution, entitled Declaration of Rights, and found them severally correctly engrossed.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, the ordinance, preamble, and Article I, were ordered on the general file.

JUDICIARY SYSTEM.

Mr. DUNNE offered the following resolution, which was read by the Secretary:—

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair, to draft a memorial to Congress, repeating the prayer for an alteration in our judiciary system, to be forwarded to Congress in the event of the non-adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. DUNNE. I think it eminently proper that that resolution should pass, as we all agree that a great necessity exists for an alteration in our judiciary system, as at present constituted in the Territory. As that necessity is made by the friends of the Constitution one of the main arguments for their favoring its adoption, and as we must look forward to the probable defeat of the Constitution, or its possible defeat at least, I think it would be proper for us to take such action as is here proposed. This resolution contemplates, that in case the Constitution should be defeated, a repetition of that prayer, for an alteration of our judiciary system, should be placed before Congress at the next session. The memorial will not be presented, of course, if the Constitution is adopted, and therefore it will do no harm; but I am satisfied it is the wish of every member, in case it should not be adopted, that that matter should again be brought before Congress in a proper shape.

Mr. FITCH. I hope this resolution will not pass. I do not think we can do anything which would have a greater tendency than this to secure the defeat of the Constitution. If we do anything expressing officially a doubt as to the result of our labors, we certainly tend to make others think the same way, and thereby greatly discourage the friends of a State Government. Besides, I do not think that anything coming from this Convention would have any great amount of influence at Washington if our labors should be rejected by the people.

Mr. BANKS. I think that resolution is assuming a little too much, and I do not think that if the Constitution should be rejected, a petition of that kind coming from this Convention, would have any more weight with Congress than a petition from so many private individuals, on this or any other matter. If the Constitution shall be rejected, there will then be ample time to memorialize Congress in regard to making this change, and I see no reason why we should anticipate the action of the people in that matter. Again, it is taking a rather unfair advantage in the matter of deciding upon the Constitution. It is saying to the people that they have sent us here to frame a Constitution which we do not expect will be ratified, and do not even propose or desire to have ratified. It would be so construed at least. I consider it out of place, injudicious, and in no respect desirable.

Mr. DUNNE. In the event that this resolution is rejected, what more potent argument could be adduced in Congress against the change asked for in our judiciary system, than calling up the fact that a resolution of this kind was introduced in the Constitutional Convention, composed not of merely private individuals, but of representatives of the people of the Territory of Nevada, and that they had declared, by their action thereon, that they did not desire any change in the judiciary system? It will show the sense of the Convention to be, that they do not deem it necessary, even with the possible alternative of the Constitution being rejected, to repeat the prayer heretofore made to Congress for a revolution or change in the judiciary system of our Territory:—that, in fact, they do not wish any change to be made. Gentlemen will agree with me, I think, that much opposition would be made in Congress to any change of our judiciary system, and this action of our Convention would no doubt be used to prevent a change which I know we all desire, in case we continue under the form of a Territorial Government.

Mr. DELONG. I am opposed to this resolution. I know that many are going to vote for the Constitution, in order that we may be released from the present judiciary system; but if we pass a resolution like this, many will say there is no use of adopting the Constitution in order to secure that end, because we can trust it to Congress. It will therefore be used as an argument directly against the adoption of the Constitution.

The gentleman says, if we defeat this resolution, that fact will look bad for us in Washington. Why then did he introduce it? If he had not introduced the resolution, certainly it would not have been beaten. I think it will be a stultification of our own action to adopt a resolution of that kind. It is easy enough for the gentleman to withdraw the resolution, and then it will not be beaten.

Mr. FITCH. There is another point to be considered, and that is, it is among the remote possibilities that Congress will not occupy its time in so scanning our proceedings as ever to learn whether a resolution of this kind was introduced or not.

Mr. TOZER. We were selected to come here for a specific purpose, namely, to frame a State Constitution and organic law for the people; and it behooves us to make that instrument as acceptable to the people as possible, and when we have done so to submit it to them for their adoption or rejection. It is not our place to provide for any contingencies, or do anything further than to make the instrument as perfect as we are able to. I think it augurs very illy for the success of the Constitution we are framing to adopt such a resolution as this, looking to its defeat, and I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. EARL. I shall vote against the resolution, for the reason that its tendency would be to prevent the passage of this Constitution. I think we ought to adopt a State Constitution, and a State Government, and we may rest assured that Congress will not give us such a bill, amending our judiciary system, if we reject the Constitution. I hope the resolution will be withdrawn.

Mr. BROSAN. I regret very much that my friend from Humboldt should have introduced this resolution, and I do not apprehend that it will receive anything more than the respectful consideration of this Convention. I would be very much gratified if the gentleman would withdraw it before a vote is taken upon it. In the first place, it is calculated, in my judgment, to do mischief, because it furnishes a pretext for men to vote against the Constitution which we may adopt here; and, in the next place, Mr. President, Congress, in my opinion, would pay no attention to any such representation made from this body. Congress and the nation, at the present time, need the assistance of the State of Nevada, and that is why they have desired, after the recent defeat of the Constitution which was before presented to the people, that we should make another effort to adopt a State Constitution and become a State. It is in order to strengthen the arm of the General Government, in this hour of her peril, when a new nation, and a more perfect one, is, we trust, about to be created. And the very consideration, with Congress, of the necessity of this strength in the councils of the nation, would tend to cause them to turn a deaf ear to the application of this Convention for any change in our organic act, in the manner provided by the resolution of the gentleman from Humboldt. Besides, Mr. President, if this Constitution should be defeated by the people, this same application might then be made, by those who had the immediate direction of the former memorial, on the meeting of Congress, with quite as much, if not more effect, than it could be made as emanating from this Convention. I therefore hope that the gentleman will withdraw his resolution, and if he does not do so, I hope he will stand alone in its support before this Convention.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am surprised that gentlemen do not appreciate the policy of the gentleman from Humboldt, who proposes, in case this Constitution is defeated, to have something to fall back upon. He reminds me of an acquaintance of mine, of whom it is said, that while he was about to be married to one woman, he had got, as the slang phrase is, "stuck" after another woman, and finally made an arrangement with her that as soon as the first woman should die, he would marry the second. I rather think that my friend from Humboldt, who proposes this arrangement, is "stuck" after the defeat of the Constitution.

Mr. DUNNE. I am sorry to see that my motives are impugned, in introducing this resolution.

Mr. CHAPIN [in his seat]. Not a bit; no, no.

Mr. DUNNE [continuing]. And I also wish to call attention to this fact: Those who are opposed to this resolution, seem to think that it is introduced for the purpose of making bumblebee capital against the Constitution, and they say we should not adopt it, for the reason that it will give people an opportunity, or an excuse, rather, for voting against the Constitution, who otherwise would feel compelled to vote for it, although they really, at heart, do not believe that we are prepared to support a State organization, and can scarcely afford it. They think that this class of men, in order to avoid a great evil, will choose the lesser one. Now, I think it is unfair to place the people in a position where they will be compelled to adopt the Constitution, although it may be against their will. It is unfair to refuse them some means of escaping from that

Saturday.]

HAWLEY—LOCKWOOD—FITCH—TOZER—WARWICK—PRESIDENT.

[July 9.]

evil, if they believe it to be an evil. If members of the Convention believe that there is danger in allowing the Constitution to go before the people with any other means whereby they can have an opportunity of remedying the great evil which has been complained of, then I say it is wrong, and unfair, to refuse to face that danger. We should open up every avenue of escape, and not tell the people, "you must adopt the Constitution, and submit to the evils which it will entail upon you, or you must submit to all the evils which now exist." I think, in that respect, gentlemen forget that their own motives are open to censure, or they would not, themselves, be making charges against others.

Mr. HAWLEY. The sense of the Convention has been taken so repeatedly in respect to the expediency of the adoption of a State Constitution, that I think our time can be more profitably spent than in discussing the subject further. The argument which the gentleman from Humboldt has made I think discloses his real animus, and moreover, it defeats itself, when he asserts that the true sense of the Convention can be obtained upon that resolution in the event of the rejection of the Constitution. All that has been said goes to show that, so far as relates to the rejection of the Constitution, every member here is in favor of a change in the judiciary system in that event; and I think we need not fear but that Congress will be, as it has been heretofore, fully advised of our sentiments on that subject. The gentleman expresses an apprehension that the rejection of the resolution will damage our interests at Washington. Now, if Congress shall become aware of the fact of such rejection it can only be through a perusal of our debates, and when they come to read those debates, they will also ascertain, and at the same time, that it is the unanimous sense of the Convention that such a change should be made in our judiciary system, in the event of the rejection of the Constitution. The desired object can be obtained without passing any such resolution, and without in that way intimating to the voters of this Territory that it is our wish that the Constitution should be rejected. We came here to frame a Constitution and form of Government which shall be acceptable to the people, and I believe the interests of the Territory demand the adoption of such Constitution and form of Government. Let us, therefore, throw no obstacle in the way, but let us by every means in our power, and on every proper occasion, give expression to the opinion that the Constitution should be adopted, and endeavor to leave that impression in the minds of our constituents.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move the previous question.

Mr. FITCH. I move to lay the resolution on the table; that is the best way to get rid of it.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will withdraw my motion.

The question was taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and it was agreed to.

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

[Mr. COLLINS in the Chair.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Upon consultation among members of the Judiciary Committee, we have come to the conclusion that there has been an unintentional oversight in constituting that committee. I therefore move, in behalf of the committee, that two members be added to the Committee on the Judiciary, one of whom shall be the President.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOZER. I suppose the object is to include every lawyer in the Convention, but I suggest that perhaps it would be as well to strike off half the names already on the list, and put on a few clients instead of attorneys, that the attorneys may be looked after a little. [Merriment.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. If that is a motion, the Chair will have to rule it out of order.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. WARWICK moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to remove the skylight over the hall, in order to promote ventilation.

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend, by instructing the gentleman from Lander to go on the roof, with a paving stone, and proceed, vigorously, to create ventilation. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT said that the Sergeant-at-Arms would attend to the ventilation.

The PRESIDENT appointed Mr. Frizell, under the motion just adopted, as an additional member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that, in framing this committee, his object was to place every lawyer in the Convention upon it. I believe, so far as I am advised at least, that that has been accomplished. If such is not the case, the Chair would like to be informed of it, because it is a very important committee, and one which should have the benefit of all the legal talent we have.

Mr. BROSAN. I hope, however, that if any more lawyers shall be appointed upon the committee, they will be men who will attend to the business of the committee.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there is one other legal gentleman in the Convention, Mr. Proctor, of Nye county. If there is no objection, he will also be added to the committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope I shall be excused, as I am already on one committee.

Mr. NOURSE. I think the gentleman from Nye ought to be there, to represent his party. [A laugh.]

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the gentleman from Nye (Mr. Proctor) be added to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BROSNAN. I understand, Mr. President, that it is the intention of a good many members of this Convention to adjourn at the hour of the noon recess.

Mr. DELONG [in his seat]. That is an amendment to a standing rule; I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSNAN. I am about to make a statement, with a view of following it up with a motion. I understand that several members desire an adjournment at noon to-day, until Monday morning, and, for my part, I would like to have such an adjournment take place, in order that this Judiciary Committee may devote this afternoon to the consideration of the Article on the Judiciary Department. I think we will save much time by that course, as it is very difficult to get a majority of the committee together in the evening. If the committee shall meet this afternoon, I think we may be able to get through the Article, so as to report it on Monday. For that reason, I move that at noon to-day the Convention adjourn till Monday morning, at ten o'clock.

Mr. DELONG raised a point of order, that such an adjournment would be in violation of a standing rule of the Convention.

After a long discussion, involving frequent reference to Jefferson's Manual.

The PRESIDENT overruled the point of order.

The question was taken on Mr. Brosnan's motion, and upon a division, it was agreed to—aye, 17; noes, 5.

Mr. DUNNE. I give notice that on Monday I will move for evening sessions, to make up for the time which is to be lost by this adjournment.

The PRESIDENT. No notice is necessary. The motion can be entertained whenever motions are in order.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) for the consideration of the several articles pending before that committee.

CORPORATIONS.

The Committee resumed the consideration of Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee was last in session, it had under consideration Section 9 of this article, and to this section two amendments were pending, the first being the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) to strike out all after the words "association or corporation," in the third line; and the second, an amendment to that amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood,) to strike out all after, and including the word "provided," in the fifth line. The question is first upon the amendment to the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood.)

Mr. NOURSE. I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, as I understand that several gentlemen desire me to do so, and I am not, myself, at all strenuous upon that clause. As that is all that separates us, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Since the Convention adjourned last evening, Mr. Chairman, I have been approached by several gentlemen, not members of this Convention, as well as by some who are members, with the expression of their views on the subject which is now before the Convention. I gave notice, yesterday, of my desire to say a few words in opposition to the proposition now under consideration, to wit, the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, as amended by the gentleman from Ormsby.

In the first place, sir, I will say that there seems to be, in the minds not only of those gentlemen who are not members of this Convention, who have conversed with me on the subject, but also in the minds of gentlemen who are members, and who support this proposition, a mistaken idea. Now I have to say, as to the character of the provisions of this section of the Constitution which was adopted at a former Convention, that it seems to be a settled determination on the part of certain gentlemen to construe that section into a peremptory order, on the part of the Convention, to the Legislature of the new State, to issue the bonds proposed, or authorised to be issued, whether or not they desire to do so, or are desired to do so by the people of this Territory, or of this State, as I trust it is about to become. It seems to be the determination of certain gentlemen to impress the public mind with that view of the question. They seem determined—and I say it with all respect to those gentlemen—that the public mind, so far as they are concerned at least, shall not be disabused in those premises. Now, sir, if the views of the members of this Convention are to go abroad, if our opinions are to be at all considered in the community, I desire, for one, at least, to be fully understood upon this question. I do not desire, at this day, to be considered so far behind the spirit of the age—to be regarded as lagging so far behind the march of improvement and of intellect, if I may be allowed the expression, as to be opposed to permitting the loan of the credit of the State to an enterprise of such great public importance as the construction of the Pacific Railroad.

First, then, with the permission of the Committee, I propose, briefly, to call the attention of the Convention, and, if my views should attain any publicity, the attention of the people of the Territory, who are to be called upon to vote upon this instrument, to the character of the section as it was formerly adopted, and, as

[July 9.

I trust it will be re-adopted by this Convention. Sir, we are not here to legislate; we are here to recommend, and to provide rules for the guidance of those who are to legislate. Nothing I could say in regard to this section could add any force to the simple recital of its provisions. The proviso which it is now proposed to strike out, reads as follows:—

“Provided, that the State may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three million dollars, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi river; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people.”

First, then, this proviso does not prescribe any positive rule, but merely recommends a course of action. It places in the hands of the Legislature the power to issue these bonds; and, sir, I ask whether that body, about to convene, as I trust, coming fresh from the people, and representing their views fully, will not be competent to decide in accordance with the will of the people, in this respect. This simple statement of fact does away with that objection which has been urged, more in private conversation, perhaps, than in debate here—more by private individuals than by the members of this Convention. Now, sir, when this proposition is fairly understood by the people, I believe scarcely a dissenting voice will be raised against the adoption of such a provision in our proposed Constitution.

Again, sir, it is and has been contended that the terms of this provision will authorize the Legislature to issue those bonds and deliver them at once to the parties contracting, and that the money so raised by the issuing of those bonds can be expended outside of the borders of the State, not a dollar of it inuring to the benefit of the people of this State. The plain terms of the proposition, as contained in the section under consideration, does away with that objection, because it prescribes, in unmistakable language, which not all the ingenuity of the logician, or the aspiring efforts of any special pleader, can misconstrue, that not a dollar of that money shall be paid, nor one of those bonds issued, nor one dollar of the funds appropriated, until the railroad to be constructed shall be so far completed as to connect with this State—until such railroad, running from navigable waters, shall reach the boundary line of the State which is now about to be formed.

Now, sir, with all deference to gentlemen, I wish to say that another proposition has been raised in this connection which is calculated to mislead the public mind—another objection which is urged in opposition to the measure now before us. Let the Legislature act upon the recommendation of the Convention; let that body avail itself of the provisions of this section, and what does it amount to? If the people of this State, about to be formed, shall, when the Legislature have passed this act, be of opinion that it is unnecessary to lend any aid to this great measure, or that it can be carried through without the State aid—that the people of Nevada are under no obligation to take part in the great drama which is now playing, then, sir, the question being submitted to them, they, by their action, can render the action of the Legislature nugatory and void. Not one dollar can pass from the pockets of the tax-payers to the State, and thence to this railroad enterprise; not to the extent of one dollar can the aid of the State be pledged to this momentous project—the most momentous, with the single exception of restoring the nation to the rights and dignities which it formerly enjoyed, that has ever occupied the attention of the American people—without the consent of the people of the new State, solemnly recorded at the ballot-box.

So much for the objections urged to the passage of this provision. Now, sir, the question naturally follows, have we any interest in the great cause at stake? Does it become us as intelligent men, as men wedded to the ideas of the advancement of the republic to that pinnacle of greatness and glory which God and nature intended it to occupy, from the time our fathers first labored for the establishment of free principles, to play any part in this great drama, or to take any step towards the completion of that grand design; to do anything to aid the Government in placing itself upon a firm basis? Why, sir, while we are sitting here halting and hesitating about the part we are to perform, while we are counting the cost of what little we propose to do, the Government of the United States is involved in a war, the like of which, and no parallel to which, is to be found in history—it is daily called upon to meet expenses, the amount of which has found no parallel in all the past, in the administration of Governmental affairs. And yet, while the Government of the United States is thus engaged, it still finds time to pause, and to give new force and effect to the enactments already made for our benefit, for the construction of this great enterprise—not only to sanction what has heretofore been done, but even to go a step farther. I find in the latest news from the east, a dispatch which reads in this wise—I read from the San Francisco Bulletin:—

WASHINGTON, July 2, 1864.

To Leland Stanford:—Railroad bill passed. It gives one year more on first fifty miles, twenty-five miles thereafter forfeit is removed. No percentage is to be kept back. Gives double amount of land. Allows a first mortgage on the road of equal amount to the Government, making the Government mortgage second. Old law regarding bond as before. I was not able to do anything for the road between Sacramento and San Francisco.

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

Here, then, the Congress of the United States is extending new aid to this great project. The men who hold in their hands the destinies of this nation, more thoroughly acquainted with the aspect of our national affairs than we can be here, and fully advised of their duty to their country, are giving liberally, holding back nothing, to this great undertaking; and they call upon us, by virtue of their enactments, to second them in their endeavors to provide for its early completion. Shall we hesitate, then, for the paltry consideration of three millions of dollars?

[July 9.]

Let us take into consideration the amount of money which we may be called upon to pay. Look at the early history of this Territory. Why, sir, I can remember when, where now are farms overrunning with plenty, and tasteful and substantial residences which are a credit to the Territory, and will be a credit to the new State, nothing was to be seen but the hut of the Indian, and wild cattle roaming over unfenced lands. Let us examine, and endeavor to ascertain by what means this great change has been produced. Have such results been achieved by men sitting supinely down, and trembling at the cost of the works of internal improvement which are now built, or approaching completion? Let the men answer who have constructed those roads now connecting us with the State of California, by means of which our taxable property has been increased from a few thousand to twenty-five millions of dollars, in only four years. What would have been our condition if those roads had never been built? The proposition cannot be disputed, for one moment, that it is by means of these enterprises that, within this very short period of time, our Territory has jumped, so to speak, to a condition of prosperity, with a rapidity of growth and development which, with the single exception, perhaps, of California, finds no parallel in the progress of any State or Territory of the United States, or of any State that ever has been in the American Union. Consider the progress of the past; consider the fact that from a few thousand dollars' worth of property, in our Territory, a few years ago, the taxable property of the Territory, exclusive of the hundreds of millions now actually within our limits, invested in the mining interest, has now risen to an amount of over twenty-five millions of dollars, and then can we doubt that if this project of a railroad, connecting us with navigable waters, shall be pushed to completion, during the next four years the taxable property of the State will be increased from twenty-five millions to at least one hundred millions of dollars? Such being the prospect before us, I ask, in sheer wonder, how can gentlemen hesitate to lend the sanction of their votes to this provision, hedged around as it is by every possible safeguard, which will prevent any action of the Legislature, unless first instructed and afterwards sanctioned by the people? If we were to rush blindly into expenditures, without consulting the future; if, without the direct sanction of the people, we were to pledge their faith to the payment of vast sums of money, then it might be urged, with some plausibility, that we were overstepping the bounds of prudence. But we are committing no such act, and no such charge can be brought against us.

L

Taking everything into consideration, therefore, I urge gentlemen to withdraw their objections, and let us go before the people free from the imputation that must otherwise rest upon us that we are afraid or unwilling to play our part, or to perform our duty in the drama now enacting before the country.

Every intelligent man knows that at this time our relations with foreign governments are complicated. Every man knows the treacherous double-dealing with which, day after day, the fairness that has characterized the Federal Government has been met, and the insolence and outrage which have been heaped upon our Government by titled despots, who have no other right to the positions they occupy than that right which might gives. And we know not the day nor the hour, sir, when this Government may become involved in a quarrel which will call every man within the sound of my voice, and every man upon the Pacific coast, to arms. That day may be in the immediate future, or it may be remote, but, as firmly as I believe that I exist to-day, do I believe that there is no hope of escaping the final arbitrament of arms. I believe that that doctrine which was asserted by one of our earliest Presidents must be maintained, and that, sooner or later, we must be called upon to sweep from the shores of the American continent the usurper and despot. I ask, in view of that contingency, whether or not it becomes us to give aid to a measure which will strengthen our hands, and give force to our arms; a measure which gives us the power and the strength to assert our right to control the affairs of the American continent, as against European despotism?

This provision of our Constitution has received my serious consideration since I became aware of the fact that I was entitled to occupy a seat in this Convention. I have prepared a large number of statistical references which I had intended to use, if the occasion ever presented itself here; but taking into consideration all the facts as they presented themselves, I believed that not a voice would be raised against this measure, and therefore I failed to bring with me the statistics which I had prepared. But I will state this, that in my own experience in the Eastern States, I have known communities which had become paralyzed and crushed to the earth by the stagnation of business, and which have been suddenly raised to a state of animation and a pinnacle of prosperity altogether beyond the expectations or hopes of the most sanguine, by such enterprises as that to which it is here proposed we should give our aid and countenance. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon this fact. It is perhaps useless to point to the State of Georgia, which, before the rebellion, claimed the proud preeminence of the Empire State of the South. But what was it that raised her to that position? What, but the liberal aid which the State Government gave to measures of this sort? What was it which raised the port of Memphis in a few years, from a mere landing-place, whence perhaps four hundred bales of cotton were exported in a year, to a great commercial city of thirty or forty thousand inhabitants before this rebellion commenced? What was it but the system of internal improvements inaugurated by the State of Tennessee, and properly regulated and sanctioned by the people? Look at the State of Illinois, and New York, also. I do not believe it is necessary to go behind the arguments of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), and attempt to show their fallacy, for I think the Convention will bear me out in saying that his conclusions are unwarranted.

HOVEY—DELONG—WARWICK.

[July 9.]

Now, sir, I have made these remarks, not so much with the hope of influencing the votes of members of this Convention, as in order to put myself fairly on the record as being utterly opposed to the illiberal spirit which, as I conceive—and I say it with all respect to the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), and the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), and the other gentlemen who have given expression to their views—would dictate the adoption of the amendment striking out this proviso. Let us adopt the more liberal policy, and shaking off the trammels which have bound us, let us emerge from a state of territorial dependence into the full enjoyment of the dignity of a prosperous State. Let us adopt this liberal policy, that we may spring fully armed and paroled into the Union. Born amidst the fury of war, into a nation baptised by fire, and regenerated by the blood of innumerable patriots, resting in the honored graves of the glorious dead, we shall fringe the borders of the republic with a hesperian light that will be hailed in the future as a proper adornment of that glory which, through all time, shall encircle our country's name.

Mr. HOVEY. Is an amendment in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood,) having been accepted, an amendment is in order.

Mr. HOVEY. I move to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out, by striking out the words, "to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words, "to some railroad to be built," so as to read, "on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe to some railroad to be built connecting this State with the navigable waters of California," &c.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to inquire if the Sacramento River is a navigable stream. I believe there is no water in it now, of any account, according to the newspapers.

Mr. WARWICK. I would like to have the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Hovey) explain how much and wherein his amendment alters the original section.

Mr. HOVEY. I will endeavor to explain it. My reason for offering the amendment is this.

The way the proviso is worded now, if we adopt the old section, it prevents our expending money in crossing the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which the people by their vote may decide to do, provided they are not prohibited from doing it. As it reads now we are prevented from expending money outside of the limits of the State, and my amendment is to obviate that difficulty.

Mr. WARWICK. When I spoke on this subject yesterday afternoon I had no intention of referring to it again, scarcely dreaming, from the manner in which the section was framed, that it would meet with opposition from any respectable portion, as regards numbers, of this Convention. Now let us look calmly and dispassionately at the section as it stands, and see what it proposes. In the first place, sir, the proviso simply proposes to leave to the people, and the State Government that is to be, I hope, the question whether they will or will not lend their aid to one of the greatest national enterprises that has ever been undertaken by any people. It is an enterprise undertaken, not for the benefit of the State of California, not for the benefit of our neighbors, but for the development of the State of which we ourselves are citizens, and whose glory we hope to see perpetuated. Not that narrow and selfish policy should prevail here, which demands that every dollar of this appropriation shall be laid out in our own borders, but a far-seeing, more statesmanlike view, as to what that appropriation should be, looking not only to the present but to the future.

Let us in the first place inquire how much the appropriation which we seek to authorize, will benefit our people here at home, in the developing of the Territory or the State, of which we are citizens. Suppose we had in our midst a mountain of gold, or a mountain of silver, still if there were no means of connecting ourselves with the outside world, it would be as dross, or the dirt which we tread under foot. It is only by the facilities which commerce lends, only by the connection which we have with the world abroad, that our gold and silver become valuable commodities. A case directly in point has recently awakened my mind more particularly to the necessity of some action on this important subject, living as we do outside of the great world, and relying almost entirely upon ourselves, or paying most onerous charges for such communication as we are compelled to have. I had occasion, not long ago, to converse with a gentleman, a resident of Ormsby County—one of our mill owners. Some rock had been sent to be crushed at his mill, and—I refer to this only to show the necessity of some means of communicating with the outside world, in order to render valuable what is now altogether worthless—I asked him what the result of that crushing was. I felt anxious about it, because the rock came from the district of Amador, to which I belong. He told me that the rock was worthless. I said I was astonished at that, because I had seen that rock repeatedly tested,

WARWICK.

[July 9.

and the silver actually oozing from it. "But," said he, "it only pays one hundred dollars a ton, and what is that?" Now, sir, think of it! There are thousands of tons of that rock—enough to make a nation of millionaires—yet it only pays a hundred dollars, and what is that?" It is worthless in our midst. Why? Because we are shut out from the world, with no means of communication to render it valuable, locked up as we are, with every article of living at starvation prices. Flour sells in that district at twenty dollars per hundred, and every thing we eat has to pay a freight-tax of from sixteen to twenty-five cents a pound. Therefore it is that rock which only pays one hundred dollars a ton cannot be worked. All these things come home to us in that far-off county of Lander, and we look anxiously for the day when the completion of this great national work will not only connect us by links of iron with you in this more favored portion of the Territory, and with the State of California, but also with all our eastern borders. Therefore I say that it is an illiberal policy which will not allow the people—not foist upon them, but allow them—if they see fit, to subscribe to this railroad.

But gentlemen, speaking here in their wisdom, tell us that this appropriation should be defeated. One far-seeing gentleman, brought up in Minnesota, which was ruined by banks—brought up in Minnesota, ruined by railroads; in Minnesota, ruined in every conceivable way, and on the brink of repudiation on account of bonds on which she never paid a cent of interest—tells us that this appropriation would ruin the State of Nevada. Why, sir, there is scarcely any provision in this Constitution thus far brought before the Convention, but what, according to that gentleman, it has been the ruin of Minnesota. [Merriment.] Now, sir, I have had the honor of living in another State almost as great as Minnesota. I came, like the President of our Convention, from the State of Illinois, and I became a citizen of that State when there was not a mile of railroad in it. It was then sparsely inhabited, poor and feeble; but it has become a grand and mighty State whose sons to-day are gathered by hundreds and by thousands upon every battle-field, defending the life of the Republic. Those then desolate prairies have since that time been populated and converted into fruitful fields. And what have not railroads done for that State built up in the wilderness? They have given her an impetus on the road to prosperity which she never would have obtained without them. They have caused cities to spring up with hundreds of thousands of inhabitants, and population to be poured into every county and town. The State has been developed as if touched by the magic wand of an enchanter. The increase of the population of that State has been as wonderful as our own, and the growth of her cities has never seen a parallel in the United States. I went to the city of Chicago in 1849, when the population only amounted to about 28,500 people; but, five years ago, the population of that city had swelled to over 100,000 people. Think of it, gentlemen. An increase in population of three hundred per cent., in the short space of ten years! And not only such an increase of population, but a vast increase of the wealth of the State; and all, or mainly, attributable to the beneficial results of railroads. That is what has made Illinois not only the granary of the United States, but in a very great measure the granary of Europe also. The exports of wheat and other grain from the State of Illinois have materially contributed to the wealth and prosperity of the United States. They have made that State, simply by the influence of railroad communication alone, one of the foremost States of the Union. These facts are demonstrable by the experience and observation of every gentleman on the floor of this Convention who has taken the pains to examine the question at all.

Reference has been made also to the State of New York. Now what did New York do? The State of New York loaned her credit to the New York and Erie Railroad, and some gentleman, I think, in his allusions to the railroad system of New York, has asserted or inferred that the result of that loan was disastrous. Now, sir, I would inquire of the gentleman who made that assertion if he has ever traveled from Lake Erie down to the mouth of the Hudson, that river which is celebrated as the most beautiful in America? I have done so, and I know that along that whole route, which twenty-five years ago was almost a howling wilderness, there are beautiful cities and populous towns, which have sprung up in consequence of this railroad communication. That region has, by this means, become not only a center of agriculture, but an emporium of manufacture, and that portion of the State of New York has been rendered not only the most beautiful but the most productive region within the limits of that State.

There is another consideration, which is worthy of our attention. The American people, above all others, I believe, on the earth, place great value upon time. We commence life in a hurry, and we hurry right through life, until the dark angel hurriedly gathers us to the tomb, when our race is ended, and our task is done. Now, I start from my home in Lander County, and, with the utmost possible diligence, I consume two days and a-half, and expend a hundred dollars, in order to reach this Convention. But, how would it be if we had railroad communication? I could leave my home in Lander County, in the morning, having taken breakfast at home, and if the Convention were in session in Carson, I could sit in your midst at high noon, saving thereby one day and a-half of time. Now, one day and a-half saved to each individual, where there are thousands who are traveling in the community, is an important item in the brief span of life of the whole community. And it is all the more important when a person is approaching the end of the race, when a day or an hour becomes immensely valuable. We have to think of that fact, in comparison with the small amount which this proposed debt will cost for each individual in the community.

WARWICK—DELONG.

[July 9.]

Another thing: these gentlemen cling to the old-time usages. They are afraid to let the people of Nevada say for themselves whether they shall have this great highway or not. Look at our highways now, infested with robbers at every turn; not that I fear them personally, however, for reasons which my modesty forbids me to name. [Laughter.] I have looked at this question carefully, and I am at a loss to conceive what these gentlemen would require. This provision is carefully guarded. No law can take effect under it, unless first sanctioned by a direct vote of the people. It says:—

Provided, That the State may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three million dollars, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi river; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people.

It is this concluding clause that prevents any waste, or any lavish expenditure, and that is the clause that obviates every reasonable objection. It is not that we foist it upon the people, not that we say the Legislature shall do so and so; but we say to the people of Nevada that if they themselves will it, then they shall have the power to enact it in this particular case—and why? That the State may be developed, and that we may take that stand which we ought to take, as one of the foremost States of this Union.

The gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) referred yesterday to the case of Minnesota, but there is a practical difference in our case. Minnesota is an agricultural State, and between her and the great waters are a great many other agricultural communities, which could under-sell her in any of the markets of the world because of her greater distance from them. She could not compete with the State of Illinois or Iowa, or with others closely connected by a railroad system with the great lakes and rivers which are navigable to the sea. But that is not our position. We have wealth within our boundaries with which no other State can compete. If this clause were to bind the people of the State to vote one single dollar, I should oppose it to the last; but when it comes to saying to them, "You may, or you may not," the case is different. Now, sir, in any case where it is proposed to make an appropriation promising a sufficient return, or sufficient of national good, I am ever ready to cast my vote for it, and I sincerely trust that this provision will commend itself to the kindly judgment of every member of this Convention who looks not alone to the present depressed state of affairs, but who, with a more enlarged vision, a more high and hopeful forecast for the future, looks forward to the day when these wastes now bar-ren, these wilds now unpopulated, shall teem with a population of millions, when we shall be able to send not only silver and gold, but, if need be, our blood—our hearts' blood, coined into drachmas—to be offered for the defense of the flag. Not for to-day, or for to-morrow, but for the future, when the voice of every member of this Convention shall have become silent,—when all who hear me now shall have turned to ashes and dust,—then, sir, I hope, shall the State of Nevada continue to be one of the component parts of a great, united, free country, and the great railroad tie which shall bind our brethren of the east with our brethren of the west, shall remain as an enduring monument of the wisdom of the people who have called us together here. And a great and mighty people shall in their wisdom long continue to sanction and applaud the measure which I now have the honor to advocate.

Mr. DELONG. With much that was said by the gentleman who has last spoken I fully agree, for the reason that it accords, in my judgment, with the results of the observations and investigations of every thinking man. California, our sister State, started out fifteen years ago in the race of empire, attended by the most glowing promises of a glorious future that any young State ever had before it. It had an unparalleled wealth of agricultural soil, mineral possessions claimed to be unsurpassed, and a population composed of people drawn from every quarter of the globe, representing the enterprise, the intelligence, the industry, and the bravery of all the nations on the earth. It had a seaboard which promised to unite the commerce of the Indies with America, if not with the entire globe. With all these advantages held out before her, California, I say, started upon the race of empire a few years since, with the most glowing promise and prospect of a brilliant future unfolding before her. Yet, strange to relate, to-day she is the poorest State in the Union—without credit at home or abroad, with more poor men in her midst, with less of public improvements, with less of all of which a State may well feel proud, than any other State in all the sisterhood of States within this Union. This Territory starts apparently in the same way. With an unparalleled, unprecedented, almost undreamed-of wealth of mineral resources, with whole mountains and vast caverns of mineral wealth, we see her at this early day, before she has fairly started in the race of empire, halting and hesitating whether or not to become a State, fearing that her resources are insufficient to sustain her in that exalted position. Why are these things so? When we see such strange effects, we should naturally look for the cause. I agree with gentlemen who have preceded me, that the reason is, the want of internal improvements. I say it is remarkable that these people, with all their enterprise and wealth and energy, should sit here in the sun, and upon the sand, and starve almost, while

DELONG.

[July 9.

right here at their homes are untold wealths of money in their mines, but all lying idle because those mines cannot be developed for want of internal improvements. The Comstock lead is being worked, it is true, for little blue sulphurets; but the rock that will not yield twenty-five dollars per ton, at least, has to be cast aside and condemned as utterly worthless ore, because we lack the wood and the water-power to reduce it. We have to haul wood now from the Sierras with mule teams, at a cost of twenty to twenty-five dollars per cord, to crush rock by steam-power, and if the rock will not pay more than twenty-five dollars a ton it will not yield any profit beyond the cost of working, and consequently is worthless and waste. The same thing is more plainly exemplified in Lander County, as has been shown by the member from that county. It is situated in a belt of mineral region extending from Mexico in the South to the British possessions in the North, hundreds of miles in width, and of untold richness, yet almost wholly undeveloped for the want of connection with these mountains where water-power may be had in abundance, and where there is a boundless wealth of timber. These two great requisites, which only are necessary to make our Territory a great State, will be obtained in abundance by a railroad connection.

But when I go that far, and when I agree with the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) that the difficulty in the way of our progress is the want of internal improvements—that it is that want which has caused those cities of California, which started with such glowing promise, to lie drying up and withering upon her plains to-day—for I think it cannot be disputed that their want of prosperity is attributable to the lack of internal improvements—yet, it seems to me, I must disagree with him in his views as to the manner of supplying that want. He asks that it may be done by means of State aid. Now, I will say that only a few years ago I was equally as enthusiastic in support of the idea that such desirable results could and should be accomplished by that means, and I labored, in the halls of legislation in California, with all the earnest zeal and ability I possessed, to secure the aid of that State to railroad enterprises in the northern part of the State. We succeeded in getting a bill through, granting State aid to the Vallejo and Marysville Railroad Company, giving the company alternate sections of land along its line, for the purpose of building that road, and granting them five years time in which to complete it—granting them, in fact, all the privileges and concessions which they asked at the hands of the Legislature. But that road was never built. Although the free gifts of the State were sufficient, in the judgment of every business man, in themselves to have paid for the building of the road, if it had been constructed by the enterprise of private parties or corporations, yet no part of it was ever constructed. Why was it not built? It was not because the State refused its aid, but it was because the rates of interest on money were so high that men who had money could not be induced to invest in railroad enterprises. When we went to the capitalists with the scheme of that Vallejo and Marysville Railroad Company, when we went to San Francisco, and laid the statistics before the money-lenders, asking them to embark in that scheme, and help us to build that road, which would connect California and Oregon with ties of iron, and make San Francisco a great metropolis, what was their reply? In such a case the capitalist bears you very patiently, admits all you have to urge, and then says you must first show him how your road will pay two per cent. per month at the start, and a fair margin for an increase. And this, too, when capital is invested freely in Europe, and in the Eastern States, with no margin for an increase at all, at six, seven, and never over ten per cent. per annum, and investments of that kind are greedily sought for. But here, you cannot get capitalists to go into any enterprise, unless it promises two per cent. per month. What was the reply of the money-lender when we approached him, and sought to gain his assistance in that undertaking? He turned to us and said, "My friends, you are foolish to expect me to invest my money in enterprises which promise to pay but two per cent. per month, when I can loan my money at three per cent. a month, and secured, too, by bond and mortgage on property in San Francisco." Go to men who have capital to-day in Virginia City—men who might command almost the entire wealth of San Francisco—and ask them to build a little canal in these mountains, where water-power, and wood, in inexhaustible quantities, is to be found, and show them, as we can, and have shown them, how they could carry water and wood enough to supply the State through that little canal, and that the work promises to pay two, and even three per cent. per month, with the best security in the world, and what do they say? The answer is, "I can loan my money on bond and mortgage in the city of Virginia for five, six, and sometimes even eight per cent. per month, and am I going to embark in a kind of enterprise which promises to pay only two or three per cent?" No, sir; they do not refuse to embark in these things because of any doubt sought to be thrown around our own enterprises, or around enterprises in California, but because they can make a more profitable use of their money. And they will not be any more ready or willing to embark in them because the aid of the State may be given to those enterprises. You must reach and remedy the evil, by a blow struck in another direction. You must accomplish that result, by doing away with that clause in this Constitution, and in that of California, which has chained the industry and enterprise of our citizens, and brought them down to their present

DE LONG.

[July 9.]

ignoble position—that clause which gives to us an exclusive gold and silver currency. Why, sir, there is not a nation on the face of the earth, outside of this people on the Pacific coast, which, if we were to draw from them everything in the shape of money except their gold and silver, would have left a dollar apiece for all the inhabitants. England would not have it, nor any nation of Europe; and there is not a nation or a State on the globe, outside of California, and Oregon, and this Territory, that would have it. And what would be the result in other communities, if they were suddenly reduced to a specie currency? Why, sir, enterprise, business, industry, internal improvements—everything would be forced to stand still. The interest on money would be enhanced beyond all bounds, and not a railroad or a canal would be built. I say, then, reach the difficulty, and apply the remedy, in another direction.

You cannot encourage and assist these great enterprises by appropriations of this character. Even three millions of dollars is but a drop in the bucket in the building of that road, and when you reduce that amount down to less than one million, as I contend this, in effect, would be reduced, because we have already limited the interest to seven per cent., which is a beggarly rate of interest here, it will be of no perceptible advantage whatever, to the enterprise. Men in this country would not buy those bonds. They will not be such fools as to invest in seven per cent. State bonds, when they can get three or four times as much for the use of their money; and we shall, therefore, be compelled to seek Eastern capital. And then what would be the result? Why, your own people, although really lending no substantial aid to the railroad, would, nevertheless, be obliged to assume the responsibility of paying this interest. That burden would come upon your State, upon the back of the current expenses every year. We do not wish to be called upon to pay the interest upon bonds to that amount, unless, in some way, we derive a corresponding benefit. I do not believe the bonds would ever sell for more than fifty cents on the dollar, payable in greenbacks, in New York, and yet the State of Nevada would have to pay the interest on the entire amount of the bonds, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars a year. I say the loss to the people is too great to be compensated by the hope of advantages held out in the anticipation of this road getting here a little sooner.

Now there are two railroad enterprises which have been fostered by the General Government. They are rivaling each other, and both striving might and main to reach the border of our new State, not for the sake of any premium which we are expected to hold out, but for the sake of securing their own support by the people of Nevada, as well as the support of the people where those roads are building. Let them go on and run their lines across the country, and across the mountains, just as fast as it is possible for them to do so; and they will build them no faster, sir, on account of any aid which we here can bestow. They will work just as hard without it, and then you save to Nevada the three millions of dollars with which you are now asked to saddle her in her infancy. You can hasten these roads more, as I have already said, by striking a blow in another direction—by giving us some currency other than coin. The moment you do that—I do not care whether you give us greenbacks or banking institutions—you make the country rich and prosperous, because you reduce the rate of interest, and force money into the market, to be loaned at so much per month, to be used in the building of railroads and canals, and all sorts of public improvements, in addition to the opening and developing of our mines. That is the way to reach and to remedy the evil—by striking a blow at this infernal cent-per-cent.

This is a subject upon which we ought to gain wisdom by our knowledge of California—by our experience as citizens and as pioneers there. That experience tells us that the men who laid the foundations of that State; the men who prepared the foundations upon which to build up a great and magnificent State; the men who opened the roads to the mountains and brought water from the streams to the placers; the men who built her cities, who prepared and improved her farms; those men, the early and adventurous California pioneers, have generally gone from our sight, or are beggars or paupers today. And who is it, I ask, that has reaped the reward of their toil? Who are they who are living in the fine houses which those men reared to be the homes of their families? They are these three-per-cent. money-brokers—the men who crawl into their little narrow dens ten feet by twelve; men who never built a house themselves, and never employed a laborer; men who never did anything to develop the country, except to make other people pay two and three per cent. per month for the use of their money. They have loaned their money in that way, and have rolled it over and over, gobbling up every thing, until the poor pioneer was stripped of all he had, turning it over to these drivers of hard bargains. Many of that class of men have found their way here, and are now driving the same hard bargains throughout our Territory, and playing exactly the same role. Are we to place ourselves in the hands of those men? I say give us a different fate from that. Let us adopt what all the world, except California, has decided to be the part of wisdom to adopt, and that is a paper currency. Let us allow these paper evidences, or representatives of currency and value, to circulate, and then a few men who have happened to get hold of all the gold and silver in the land will not be able to play into each others' hands in such a way as to crush down any and every man whom they may choose to crush.

DELONG.

[July 9.

Two or three men in San Francisco have really had the State in their power ever since California was a State. And Nevada Territory, with all her enterprising merchants and business men, is equally in the power of those men who know how to crush and ruin business at any moment they please. And I believe they are pressing us even now. They go to work upon an elaborate system. They allow a man to pledge his stocks in the banks, and then to draw about twenty per cent. as a loan secured by his stocks in the mines. They continue that very liberal system until every man whose necessities bring him within their power is embarked, and every man's stock pledged, and then, by a secret combination and understanding, they shut down, and every one of their victims is forced to go into Montgomery street with his stock. Once they get the stock into the market, these men gobble it up, as they did the fine farms and the big stores and warehouses, and other property in California. That is what is going on all the time, and it is the natural result of an exclusive gold and silver currency. If we want railroads, if we want these men to come out with their money and make investments in railroads and other enterprises, we must have other representatives of value to answer instead of gold and silver as a medium of exchange. Then we shall appreciate and enjoy the full value of the home article, for the production of which men are toiling and exhausting their bodily strength here in our midst.

Now this idea of submitting the proposition to grant aid to the people, is no doubt a very good thing on the stump, when we are going to talk about it before the people. It is all very fine on paper. Why, sir, that clause providing for submitting to the people of the State the question, whether or not they will vote this three millions of dollars, at the time of election would be so far lost sight of that you you could get fifty men to vote for it on condition that fifty others would agree to vote for a favorite candidate for constable. If every political party would, by agreement, put "Railroad Contribution—Yes," on their tickets, then it would be universally voted for, and scarcely anybody would notice it during the election; and if, on the other hand, by a like agreement, they put "Railroad Contribution—No," on their tickets, then it would be as universally voted down. People, in the time of an excited election, would pay no attention to such a matter. It is not that which people get excited about. The burden falls lightly upon each one, and the voter thinks but little about it, or if he thinks at all, his reflection is, that what he pays is but a trifle, not worth minding; consequently there is no strife on the subject. The strife is only for the success of the party, or the election of favorite candidates. I say, then, that this talk about submitting it to the people is all humbug and bosh, because the people will not pay attention to it at a general election. If you wish to obtain a fair vote upon that proposition, provide in your Constitution that it shall be submitted as a separate question, at a time when men's minds are not excited over a general election, or about the success of this or that officer to be elected, and then, by their votes, the people will show their honest sentiments on that question, because they will vote with their attention directly called to it, and with nothing to distract such attention. It strikes me that we should not willingly and knowingly, with the lessons of the past before us, and the knowledge that these railroad companies will do all they can to carry such a proposition before the people, trust the decision of the question to the hazard of a general election, at which other important issues must be decided. It is a fact which gentlemen must recognize, that these companies will labor zealously, because they will have a great interest at stake, while it is nobody's business in particular to oppose them.

It is said that this appropriation will hasten the building of the road, but I do not think so. They are building the road now as fast as they can build it, and they could not hurry it at the present time, no matter how much money might be at their command, for the simple reason that they cannot, for love nor money, obtain rolling-stock fast enough. There is a lack of that material, owing to the necessities of the Government; it cannot be furnished fast enough. Railroads are building and have been built throughout the South for our military lines. The cost of rolling-stock is therefore very heavy, but these railroads are buying it up at any cost, when it can be had, and shipping it out here. They cannot do it any faster than they are doing it, and in my opinion, we shall have the railroad here just as quick without this constitutional proviso as we shall with it.

Now, sir, I would vote in favor of a provision granting aid to this railroad in one way, and that is, to provide that this money shall be taken and used to commence a section of the proposed line of road, on either of these routes across the mountains, and complete it as far as the money would carry it, on that proposed line, within this State. I would go for that most heartily, because that would help us some, while I insist upon it that this provision would not help us at all, but, on the other hand, that it would crush the State down into absolute bankruptcy. It will subject us to enormous taxation in order to pay this interest of two hundred thousand dollars a year. Where do gentlemen expect this money is to come from? Let them figure a little on our ways and means. We shall have to pay the salaries of our judges and other officers of State, and we shall have to pay the current expenses of the State, and you may add to that twenty-five thousand dollars a year as interest on our public debt already accrued. Then if you issue these bonds, you depreciate your State scrip, and start off on your career of State prosperity with scrip at twenty-five or thirty cents on the dollar, and not taken at that, except by those officers who are obliged to take it in lieu of money. I say it would destroy us as a State, and I am willing to run any risk there may be of being called an old fogy on account of my opposition to this measure.

But I am not opposed to the construction of the railroad. No man in the world lives or breathes who can say that he has a more glowing hope of the grand results to follow in the future, from the construction of a railroad across the mountains, than I have. I regard it as an achievement which should be sought after and labored for by every man who loves his country and hopes for its prosperity. It is the great want of our State. It is what will give us unbounded prosperity, and therefore I am in favor of it; but I say that this loan will not aid it in the least, while it will ruin us in the effort to pay it.

Mr. COLLINS. I certainly should not have risen to make any remarks upon this question, but for the very ingenious speech of my friend, the gentleman from Washoe. (Mr. Nourse), and the very enthusiastic remarks of my colleague from Storey (Mr. DeLong.) I do think, however much the gentleman who last spoke applauds this great movement for the construction of the Pacific Railroad, which is to unite the two great oceans of the globe, however much he thinks we ought to endeavor to use our influence in behalf of that enterprise, he is opposed, practically, to our exercising any such influence in its behalf.

Mr. DeLONG [in his seat]. Oh, no, I am not.

Mr. COLLINS. Now, all that the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) said in regard to railroads in Minnesota may be true, and there may be reasons why it should be true, though to a certain extent I doubt their applicability to our own case. There may be reasons why people in various parts of the country have suffered on account of railroads. I have, myself, known of hundreds and hundreds of individuals, who, in their enthusiasm, have subscribed to the stocks of railroads, and have been ruined thereby; but I would say to gentlemen of this Convention, that I know of no community where a system of railroads has ever been thoroughly established, which community would consent to exchange those railroads for the amount of money which they cost. Take, for instance, the State of Illinois, and look at the advantages which she has derived from railroads. I grant that subscribers to the stock of those railroads may have suffered much, but the public, as a whole, has derived great benefits from them. Take, also, for another instance, the internal improvements of the State of New York. It is notorious that about the time of the opening of the great Erie Canal, which unites the lakes with the waters of the Hudson River, a little distance from Utica westward, property was comparatively worthless; but the moment this communication was opened, that property acquired great value, and it added immensely, too, to the value of all the property of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, and Western New York, and what was the immediate result? Why, it gave such immediate and immense advantages to New York, that Pennsylvania was forced, in self-defence, to open a canal between tide-water and her own western boundary. And look at the advantages which have been derived from these lines of communication, by New York, Pennsylvania, and the great West. These public works, of gigantic proportions, at once utilized the idle lands of the western wilderness, opened up improvements, and founded towns and cities so rapidly, that in a short time there was a necessity for more rapid intercommunication between the markets of supply and consumption, and for increased transportation. The Albany and Buffalo, or what is more commonly known now as the New York Central Railroad, was the off-spring of this necessity. A similar result followed the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal—the union by iron rails of Philadelphia with the Ohio River, and by that with the great valley of the Ohio. The competition of the Northern route became so great, and property rose to such great value on these lines, that another railroad was contemplated and has been constructed between tide-water and the city of Erie, on Lake Erie.

Now, the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) yesterday told us that the New York and Erie railroad was suspended, or its construction baffled and delayed, in consequence of State aid. I think the gentleman's memory must have failed him on that subject. He may not have designed to convey that idea, possibly, although, certainly, his language did convey it. The managers of that New York and Erie Railroad commenced it with the idea that six years time, and three millions of dollars, were all the time, and all the money, that would be necessary to secure its completion. The stockholders paid their three millions, and it was all absorbed, but the road was but fairly commenced. In consequence of the hard times, nothing further was done until New York appropriated three millions more. That, too, was exhausted without completing the road, and finally, instead of building the road in six years, as was projected in the outset, it required seventeen years, and instead of costing only eight or nine millions, as at first contemplated, it cost the round sum of seventeen millions of dollars. But the road was eventually completed; and I ask the gentleman if New York, and Pennsylvania, and Ohio could be induced to exchange that railroad, or to tear up the rails, and prevent their operation, for twice the cost of the road? I certainly believe they would not. In New York, all the property along that route has risen, since 1850, from fifty to three hundred per cent. in value.

COLLINS.

[July 9.

I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to this point: They contend that the railroad will be constructed, whether we give it our help or not. I have no doubt of it; but the question is, whether the offer of an appropriation of three millions will not be a great advantage and assistance, and greatly hasten the completion of the road. Much has been said relative to the impossibility of securing the investment of capital. It is not to be expected that the capital is coming from California, where the percentage is so ruinously high; or from Nevada, where the percentage is still higher. But in proportion as the value of a railroad challenges the attention of the capital of the globe, in the same proportion will the capital of the globe run in the direction of that railroad. The very fact that the Constitution of Nevada gives the Legislature permission to subscribe three millions of dollars to the stock of this railroad, will inspire the capitalists of New York, and all the Eastern States, and the capitalists of Europe, with the idea that there is, really, value in it.

My colleague has stated that the Vallejo and Marysville Railroad could not be built. That may be true, but is there any analogy between that road and this? This is something which is, in reality, a national affair, and something, also, which is absolutely indispensable to our very existence. Nothing can be said like that, in relation to the road to which he has referred. As the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) has said, everything in Nevada, in the way of living, is held at almost starvation prices. We have to pay immense freights and profits on everything we consume. Here we are hemmed in by mountains on the east, and hemmed in by the Sierras on the west, and freights to any part of our Territory range from three to ten cents on the pound, and, at the more remote points—at Lander, and Humboldt, and Esmeralda—they are very much augmented.

Mr. BROSANAN [in his seat]. From sixteen to twenty-five cents.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir, as much as that. Now, I ask gentlemen if there is not an absolute necessity for this railroad. If those who are managing its construction are pressed for money, is there not a necessity that we should aid them as far as we can? I believe that necessity will exist, for I do not believe that the engineers, or anybody else, can tell within ten millions of dollars what will be the cost of building the line of railroad across the mountains to Nevada, nor do I believe that they can tell within five years, how long it will take to build it. Our warmest hopes are, that it will be built in three years, while some maintain that it will take five, and others, that it will take as many as ten years to get that road through. I remember that when one gentleman was here, some time ago, when the road was first projected, he wanted to induce me to procure subscribers to the stock on this side, and said that the road would be built within three years, certainly; but now three years and a half have elapsed, and they have only about twenty-five miles completed. I do not believe the road will be completed for several years to come, because the conformation of the country, and its geological structure between here and California, is comparatively unknown. It is a terra incognita. They hardly know whether the road is to pass through trap, or talc, or slate, or gravel, or hard blue rock. But the greater the difficulties to be encountered, the more earnest should we be to press the work forward to an early completion, because it is with us a matter of absolute necessity.

I regard this proviso as practically offering a premium, in order to hasten the railroad. Now let us look at the influence naturally and necessarily exerted by premiums. A premium is offered, for instance, by an association, for the best essay on a certain subject, and what is the result? It stimulates hundreds, and perhaps thousands of men, to turn their attention to that particular subject, and before you are aware of it, piles of manuscripts may be accumulated, some of which may be of great value. California, by her Legislature of 1861, offered premiums upon certain agricultural productions, and what has been the result? The farming interest has been stimulated to the rearing of tobacco and cotton, and the other productions for which premiums were offered, and, consequently, new sources of wealth have been developed. They also, at the same time, offered premiums on certain manufactures, and in less than two years, manufacturers have come up and received the prizes for all those manufactures, from the hands of the government. I might extend these illustrations indefinitely, but I think sufficient has been already said, to show that a premium will have a tendency to cause men to press on with greater vigor and energy. If, by this means, we can hasten the building of a railroad across the mountains, it is clearly for our interest to do so. As I have intimated, I do not believe that the railroad can or will be brought within our Territory in less than six or eight, or, perhaps, even ten years, and if we can advance it, or shorten the time, as much as one year, that will certainly more than compensate us for this appropriation of three millions of dollars. I have yet to learn, Mr. Chairman, where any system of internal improvements has ever penetrated any section of the country, east or west, north or south, and that section of the country has not been benefited. The real estate, and all other property in such sections of the country, have invariably been increased from twenty-five to fifty or one hundred per cent. in value. I refer as illustrations of this universal rule, to the Erie Canal, to the Pennsylvania Canal, to the New York Central Railroad, to the Erie Railroad, and to that railroad which crosses the Green Mountains, and by that route connects Boston with the great West.

And allow me here to refer to one interesting

Saturday.]

GIBSON—COLLINS—DELONG—CHAIRMAN—HOVEY.

[July 9.]

fact. I remember distinctly, that after New York had secured the trade of the West by means of her railroads to the Hudson River, down which that trade was carried throughout the year, with the exception of a few months in the winter season, Boston ingeniously tapped that commerce at Albany by means of the Western Railroad, and during the winter months managed to carry it about all off. New York suffered immensely in consequence, and New York in self-defense had to create a company to open a railroad direct to Albany. And they are employing that railroad successfully at the present day, and thereby protecting themselves against the encroachments of Boston. And I ask if the property all along the line of all these railroads has not been immensely augmented in value in consequence of this construction?

I repeat, therefore, that however much railroads have injured individuals, they have always benefited the public. I do not, for one, pretend to say that this Pacific Railroad is going to fill the pockets of its stock-holders, although it may look very plausible at present. Yet, even if it ruins the stock-holders, it is nevertheless going to benefit this State and the nation. If the appropriation of three millions of dollars shall prove to be a dead loss to the Territory, so far as the money is concerned, it will nevertheless benefit the Territory in the end, to the extent of perhaps fifty or a hundred millions of dollars.

My colleague from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has told us how much advantage was to be derived from the construction of a railroad that should strike the Sierra Nevadas, running from the more populous portions of our Territory, and entering the mountains at some point where water and wood may be had in abundance. I say that simple fact itself should be sufficient to induce us to use all the influence we can to push forward this work in order to bring ourselves in direct communication with the mountains. I presume that millions upon millions of tons of quartz in Storey County are regarded to-day as utterly worthless, which, if such communication were opened, would enrich the owners, and give employment to thousands and tens of thousands of laboring men in this Territory. All they need is to have a railroad to convey it to some point where wood and water are abundant.

And we have other advantages to consider. Look at the enormous expense of freights, amounting, according to some, to six millions, and according to others, to as high as eight or ten millions of dollars a year, and I have heard of some statisticians carrying the estimate up as high as twelve millions per annum. Look, too, at the number of passengers who have crossed the mountains. During the last year, Louis McLane & Co's Pioneer Line have carried nineteen thousand passengers from Nevada to Sacramento. That is nearly $100,000 for that company alone.

Mr. GIBSON. Their profits last year amounted to over $100,000.

Mr. COLLINS. I have no doubt of it whatever. Now let us look at one other point. Besides the cheap rate at which quartz could be conveyed to the mills, and the reduction in the cost of freights and passage, there would be a great saving of time. As the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) has justly remarked, a day and a half of time, or more than that, perhaps, would be saved in the journey between here and Auslin. Look, for instance, at the enormous investments which our merchants are obliged to make in consequence of the time consumed in transportation.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I desire to ask him if he will consent to this proviso, or one embodying the same ideas, for this is rather roughly drawn? If so, he and I could agree, I think, on this question, if nobody else. I propose to strike out the proviso as it now stands, and insert this:—

“Provided: That the State may issue railroad bonds to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, bearing interest at seven per cent. per annum, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first commence and continue to its completion a railroad within this State, until the sum of three millions of dollars shall be expended in constructing such road within this State, which railroad shall connect this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi River; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people at a special election called for that purpose, and not until such railroad company shall be shown to have actually expended the sum of three millions of dollars in the construction of said road within this State.”

Mr. COLLINS. I apprehend that the proposition cannot be entertained by the Convention, at least at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. A wide range has been allowed to the discussion, for the reason that no point of order has been raised, but the question immediately before the committee is the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey), to strike out the words, “the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line,” and insert instead the words, “to some railroad to be built.”

Mr. HOVEY. By the consent of the committee, I will modify my amendment by inserting the word “any” in place of “some.”

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will make the alteration.

Mr. COLLINS. Much has been said against this policy of State aid. Well, I am, for one, opposed, as a matter of principle, to granting State aid to any institutions, unless there be and can be shown upon their face very extraordinary reasons for granting such aid. But this great enterprise of uniting by railroad communication the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific, this great inter-oceanic railroad across the continent, occurs to me to be one of the grandest and most sublime movements of this or any age. Those vast monuments which now stand as the especial wonders

COLLINS—DELONG.

[July 9.

of the world, from the pyramids of Egypt down, I think, will sink into insignificance by the side of this great, this stupendous undertaking, which is ultimately to give the commerce of the globe to the people of the United States. Every community, every people, that has ever had the control of the commerce of the Indies, has been enriched by it. It has gradually and surely given to every such nation the broom that swept the ocean. And we can see no reason now, since the opening of this silver land, rich in silver and gold, which are the great commodities clamored for by the East, why we should not obtain and secure the entire control of the commerce of the western islands of the ocean, and of India, and of China. I therefore look upon this Pacific Railroad, and the ultimate effect of its operations, as an enterprise which should challenge the entire confidence, nay, more, the enthusiastic support of every American, and much more of every citizen of Nevada.

As I have already remarked, we ourselves are hemmed in by mountains. We are dependent entirely upon the slow progress of wagons, of ox, mule and bull teams to communicate with the Atlantic, or to connect ourselves with the Pacific. We have heard here, (and I was glad to hear it), that the enormous capital necessary to carry on the business transactions of this State, would be lessened by three-fourths if we only had a railroad across the mountains. That is undoubtedly so, and that proportion of the capital now employed in our business operations would then be unlocked and ready for investment in other departments of material progress and development. Our heavy merchants now have to lay in for the winter, stocks of goods to the amount of a hundred or two hundred thousand dollars each, whereas if we had a railroad communication with California, twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars at most would be sufficient for every practical purpose. That would be an immense reduction upon the investments necessarily made at the present time. Is not that a consideration worthy of our attention, and worthy of the consideration of every individual in this Territory? More than that, I say that a means of rapid communication between Nevada and the Atlantic or the Pacific coast, so far as relates to personal transit, would be an immense advantage. A railroad communication from this Territory to the Atlantic or the Pacific, would lessen the expenses of this Territory, and thereby increase our facilities for doing business, to the amount of many millions of dollars a year, independent of the millions upon millions that would be saved in consequence of the reduction in freights. Now we are dependent upon California for all our machinery. Notwithstanding the very extraordinary tariff of from three to ten cents per pound, we have been unable to establish foundries here to any considerable extent, and therefore, practically, we are dependent entirely upon California.

We are dependent upon that State also for our breadstuffs, for our clothing, and to a certain extent, even for our fuel for carrying on our mining operations. How very important it is, then, that we should adopt measures by which we can place ourselves in direct communication with the Golden State.

I was remarking that this premium which we propose to offer, would operate to stimulate this railroad company. I do not absolutely know, but I am strongly impressed with the conviction, (although I would not like to express a positive opinion at present,) that the amendment suggested by my colleague from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) which would forbid the giving of any portion of this money to the company until the entire three millions shall be expended in our own Territory, would operate rather as a check upon the construction of this railroad, than as a stimulus. I think, if we give three millions of dollars when they shall have completed the road, and stocked it with rolling-stock to the State line, it will be as much as can be expected from us, and, perhaps, no more than we ought to do. I would like to have it distinctly understood, however, that these three millions of ours shall not be applied to furnishing the road with rolling-stock. When that amendment shall be made, and another amendment, which I hope will be presented—not that it is of any particular value, but simply to prevent the enemies of the State Government from harping upon it before the people—then I hope this section will pass. I am impressed with the conviction, that however important this enterprise is to our very existence—to our very life as a community—there will be, nevertheless, men passing throughout the State during the canvass, who will endeavor to impress upon the people the idea that this provision is mandatory upon the Legislature—that it requires them to loan three millions of dollars—and that therefore the people must pay the interest on that State loan, from and after the time when their State organization enters upon its existence.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that that argument was used last fall.

Mr. COLLINS. I am aware of it. Now, sir, I would not use the word "State," where it is first used in the proviso, but rather the word "Legislature," for that word "State," would imply the idea that the State is now organized, and it will be contended that, by virtue of the Constitution, the Legislature is compelled to take this action. I would say, rather, that the Legislature may, if the interests of the State shall require it, issue these bonds. That would prevent all the pettifogging about the Legislature being peremptorily required to do it. Why, I have no doubt that men will be found on the stump advocating the idea that in law, the words "the State may," means, "the State shall."

Mr. DELONG. That amendment has been

Saturday.]

COLLINS—DELONG—DUNNE—EARL.

[July 9.]

made already. I think it was made yesterday.

Mr. COLLINS. I must have been a Rip Van Winkle, then, for I certainly was not aware of it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think no such amendment was made yesterday.

Mr. DELONG. Possibly I am in error about it.

Mr. COLLINS. I do hope that we shall make everything in this Constitution so clear and plain, that there can be no opposition to it on the ground of ambiguity, and, at the same time, that we shall make it as brief as is consistent with its perfection and its perspicuity. I feel that the time has arrived when we need a State Government; but I should be very sorry to see this whole clause, permitting the State to loan her credit in aid of a railroad, stricken out; or, on the other hand, to see any general clause adopted, permitting the State to loan her credit, without restriction, to any very great extent. I do think it important, so far as that is concerned, that the Legislature should be restricted. But in respect to this great movement, this grandest scheme of our age and nation; this measure which the people are clamoring for, and have been clamoring for at the very top of their lungs for the last fifteen years; this measure that has been carried through, by the greatest effort, in the Congress of the United States at Washington, over the opposition of those who are hostile to all improvements tending to the benefit of the free States—I do hope, now that the Federal Government has taken hold in earnest, now that Congress has made liberal donations of land and money, now that the government has shown its liberality by permitting the company to issue its own bonds to take precedence of the bonds of the United States, standing responsible for the payment of their interest—I do hope, I say, that the people of Nevada will also be willing to take hold, and give to this enterprise an earnest support, in cooperation with the Federal Government. I think that our refusal to do so at this time, when it has been brought before us, would tend more to cripple that company, than many millions of dollars would aid it. I think that the operation of such a refusal would be to discourage capitalists, because they know our peculiar location, and they know that no people in the world could enjoy such benefits and privileges, resulting from the success of an enterprise of this kind, as the people of Nevada. They know that Nevada is dependent upon this railroad for all she consumes, and, to a great extent, for the shipment of her mineral wealth. They know that such a road would enable us to transport our richest ores to a region where they might be reduced at comparatively little expense. Knowing all these things, they would feel that if the people of Nevada would not interest themselves—if they would not, under careful regulations, restrictions, and safeguards, first by the action of the people through their Legislature, and next by the sanction of the people, after such legislative action, give aid to such an enterprise, then it must be something in regard to which they should, certainly, be careful, and in which the investment of their money would be a matter of doubtful propriety.

Why should the State aid the Pacific Railroad? Why, sir, this enterprise has been before the people of these United States for fifteen years. Thousands, if not millions of people, have manifested their interest in it; and yet, for fifteen years, it has been languishing and never has been started, and, probably, would not have been, for at least fifteen years to come, but for the aid of the General Government, which has been so liberally bestowed. It is an enterprise too great and mighty to be left entirely to individuals. Now, to return one moment, and I do not mean to repeat myself—

Mr. DUNNE [interrupting]. I am very sorry to rise to a point of order on this question, but I think the discussion had on this subject, has been of that character which it should only take when the question comes before the people, or before the Legislature. It has been a discussion of the propriety of making this loan, and that is a question with which we here have nothing to do. Now, as the gentleman has occupied twice the time allowed by the rules, as we propose to adjourn at twelve o'clock, and hold no further session until Monday morning, and as it is very desirable to have the article passed to its engrossment, so that we may not be kept waiting for it—I will not make any point of order, but would call the gentleman's attention to the necessity of coming to a vote immediately.

Mr. EARL. I hope the discussion will take as wide a range now as each and every member desires, because of its importance, and because the discussion has already taken a very wide range.

Mr. COLLINS. I should be very sorry to bore this Convention, but I do look upon this as one of the most important questions that can come before us, and I do hope, therefore, that the discussion will be allowed to take a wide range, and that every member will be allowed to express himself freely and fully upon it, so that we may pass this provision, if we do pass it, with the distinct and perfect understanding of each and every member of this Convention.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the very ingenious opposition which has been made to this measure by my learned friend and colleague (Mr. DeLong). He has raised the bugbear of the rates of interest, as an argument in opposition to our giving aid to the railroad. Now, if I were to present to this body one reason which I believe to be stronger than another, why the rates of interest should be cut down, and why it would be cut down, it would be the introduction of a railroad into the State of Nevada, connecting us with the outside world. Because that would tend to develop our resources more than anything else that could possibly be devised. Just in proportion as our resources are developed, and our products—our rich ores and our bullion—find their markets, in the East, in the West, and in Europe, just in that proportion will the attention of capitalists be challenged to the region of country which produces such rich products. The cupidity and avarice of capitalists will be stimulated, and, consequently, capital will rush to this country for investment, and the rat-tat tat of mills will be heard by thousands, where they are heard now only by scores. All these causes would operate in our favor; and before we were aware of it, our State would be flooded with money, and it would be cheap in proportion to the extent of its abundance among us. I agree with my colleague, that the system which exacts such a heavy per centage of interest, is a great drawback to any country; but I believe that a railroad would be able to attract the attention of capitalists hither, to such an extent as to lessen the rate of interest, and a railroad, therefore, is one of the best, readiest, and most effective means of lessening it.

COLLINS—FITCH—NOURSE.

[July 9.

Now, there is another point to which I desire to refer, and that is, the hard times. My friend and colleague was very earnest upon that point. I see he is suffering, to some extent, under a fit of the blues, and I want to give the Convention a little of the rationale of it. We have lawyers in our county so numerous, that it is said two of them are obliged to ride on one and the same mule. [Laughter]. They have a calendar in the court there, which has nearly four hundred cases upon it, but by reason of the absence of our judges, at the time specified by law for the session of the courts, those cases cannot be tried, and these gentlemen, being thus virtually tied up, are exceedingly poor. Under these circumstances, they feel that the whole community, which is really alive with activity and business, is sympathising with them. They think that the whole community is suffering from poverty and embarrassment, simply because they are poor.

Now, my colleague talks to us as though he expected these three millions of dollars would be called from the State at once; but, on the contrary, the section before us contemplates that it will not be called for until the State line is reached by the railroad; and my colleague need have no fears that the road will be extended to that line for several years to come. But he is now disposed to protract that time three or four years longer, by providing that the three millions of dollars proposed to be loaned by the State, shall not be expended on the line of this great railroad, which is to unite the two oceans, until it shall have reached our own Territory. Now, I verily believe—and I am sorry to be forced to believe it—from my experience in railroad matters, that it will take much longer to complete this road across the mountains, than gentlemen may suppose. I have had a good deal of experience in railroad matters, having always taken great interest in them, and contributed as liberally to aid them as I was able to afford, and never yet have I been forced to regret the efforts I have made in their behalf. But my experience teaches me to anticipate that this Sierra Nevada range of mountains, which the Pacific Railroad must cross, will prove to be an obstacle requiring a longer time to surmount than we have, at the present time, the least conception. I fear it will take as many as ten years, and I should not be at all astonished if it required fifteen, although it may, possibly, be accomplished in six or seven years. But, I ask, are we to be deterred from giving this privilege to the people of Nevada of aiding that road, whenever it shall have surmounted that obstacle, simply because in Storey County our attorneys happen, at this particular time, to be tied up, and likely to be so until next November? The probability is, that before the railroad shall be completed across those mountains, we shall be in a condition of great prosperity. A revolution may transpire, and prosperity may return, in this fast age, before we are called upon to issue those bonds, or before we are ever called upon by the Legislature to decide at the polls, whether or not we shall grant this aid.

And again, suppose the times should be hard, and suppose that the Legislature should fail to pass a bill to provide for granting aid to this railroad if the people shall desire to do so. The gentleman tells us that the road will be built just as soon without this aid as with it; and suppose the Legislature shall come to the conclusion that the people are really unable to lend this three millions of dollars. Why, in that event, the Legislature would doubtless refuse to pass the bill, or even if they did pass it, it is still left for the people to decide, and the people may reject it. The only question here is, shall we deny to the people the privilege of granting this aid, whether they are able to grant it or not. For one, I say I want to give them that privilege; and I say we do injustice to the people of the State, and injustice to the enterprise, by refusing our influence, our moral influence, at least, in support of this great enterprise. I am grateful to the Convention for the audience it has given me, and I will occupy no more time on this important subject.

Mr. FITCH. I desire only to say this: The argument of my colleague, (Mr. DeLong), if it proves anything, proves too much. He says, very correctly, that capitalists will not invest in railroad enterprises, because they can receive larger rates of interest in other investments. Now, if that be the case, then clearly the only way to build the road at all is by public aid.

Mr. NOURSE. I have but a word to say

Saturday.]

HOVEY—EARL.

[July 9.]

upon the amendment. When the question comes up upon my amendment, striking out the clause, I shall ask for the closing argument, as is customary. I believe, in such cases; but just now, I merely wish to call attention to one clause in the proposed amendment, and that is the phrase—"any railroad." It provides that the Legislature may issue bonds, etc., to "any railroad." I suppose that cannot be construed otherwise than as applying to a dozen railroads, if so many should be built. I desire to call especial attention to that. When the word "some" was used, it confined the appropriation to the one railroad; but if you substitute the word "any," then, if one railroad gets it, it may be demanded by any and all other railroads.

Mr. HOVEY. I will insert in the amendment the word "one," so that it will read, "any one railroad."

Mr. EARL. This discussion has taken a very wide range, but I should regret, as I remarked a short time ago, to see it dropped where it is. I think many of us do not understand the amendments offered, and many gentlemen are in doubt as to what action they ought to take in that matter. There have been able and ingenious speeches made on the subject on both sides. Now, so far as I understand the amendment, it anticipates the expenditure of capital in crossing the Sierra Nevada mountains, if necessity shall require it, and I fully concur in that amendment. I would not be so selfish as to desire to check the progress of the railroad at any particular point, merely because some portion of our money might be expended beyond our State lines. If my own particular views could have been consulted, I would have said that we should give the railroad company three millions whenever the road shall reach a certain point, and when it reaches the State line, near Crystal Peak, three millions more. That is a basis which we might with propriety act upon, and not cut ourselves off from doing anything to aid in securing a railroad communication. The working of our mines would be advanced by securing this railroad communication, to an extent almost beyond imagination, and it is impossible to estimate the benefit which would result to the laboring classes from the development of the poorer class of mines. As to the State investing in stock, that question with me is not a matter of argument. So far as such investments go, I say, show me a case where such investments have ever proved to be good investments. I have yet to learn of such an instance; although I have observed the fluctuations of stocks for a long period of time, I have yet to see where the first investment of this kind in a railroad enterprise has proved to be a good investment. But that is not the point. These enterprises are a great help to a certain class of people, to wit, the laboring class, and they are of immense importance in the development of a country. I remember that, in Indiana, before there were any internal improvements, the farmers were selling their corn at six, eight, and ten cents per bushel. Then a canal was constructed and the price rose to two bits per bushel; and then the railroad came along, and it rose at once to fifty and seventy-five cents a bushel. That was the work of the railroad in that State, although the investments in the railroad may not have proved the best in the world.

Now it is said, I know, that "a burnt child dreads the fire," and it may be that in Minnesota the working of their system of internal improvements was bad; but, nevertheless, it does not follow that such a system will be bad here. We do not propose to offer aid to any particular road, but we propose to offer a premium to the road that shall be first built, so as to give us communication with navigable waters. They are to build the road first, and then they will get the premium.

The beneficial results arising from the policy of giving premiums have already been referred to, and illustrated by the fact that it has stimulated the production of certain articles in California. The correctness of that illustration I can verify from a circumstance within my own knowledge. In Tehama County, where I resided formerly, no tobacco was raised, but a large amount of it has been grown there recently, in consequence of the premium offered by the State of California. And the same beneficial results have been obtained in California by this policy in regard to manufactures. That is the true way to develop the resources of a country. The General Government has taken hold of this enterprise in that spirit, and made liberal donations, and now are we to stand looking on like stupid "old fogies," afraid of sacrificing a single dollar for fear we shall never get a return? That is not the proper way to do business. I have seen men start out in business in a small way, and never increase their business for fear of a failure. They would go plodding on, doing a small and safe business, trusting that by and by, in some way they might rise. Perhaps they might do so if they lived long enough, and perhaps, on the contrary, they might die of old age before they would achieve that success, which more enterprising men are daily winning.

Now, if we invest in this enterprise six millions of dollars, or three millions, as the section stands now, would we ever get any adequate return? That is the question. Let us look at the practical working of this matter, in a business point of view. Suppose our investment builds a single mile of the road, will it not hasten the completion of the entire road that much? If we get the road one year sooner, in consequence of our investment, then, during that year, we get our supplies, our wood, and our timber for the mines, at greatly reduced cost, and we are enabled to work a class of rock which we cannot now work at all. We shall get our freights, and everything else so much cheaper, that the difference will be more than sufficient to pay the interest on our investment. Gentlemen say that the interest amounts to too much for the State to pay, and they ask, how can we raise this amount of $210,000 a year? Why, sir, the little city of Virginia incurs expenses every year, amounting to $200,000, and are we to stand here and say that this Territory, or this State, as we hope it is shortly to become, cannot raise $210,000 a year? We have to pay the expenses of not only Virginia City, but of Storey County also, which is another very considerable item. Then we have the expenses of the city of Gold Hill, for that is a municipal corporation, too, and that constitutes still another considerable burden which has to be borne by the inhabitants of Storey County. Altogether, Storey County pays for county and municipal governments about $600,000 annually. And yet they tell us that the whole State of Nevada cannot pay this interest, amounting to only $210,000 annually. It seems to me that such an assertion is perfectly absurd, or, at least, that gentlemen who make it, must have lost sight of the real wealth of our Territory. They propose that we shall move along slowly, something like the old style of doing business. I say, we have too much of life and energy for that.

EARL—HOVEY—LOCKWOOD.

Now, sir, in relation to sustaining a State Government here, look at the advantages which would be derived in a business point of view. It must be obvious to every business man that it will clear away the clouds that now seem to overhang our prosperity. Men will see that the amount expended by the State Government will be returned ten-fold in the course of trade. And, sir, it is equally plain, to my mind, that the money expended in aid of this railroad, will be the best investment the State can make. It will give a great impetus to our mercantile business; and, if it does somewhat increase the taxes to be paid for the support of our Government, the increase of trade will be more than sufficient to compensate for that.

There is no question but that this railroad is a paramount necessity for us, and now is the time to build it. I have thought, for months past, that if we are to become a State, we ought to take hold, shoulder to shoulder, and push forward this great enterprise. I think we should offer a premium for building the road a given distance, and then another premium when it reaches another certain distance, and then, in three years time, it seems to me—I may be wrong as to the time, but I hope not—the railroad may be finished down to the foot of the mountains on this side, if not even to the city of Virginia. I estimate that in one year the county of Storey pays to Washoe County alone, enough to build a railroad from Virginia to Washoe City. I have no hesitation in saying, that the amount we pay annually, in freights, for timber and wood brought to the cities of Virginia and Gold Hill—for the entire amount of wood and timber that we use must come from the Sierras after another year—would be sufficient to build a railroad over that route. I have not the slightest doubt of it. Then the water-power with which we should be connected, would be another very great item in the working of our mines. Again, look at Lander and Humboldt counties, where there are thousands of mines which cannot be opened, whose vast resources must remain undeveloped, merely for the want of transportation. In view of all these advantages to be derived from the railroad, ought we, for fear of a little State debt—for fear of the expenditure of this comparatively trifling sum of money—to withhold our assistance from this important work? It would be much better to take hold of it now, and put it through at once, like sensible, enterprising, energetic business men.

Mr. HOVEY. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) that my amendment may be more clearly understood to refer to but one railroad, I will modify it, so as to read, "to some one railroad," instead of "to any railroad."

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will make the change.

Mr. HOVEY. The object of this amendment is, to give to the people of the State a chance to say whether they will give a half a million, or three millions, or any other sum under three millions, towards the building of that tunnel, the greater part of which, I understand, lies in California.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do not wish to occupy more than three minutes, but I think the discussion thus far has been very unfair to the opponents of this measure. Gentlemen on the other side have undertaken to argue that we are opposed to the Pacific Railroad. Why, sir, in the beginning, I distinctly disclaimed any hostility to the measure, and I think, if I had time, I could give cogent reasons which have not been adduced in favor of that enterprise. Since I came to California, it has been the dream of my ambition to do something, and to do everything in my power for the promotion of this one great enterprise. The Pacific Railroad will make San Francisco, on the Pacific coast, what New York is on the Atlantic. I believe it will bring the wealth of the world teeming along that great national highway. It will secure to us such a commerce as that which has built up New York—such a commerce as that which, in ancient times, built up Thebes, and Carthage, and those other glorious old cities, whose memory and fame live in the traditions and records of the past. But while I fully believe this, I must be allowed to say that I do not believe in the mode in which it is now attempted to prosecute this enterprise. I lay down this proposition, that I do not believe it will facilitate the construction of this road one iota to make this loan. I do not regard this question as being one of such great importance as some gentlemen seem to look upon it, because I trust the people; but I do not believe in cumbering our Constitution with anything which is to be a nullity. I am in favor, first, last, and all the time, of doing anything that we consistently can do to favor the prosecution of this great national work; but I think that when a gentleman rises here, as one gentleman did on a previous occasion, and tells us that two or three thousand people in Virginia City are unable to pay the paltry sum of two dollars a year as a poll-tax, for the sake of consistency, he should not rise the next day and tell us they are able to bear the burthen of still higher taxation. I hope the gentleman from Storey will remember his poverty-stricken constituency in his advocacy of this measure. I hope the Reporter will put down my remarks on this subject, not that I am at all anxious to get into print, but because I want it put plainly on the record that I am in favor of the Pacific Railroad, and that in opposing this measure I am not seeking to defeat or hinder that enterprise.

Mr. EARL. I suggest that it is important to put the gentleman down as being in favor of the Pacific Railroad, because from his course here his constituents would certainly class him among those who are against it.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I should not have said a word further upon this subject, but for the fact that almost every gentleman who has risen here in advocacy of this proviso, has taken the position that we who have opposed it are against the Pacific Railroad—at least that is the plain inference from reading their speeches, as published by the reporters.

Mr. FITCH. I think the gentleman is in favor of the Pacific Railroad, something in the same manner as the Democrats are in favor of the Union, at the same time that they are opposed to all measures for its preservation.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we shall come to a vote on this proposition. I do not desire to launch out into a speech to show the great benefit of this Pacific Railroad; how it would enable the Government to move armies readily, and so preserve the peace of the republic on the Pacific shores, and all that. Nobody disputes the fact that the road would be of immense advantage, not only to us, but to the entire nation, and therefore I do not propose any thing of that kind. I believe it ought to be the primary object of every politician, and of every man who desires to promote the welfare and the success of our Government, to aid, as much as he can, in the construction of that work. I believe that the national aid ought to be extended to it, but I do not believe in inserting a clause in this Constitution to the effect that the Legislature are going to leave it to the people of Nevada to decide whether they shall contribute three millions of dollars towards it or not. They cannot give it if they would. But I will not further prolong my remarks, because I presume that I am better qualified for shoving the jack-plane, than for making speeches before such a body as this Convention.

Mr. HOVEY. In order that the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) may have the opportunity which he has asked, to close the debate on this proviso, on Monday, I now move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope we shall first vote on this amendment.

The question was taken on the motion to rise and report progress, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VIII, had made some further progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. FITCH. I would inquire if it is understood that the resolution to adjourn over till Monday was passed.

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir. It was resolved that when the Convention adjourns at twelve o'clock, it adjourn to meet on Monday, at eleven o'clock.

Mr. FITCH. Then I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at five minutes before twelve o'clock, the Convention adjourned.

SEVENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 11, 1864.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and the following members responded to their names:—

Messrs. Brady, Brosnan, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Folsom, Frizell, Gibson, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and the President—19.

Mr. GIBSON. As there is no quorum in attendance, I move that we take a recess until one o'clock, P. M. I name that hour, because Langton's stage, which will bring most of the members from Virginia, will not arrive until about that time.

Mr. DUNNE. I move a call of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not see the use of that.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have been requested to ask leave of absence for Mr. Belden. He will be here in the stage at noon.

Mr. DeLONG. This clock is a little faster than my time, however it may be with others.

Mr. BRADY. I ask leave of absence for Mr. Earl.

Mr. DUNNE. I object to granting leave of absence to any one. We have no quorum, and we cannot do it.

Monday,]

FITCH—PROCTOR—DUNNE—COLLINS.

[July 11.

The question was taken on the motion for a call of the House, and it was agreed to.

Mr. FITCH made his appearance at the bar, presented his excuse for being absent, and was excused.

Mr. PROCTOR. As there is now a quorum, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BRADY, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. Hudson.

On motion of Mr. MURDOCK, leave of absence for the day was granted to Mr. Belden.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, leave of absence for one day was granted to Mr. Banks.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. Nims.

Messrs. Banks, Collins, Chapin, Hovey, Hudson, Nourse, and Sturtevant appeared and took their seats.

The journal of Saturday was read and approved.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. DUNNE. Pursuant to notice, I move that the resolution fixing the hours of sessions of this body be amended, so as to read as follows:—

Resolved, That this Convention shall, until otherwise ordered, meet at nine o'clock, A. M., (Sundays excepted,) and continue in session until noon, at which time a recess shall be taken. It shall meet again at two o'clock, and hold its session until five o'clock, P. M., at which time a recess shall be taken until seven o'clock, P. M., of the same day. This amendment shall be in force on and after Tuesday, the twelfth instant.

There are two advantages to be gained by adopting this resolution as our standing rule. One is, that we shall have an evening session, and gain an additional hour at the noon recess; the other is, that as it does not go into force until to-morrow night, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee is allowed one more chance of getting that committee together, and I hope he will succeed to-night in doing so.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

THE ORDINANCE.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of business on the general file.

The Ordinance in relation to Slavery, Religious Toleration and the Public Lands, was read a third time, as follows:—

In obedience to the requirements of an act of Congress of the United States, approved March 21st, A. D. 1864, to enable the people of Nevada to form a Constitution and State Government, this Convention, elected and convened in obedience to said Enabling Act, do ordain as follows; which ordinance shall be irrevocable, without the consent of the United States, and the people of the State of Nevada:—

FIRST. That there shall be in the said State of Nevada neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment for crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

SECOND. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

THIRD. That the people inhabiting said Territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within said Territory, and that the same shall be, and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States; and that the lands belonging to the citizens of the United States residing without the said State, shall never be taxed higher than the land belonging to residents thereof; and that no taxes shall be imposed by said State on lands or property therein belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States.

Mr. COLLINS. I observe that there is a slight discrepancy between the Ordinance as read by the Clerk, and the Enabling Act. The Ordinance says, there shall be in the said State of Nevada, "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude otherwise than for the punishment for crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." I regarded it merely as a clerical error, and therefore had changed the word "for" to the word "in," so as to read, "otherwise than in the punishment for crimes," which is in accordance with the language of the Enabling Act. As this is to be the official copy, I think we had better make it conform exactly to the words of the Enabling Act, and for that reason, and that there may be no informality about it, I move that the word "for" be stricken out, and the word "in," substituted, so that the clause will read:—

"That there shall be in the said State of Nevada neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment for crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

By unanimous consent, the Secretary was directed to make the alteration.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the Ordinance, and the vote resulted—yeas, 28; nays, none—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Wetherill, and Mr. President—28.

Nays—none.

So the Ordinance was passed.

THE PREAMBLE.

The preamble to the Constitution was taken up and read a third time, as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the State of Nevada, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, insure domestic tranquillity, and form a more perfect Government, do establish this Constitution.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the preamble, and the vote resulted—yeas, 28; nays, none—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Wetherill, and Mr. President—28.

Nays—none.

So the Preamble was passed.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

Article I, entitled Declaration of Rights, was read a third time, as follows:—

ARTICLE I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

SEC. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government, in the exercise of all its constitutional powers as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary, and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert, or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full power on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whensoever any portion of the States, or people thereof, attempt to secede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.

SEC. 3. The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law; and, in civil cases, if three-fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand and have the same force and effect as a verdict by the whole jury; provided, the Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision.

SEC. 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.

SEC. 5. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension.

SEC. 6. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor shall cruel nor unusual punishment be inflicted, nor shall witnesses be unreasonably detained.

SEC. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

SEC. 8. No person shall be held to answer for capital or otherwise infamous crime, (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of the militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny, under the regulation of the Legislature,) except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and in any trial, in any Court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel, as in civil actions. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation having been first made or secured, except in cases of war, riot, fire, or great public peril, in which case compensation shall be afterwards made.

SEC. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions and civil actions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted or exonerated.

SEC. 10. The people shall have the right freely to assemble together to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the Legislature for redress of grievances.

SEC. 11. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be maintained by this State in time of peace, and in time of war no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.

SEC. 12. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, except in the manner to be prescribed by law.

SEC. 13. Representation shall be apportioned according to population.

SEC. 14. The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale for payment of any debts or liabilities hereafter contracted; and there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.

SEC. 15. No bill of attainder, ex-post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

SEC. 16. Foreigners who are or may hereafter become bona fide residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights, in respect to the possession, enjoyment and inheritance of property, as native-born citizens.

SEC. 17. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crimes, shall ever be tolerated in this State.

SEC. 18. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons and things to be seized.

SEC. 19. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies, or giving them aid and comfort.

SEC. 20. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.

EVIDENCE OF TREASON.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to recommit that article to a select committee of three, with special instructions to amend Section 19, by adding thereto these words:—"No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court." So that the section will read as follows:—

SEC. 19. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies or giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

Before the question is taken on that amendment, I desire to call attention of members to the necessity of its adoption, in order that we may be in harmony with the action which the Convention has already taken, in respect to other portions of this Constitution. So far, the Convention, in its amendments to the Constitution adopted by the preceding Convention, has shown a disposition to exercise a liberal spirit towards persons who may be charged with treason. This amendment proposes to give to such persons the further protection of requiring two witnesses to prove the crime of treason. That crime is one of the gravest known to the law. I think, without attempting to make any argument or speech upon it—for I do not wish to occupy the time—that the propriety of the amendment will suggest itself to every member, and it certainly will be in harmony with the previous action of this Convention.

Mr. FITCH. Without entering into any lengthy speech, I desire to say only, that I hope this amendment will not prevail. There seems to me to be no reason for requiring two witnesses to convict of this crime, or for extending any special privilege to a person who may be accused of treason, when but one witness is required to convict a person accused of murder.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to ask a question. Can a grand jury find a bill, without examining one witness?

Mr. FITCH. They can find a bill upon any evidence which will make out a prima facie case.

Mr. PARKER. I think they cannot, according to the laws of this Territory.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to give one reason why I think this amendment ought to prevail, and that is, that persons are not apt to be charged with, or tried for treason, except in times of war, or of peril to the commonwealth; and in such a time, when the public mind is greatly excited, when conflicting rumors and alarms are startling the peace of community, it is but a proper measure of precaution to require at least two witnesses to convict a man of this infamous crime. A man charged with the crime of treason—a crime most odious in its character, and most revolting to the human mind—is liable, even before the examination, to labor under the condemnation of the entire community. The cry goes forth against him, and the people demand his blood. It is almost equivalent to a conviction to charge a man with the crime at such a time. It is like charging one with incendiarism when a city is in flames, and when an excited populace are ready to throw him who may be so charged, into the burning buildings. So, in cases of treason, or trials for treason: greater injuries, more flagrant wrongs, are liable to be perpetrated upon a man charged with that crime, than upon one charged with any other crime known in the world. It is for this reason, that the enlightened men of every country, and of every age, have invariably required that two witnesses, at least, to the same overt act, should be necessary to convict a man of that charge. That has been the requirement, from the days of King John down to the present time. It is contained in every written Constitution, and in every statutory law relating to the crime of treason. The wisdom of the fathers who framed the Constitution of the United States, implanted that provision therein, and the wisdom of those who framed the Constitutions of the several States of the Union, has been manifested in the adoption of the same provision. And why, then, should we, in entering upon our political existence as a State, in this time of national peril, when there is revolution in progress, when every man's soul is in arms, when party feeling runs high, when we have now actual rebellion in our midst, when we have men amongst us known to be in opposition to the Government, and all who sympathise with the Government—why, I ask, should we at such a time, in drafting our fundamental law, omit that wise provision, that humane and judicious safeguard? I say if we omit it, we are treading the path of uncertainty, at a wrong, a dangerous period. At any time, it would be an innovation against old-time usage and custom, much to be dreaded, and it is much more so at the present time. I earnestly hope that the Convention will treat this as a solemn and serious matter, as it certainly is. We are now making a fundamental law for the future—a law which is to live and be in force for generations after we are sleeping in our graves. Let us, therefore, enact such a law that when the terrible charge of treason is made—and against whom it may be made, we cannot foresee—that whenever that charge shall be made against any citizen, conviction shall only follow upon the testimony of two competent witnesses. Such has been the universal law of every civilized nation on the face of the globe; and I hope, therefore, that this Convention will adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not lay much stress upon the necessity of making this section correspond with the Constitution of the United States; for that provides only for the punishment of treason against the United States. But in the argument of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong), I recognize precisely the same reasons which I tried to set forth, and which actuated me in voting for the same clause when this section was under consideration in Committee of the Whole. I am glad to find, therefore, that the sober second thought has brought other gentlemen to the same conclusion. It is, as the gentleman from Storey says, a crime which is only charged against a man in times of great political excitement. It is altogether a political crime, and the operation of this section, as adopted in Committee of the Whole, would be to place it in the power of any one man to ruin his political opponent by convicting him of this infamous crime of treason.

Mr. DELONG. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask him what he means by "sober second thought?" [Merriment.] I have been in favor of this provision, now offered, all along, and have all along insisted, when the matter was previously under consideration, that there ought to be two witnesses to convict a person of treason, although I deemed it sufficient to have one witness to one overt act, and another to another. I referred to the Constitution of California, which requires two witnesses to the same overt act, and offered an amendment adopting nearly the same language; but inasmuch as I could not persuade the Convention to agree with me, I took what I regarded as the next best course. I certainly am in favor, and have advocated the requiring of two witnesses in order to convict of treason.

Mr. NOURSE. I understood the gentleman from Storey to oppose this clause, and to contend that there should be but one witness to one overt act, and another to another. I am only sorry that the gentleman's "sober second thought" is not as good, or has not been as effectual as I had supposed it was. I therefore withdraw the compliment which I had intended to pay him. [Laughter.]

The question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Dunne's motion to recommit, and it was agreed to—yeas, 19; nays, 8—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Brady, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Frizzell, Folsom, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, McClinton, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, and Mr. President—19.

Nays—Messrs. Brosnan, Chapin, Fitch, Gibson, Lockwood, Mason, Murdock, and Wetherill—8.

During the voting—

Mr. DELONG. I would suggest to the gentleman from Humboldt, and also to the Convention, that if this motion to recommit the article to a special committee is carried, it will have to come up again on another day, and I think we can save a great deal of time by suspending the rules and adopting the amendment now.

Mr. FITCH. Let us see first what is the sense of the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. Then it is recommitted, and no longer within our power to control it.

The PRESIDENT. No motion is in order during the calling of the roll.

Mr. DELONG. I think a motion might be made in order, before the vote is announced, and before the article is thereby placed out of our power. I do not wish to press the matter, however; I only desired to save time.

Mr. FITCH. I think we had better let it take the usual course. The article can be reported back in ten minutes.

The result of the vote having been announced,

The PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. Dunne, DeLong, and Nourse as the special committee, to which the article was recommitted.

THE GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to make a similar motion in relation to Section 8. I move that Section 8 of Article I, be referred to a select committee of five, with instructions to make the following amendment:

Strike out the words, "no person shall be held to answer for capital or other infamous crimes," and insert in lieu thereof, the following words:—

"All criminal offenses shall be tried upon a complaint in writing, made by the prosecuting attorneys of the respective counties, without the intervention of a grand jury."

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to hear the section as it is now, and also as it would stand with that amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I think the amendment would come in place better after the first two lines.

The PRESIDENT. It seems to involve the idea of abolishing the grand jury system altogether, and if that be the case, I think it will be necessary to strike out some other language in the section.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes, sir; I will include in the motion to strike out, the words, "except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury."

Mr. NOURSE. I suppose the intention of the amendment is to do away with the necessity of having a grand jury. Now, Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that such an amendment may not be an improvement upon our jury system. The grand jury system has some objectionable features undoubtedly, together with, perhaps, some good ones. But I suggest, for the consideration of the Convention, that there is a provision of the Constitution of the United States which is held to apply, not merely to proceedings of the United States Courts, but to all law proceedings in other Courts, to all cases where a jury trial may be had. It is held to be of universal application. Now, can we run counter to that provision of the United States Constitution? This section, as proposed to be amended, says, in effect, that a person may be presented and tried, without the intervention of a grand jury, by presentment or indictment. But Article V of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, says:—

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval service, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

Now the point I wish to suggest for the careful consideration of the Convention is, does not this proposed amendment clearly conflict with the Constitution of the United States? I have no feeling about the matter, one way or the other, and as a matter of original preference, I think I should favor the gentleman's proposition. But it seems to me that we are barred altogether from taking any such action by the Constitution of the United States, which says, in this unmistakable language, that no person shall be held to answer for crimes which are capital or infamous without the intervention of a grand jury. If it could be so arranged that persons could be held for crimes other than those which are capital, or otherwise infamous, without the interposition of a grand jury, it might be that it would do.

Monday.]

PROCTOR—JOHNSON—BROSNAN—HOVEY—NOURSE.

[July 11.]

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not understand that provision of the United States Constitution as applying to cases where indictments are brought under State laws. It refers simply to violations of the laws of the United States, and it seems to me that, so far as regulating the proceedings in regard to offenses against the State is concerned, we have a perfect right to exercise full control, without any conflict at all with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

[Mr. FRERIC in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Whilst I agree with the legal proposition of the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor), at the same time I dissent from his views as to the propriety of making the proposed change. This matter was before the former Convention, and was there the subject of a good deal of discussion in Committee of the Whole. Now, Mr. President, my judgment is, that whilst that Convention made many innovations beneficial in their character upon the jury system which prevails elsewhere, and whilst we have, with proper circumspection, been following in the same path, this particular feature is one of too much consequence and importance to justify us in venturing to make any change. I concede that a system authorizing the exercise of inquisitorial powers, by grand juries, is one fraught with evil; but at the same time, I think that the adoption of the proposed change would also be productive of evil results. It would leave it in the power of the District Attorney of any county to prosecute whomsoever he might think proper, or not to prosecute, at his option. It would be abolishing one system, admitted to be fraught with evils, but only to seek refuge in another system, abounding in yet greater evils. The difference resolves itself into this—that whilst under the one system you have a grand jury of say seventeen men, and the concurrence of at least twelve of them—good and lawful citizens—is required to find a bill of indictment; under the other, one man alone is sufficient to institute a prosecution against any person. Under the grand jury system, it requires the concurrence of at least twelve good citizens to find a bill of indictment, or to present a person for any offense, while under this newly proposed system, instead of requiring the concurrence of twelve men, one man who may happen to be in the position or office of Prosecuting Attorney, has it in his power to find what is, in effect, a bill of indictment, or to make a presentment.

Now, sir, I have personally known of instances where grand juries have been the instruments of inflicting irreparable injury upon individuals, by means of the power with which they are invested, in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings in courts of justice; but I can conceive of cases where much greater injustice and wrong might be perpetrated through the instrumentality of a single individual, who, in the capacity of Prosecuting Attorney, should have power to pass upon the rights of individuals, or upon whatever questions might arise in that connection, without the necessity of securing the concurrence or the united action of twelve good and true men, or of any other number of men. I hope, therefore, that the sense of the Convention will be to retain the provision as it now is.

I believe the experiment proposed by this amendment has already been tried in one State at least, if not in others. I think the Constitution of Indiana contains a provision of this kind. It has been stated, if I am not mistaken, that the experiment is one which has never been tried; but I believe that in the Constitution of that State there is no provision in respect to a grand jury such as is found in the Constitution which we have adopted as our basis, and, therefore, it is left open to legislation, in that State, to provide for a grand jury system or not. I do not doubt but that this Convention has the power, if it is deemed proper or necessary, to abolish the grand jury system; but I think I can see that the operation of the system proposed to be substituted, might produce results which would cause many, if not all of us to regret, or to have occasion to regret, that we had clothed any one public functionary with this extraordinary power, without proper check or restriction. I cannot conceive how it would be possible for the Legislature, in the passage of laws under this provision, as the gentleman from Nye has proposed to amend it, to throw such safeguards and restrictions about it as would prevent the possibility, or even the probability of an undue and improper exercise of this power. Therefore, I hope the section will be left as we find it. There have been times when, without a due examination or consideration of this question, I was prepared to think that, possibly, it would not be an unadvisable change. When the former Convention was in session, I was inclined to favor such a change; but after more deliberate reflection upon the subject, and considering it in all its bearings, I have arrived at the conclusion that it would be, to say the least, an innovation of questionable expediency.

Mr. BROSNAN. I shall vote for the motion to recommit the section, but I will not detain the Convention with any extended remarks in regard to it. I should, for myself, prefer, however, if we are going to abolish the grand jury system, to provide in the amendment that the Legislature may restore the old rule, whenever they may deem it proper. I shall, nevertheless, vote for the recomittal, and leave the committee to whom it is referred to provide for that matter in such way as they may think fit.

Mr. HOVEY. There are gentlemen absent now, who I know desire to take a hand in this fight, and therefore I hope the section will be recommitted. I refer to the gentleman from Lauder, (Mr. Warwick,) and the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy).

Mr. NOURSE. In regard to my objection that we are debarred by the Constitution of the TOZER—McCLINTON—JOHNSON.

[July 11.]

United States from attempting this experiment, I would say that the analogy which the gentleman from Nye (Mr. Proctor) seems to think he has discovered, does not exist in the present case. In the matter of treason, the Constitution of the United States provides that treason against the United States shall consist only in adhering to their enemies, or giving them aid and comfort; and the next clause provides that no person shall be convicted of treason, except upon the testimony of two or more witnesses to the same overt act. The connection shows to what it is meant to apply. Now, in Article VII of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, we find the following language:—

“In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.”

Who ever doubted that that applied to jury trials in all the courts? I happen to have had some practical experience in this matter, because in a trial before a Justice in which I was once engaged, the defendant demanded a jury trial, and there was no provision of law for giving it, or rather, there was a provision for a jury of six, while the defendant demanded a jury of twelve. And the verdict against him was set aside by the highest court in the State, simply because of this provision in the Constitution of the United States—because it was held that that applied no less to the process of trials in the State courts than to trials in the United States courts—that it was a right guaranteed to every person, no matter in what court, whether State or National, the subject matter was to be tried. It is construed to be a personal right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to every citizen. Now, what is the distinction, so far as relates to the extent of its application, between that provision and Article V, which says,—

“No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury.”

It says distinctly, that “no person shall be held,” etc.; it does not say “in one of the United States Courts;” it does not intimate that it applies only to crimes against the United States; but it declares, in most broad, sweeping, and general terms, that it is a right which shall be preserved to every individual, whether the trial is to be in the State or in the National courts. I would like to know upon what authority gentlemen so summarily say that the provision applies only to trials in United States courts. Do they say that the Constitution of the United States cannot, or does not, guard personal rights against any infringement, whether by State or National authorities? Do they say that it was intended only to secure and guard the personal privileges of citizens, in such matters, against usurpations by the national courts? If that is what they assert, then I have only to say, that they are advancing an entirely new doctrine.

Mr. TOZER. At the time the section was before the Committee of the Whole, this same amendment was offered and very fully discussed, and the Convention then very decidedly expressed its convictions upon the subject. I hope, therefore, that no more time will be taken up in discussing it a second time, and I trust that the motion to recommit will not prevail.

Mr. McCLINTON. I hope, for two reasons, that this section will not be recommitted. One reason is, that I desire to economize time as much as possible, and the other is, I think that the proposed amendment is radically wrong. I indorse the remarks of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) upon this subject. It is an experiment, which I do not think, in the present state of our society, and the present condition of our affairs generally, we are warranted in trying. I believe it would be placing too much power in the hands of one man, and especially, in a new country like ours, where at best the laws are comparatively badly administered. I, for one, certainly feel that the experiment would not be a safe one. The man whom we might be called upon to invest with this power, must often, of necessity, be one whom we do not know, at the time of his election, to be a proper man to trust. I hope the Convention will not recommit the section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not desire to occupy needlessly the time of the Convention, but I find myself placed, by the remarks of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) in a position which seems to require some explanation, and it is to that only that I propose to address myself at the present time. I occupy substantially the same position in regard to the action of the Convention on this subject that the gentleman from Washoe does. With that frankness which I intend to evince, not only on this, but every other subject which arises here, I had conceded the proposition of the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor,) that the provision of the Constitution of the United States which had been referred to, applies to such offenses as are committed against the laws of the United States. I believe yet that I was correct in that concession. The objection suggested by the gentleman from Washoe arises, possibly, from the difficulty of determining what constitutes a jury. Under the Constitution of the United States, and under the Constitutions of most of the States—probably every State in the Union where the right of trial by jury is provided for, (and I think such is the case in every State of the Union,)—resort must be had for construction to what is understood by the common law right of jury trial. Twelve men are required, or conceded to be, under the common law, a jury, and in the case to which the gentleman from Washoe referred, it would be necessary, under a constitutional provision simply declaring that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, that resort should be had to that common law rule in order to ascertain and determine what number constitutes a jury. There is no doubt in my mind of the correctness of the application of this rule. The person was entitled to a jury trial under the Constitution, and under the common law rule that jury must consist of twelve men; and the defendant could not, under the Constitution of the State, or the laws of the State, be precluded from that constitutional right. But, sir, I know of no decision in which particularly and specifically the matter has arisen, determining the question as to whether or not the Constitution of the United States applies alike to all, or only to offenses cognizable under the laws of the United States. But this I do know—and I refer to it merely to show that other and abler men than I have entertained the same views that I have advanced on this question—that in the Convention of 1851, which framed the present Constitution of the State of Indiana, the same position was assumed in respect to the question, and sustained by jurists, too, of unquestioned ability, who were members of that body. My present recollection is, that it was assumed in that Convention that this provision of the Constitution of the United States applied only to offenses committed against the laws of the United States, and that the Convention therefore was not circumscribed or limited by the provision of the Constitution of the United States; and my present recollection is, further, (and it is confirmed by examining the Bill of Rights as adopted by the Convention of 1851, which framed the present Constitution of the State of Indiana, for you will find in that Bill of Rights no declaration of that character, providing that no person shall be held to answer, unless by presentment or indictment by a grand jury,) that the Convention took the same view of the matter, and provided for carrying into effect laws of that character, in regard to offenses against the State laws.

DELONG—JOHNSON—DUNNE.

[July 11.

Mr. DELONG [interrupting]. I desire to suggest that it cannot be in order to entertain this motion to recommit at this time, for the reason that a motion has already been made and carried to recommit the article, with instructions to amend another section, that motion treating the whole article as an entirety. In that view of the case, the article is not properly before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—(Mr. Fitch in the Chair.) The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Nye was to recommit this section to the same committee.

Mr. DELONG. But the whole article has been recommitting, with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is competent, in the opinion of the Chair, for the Convention further to instruct the committee, and this motion is in the nature of a supplementary instruction to the committee.

Mr. DELONG. If we are treating this article section by section, then I think it is too late to amend Section 8, because we have already proceeded as far as Section 19; and if we are not treating it by sections, but as an entirety, then the whole article was recommitting by the former motion, and is not, therefore, before the Convention. I make that point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair understands the gentleman's point of order. The Chair holds that the whole article was under consideration, as an entirety, and not section by section. After the article had been recommitting, the gentleman from Nye made his motion, which the Chair treats as a supplementary instruction to the committee; which, in the opinion of the Chair, it is quite competent for the Convention to give. The Chair therefore decides the point of order not well taken.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say, in addition, only this—that I have no knowledge as to how the experiment has worked in the State of Indiana, where the system has prevailed which is contemplated by this amendment (as it possibly has, also, in one or two other States—I do not now recollect, or know how many others have adopted it.) But it was only on the constitutional question involved that I desired, at this time, to address myself to the Convention, because, when I previously occupied the floor, I allowed that question to pass in a few words, with barely an indorsement of the position of the gentleman from Nye. Nevertheless, I am opposed to the amendment, as a matter of policy, because I think it would be unwise and impolitic for us, at this time, to attempt such an experiment.

Mr. DELONG. As my point of order has been decided not well taken, I desire, Mr. President, to ask a few questions, for information only. First, I desire to inquire how we can commit a thing which has already been committed? and, second, inasmuch as the motion of the gentleman from Nye is to recommit the article to a committee of five, and it has already been recommitting to a committee of three, which committee will get it, if the present motion prevails?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair did not so understand the motion of the gentleman from Nye; and furthermore, the Chair is informed that the article is not yet in the hands of the committee to which it was referred by the first motion.

Mr. DELONG. But the motion to recommit was put and carried.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman from Storey will not insist upon his point of order, because probably it will save time to settle the question in its present condition before the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; I will withdraw my point of order upon the motion, although I still do not think it is in order to make one motion to recommit on the top of another.

The question was taken on Mr. Proctor's motion to recommit, with instructions, and it was not agreed to.

THE THREE-FOURTHS VERDICT.

Mr. DUNNE. I desire to move a further supplementary instruction to the committee.

Monday.]

DUNNE—NOURSE.

[July 11.]

I move to instruct the committee to which was recommended Article 1, to amend Section 3 of said Article, by inserting in the proviso, after the words "by a two-thirds vote of," the words "all the members elected to," so as to read:—

"Provided, The Legislature, by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may require a unanimous verdict, notwithstanding this provision.

I have made that motion for the purpose only of bringing this question before the Convention. We have heretofore adopted a provision, that any and every law must have a majority vote of all the members elected to each branch; and it seems to have been the intention of the Convention to require, for the purpose of making the change contemplated in this proviso, something more than the vote required to pass an ordinary bill. Now, if you will refer to the apportionment made for last year—and the apportionment may be the same for this year—you will find that the Senate is composed of seventeen members, a majority of which number will be nine members, but unless the words I propose to insert are adopted, merely a two-thirds vote of a quorum might make this important amendment, provided that two-thirds vote constituted a majority of all the members elected; and therefore there would practically be no distinction between the number of votes required to make the alteration contemplated in this proviso, and the number of votes required for passing any ordinary law. But if, by my amendment, we require a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected, then it would be necessary to obtain twelve votes out of the seventeen to make this change, instead of, as the section now stands, only a two-thirds vote of all the members present, provided that two-thirds constitutes a constitutional majority. If it be the desire of the Convention to require a larger vote to make this change than to pass any other bill, then I think it must be obvious that this amendment is necessary.

The question was taken on Mr. Dunne's motion, and on a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 17; noes, not counted.

PARAMOUNT ALLEGIANCE.

Mr. DUNNE. Now, I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the wording of Section 2 of this Article. It says in that section, as it now stands:—

"But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government, in the exercise of all its constitutional powers, as the same have been or may be defined by the Federal Judiciary; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair," &c.

I conceive that a point is involved here which agitates the minds of men all over the Union at this time, and that is, whether or not the people of a State have a right, by their own action, to determine the existence of the State, as a State in the Union. As this clause now reads, I do not think it touches that point. It simply says that the people of the State have no right to dissolve their connection with the people of the United States, or to subvert the authority or the acts of the Government of the United States. That does not reach the case of the act of a State providing for its own cessation, as a State, because, if the doctrine advanced by many statesmen of the Union is correct, and I believe it is, then if a State, by legislative enactment, or by the action of a convention of the people, such as is here assembled to-day, shall choose, subsequent to the adoption of their Constitution, to meet and repeal that Constitution, they may thereby determine their existence as a State. Or, in other words, it is held that the same power which creates a State Constitution has the right to destroy that State Constitution, and end the State organization. Now, under this section, as it is worded here, the position is entirely tenable, that the people have a right to destroy the State organization, and the only limitation is the declaration that they have no right to sever their connection with the United States.

Mr. DE LONG. How does the gentleman wish to amend it?

Mr. DUNNE. I do not wish to amend it; I only wish to call attention to the fact—for it is a question which is now agitating the whole Union—whether or not the people of a State may meet in convention to rescind a Constitution previously adopted. I believe that if the people of a State do so mad an act, it destroys the State Constitution and the State organization altogether, but it still undoubtedly leaves them, as a people, under the Government of the United States, and in the same position, in respect to that Government, that they were in before their organization as a State. That is the only doctrine, as I understand, which is contemplated in this section, upon a strict reading of it; because, if it be the design to say that the people cannot sever their connection with the State, or destroy the organization of the State, then every one who has studied Lindley Murray knows that the word "its" should be substituted for the word "their," so as to read:

"No power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve its connection therewith."

Of course they cannot destroy their connection, because they are part of the Union; but if we mean that there is no power to destroy the existence of this State, as a State in the Union, then we must strike out the word "their," and insert the word "its."

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. NOURSE. Let us see if the gentleman is giving the correct interpretation. I have never observed it before, but it strikes me that, as it stands, it only prevents the people from severing their connection with the State. Let us see how it will read, leaving out the disjunctive, and filling up the ellipsis:—

"No power exists in the people of this State, no power exists in the people of any other State in the Federal Union, to dissolve their connection therewith."

—It seems to me it only limits the power of the people of the State in regard to dissolving their connection with the State; therefore, I would like to make the amendment suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. DUNNE. I am satisfied with the language of the provision as it is; but I think that members of the Convention have not generally noticed it. When it says, "No power exists in the people of this State," etc., it is referring to the paramount allegiance due to the Federal Government. It says, "The paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government," and then it goes on to say that there is no power in the people of this State to dissolve their connection therewith; and it goes on further to add, "or performing any act tending to impair, subvert, or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States." I think that it refers entirely to our Federal relations.

Mr. DELONG. I think the section is right as it stands. I have always regarded the Federal Union in the light of a contract between two parties, and neither the State nor the people of a State have the right to destroy that contract, without the consent of the Federal Government.

Mr. NOURSE. This first clause—"No power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith"—that is, with the State, as it seems to me to read—I think is right, as far as it goes. Then the next clause—"or perform any act tending to impair, subvert, or resist the supreme authority of the Government of the United States"—seems to me to cover the other matter, as to their connection with the Federal Union, so that the whole section looks to me to be right as it now stands.

Mr. DUNNE. But there is nothing in it to deny the power of destroying the existence of a State as a State. There is nothing whatever in it which says that the State can not terminate its State existence, while continuing to express loyalty to the General Government, and a desire to continue as a people under the General Government. There is nothing in it which reaches acts of secession regarding the existence of a State. Provided a country has once been erected into the attitude of a State, there is nothing to prevent its returning to the condition of a Territory.

Mr. NOURSE. Would not that be in contradiction of the first clause, which says, "they shall not dissolve their connection therewith"—that is, as a State? And, secondly, if the people undertook to secede as a State, would not that be an act tending to impair the authority of the United States, which is prohibited in the following clause? It seems to me that both are included. First, they cannot abrogate their Constitution as a State, and in the next place, they cannot impair or subvert the supreme authority of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DUNNE. I desire to make no change, and unless some one else does offer an amendment, there is nothing before the Convention on that point.

The PRESIDENT. This colloquy has been a little out of order, of course, but supposing it to be with a view to proposing some change, the Chair has tolerated the discussion. The article is now in the hands of the committee charged with the duty of making amendments.

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to make an explanation, in order that a reconsideration may be had, if necessary. It is usual, I think, when a subject is referred, that it should go into the hands of its friends, and for my part, I should be opposed to making the report required by the supplementary instructions of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? The further instructions to which the gentleman refers, were not adopted.

MEMBER QUALIFIED.

Mr. J. W. HAINES. Delegate elect from Douglas County, having taken and subscribed the oath of office, took his seat as a member of the Convention.

REPORT.

Mr. DUNNE, from the special committee to which was referred Article 1, with instructions to make certain amendments, reported the same back to the Convention with amendments in accordance with such instructions, as follows:—

Amend Section 3 of said article by inserting in the proviso between the words "of" and "each," the words "all the members elected to;" also amend Section 19 of said article by adding thereto the words "no person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court."

The question was taken on adopting the amendments reported by the committee, and the amendments were adopted.

The question recurred on the final passage of the article, as amended.

Mr. DUNNE. I suggest that Sections 3 and 19, having been amended, should, perhaps, be reengrossed. I suppose, however, that there will be no difficulty in considering them engrossed at this time, and placing the article on its final passage. I will therefore move that Sections 3 and 19 be considered engrossed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on the final passage of the entire article.

PARAMOUNT ALLEGIANCE—AGAIN.

Mr. FRIZELL. If the President please, and with the leave of the Convention, I would like to make a few remarks on this second section. My reasons are, that if the remarks which have been made by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) should be reported, and go out into the community, they might create some misunderstanding, and it is well for us all to thoroughly understand this article, if we can possibly arrive at a correct conclusion as to its meaning. I will not occupy more than three minutes time. ["Leave! leave!"]

[July 11.

The language here used is—

"All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it. But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government."

Now, Mr. President, I take it that this first part of the section applies to the people of the United States. Then in the latter clause, as read by me, it applies to the people in their individual capacity, in their allegiance to the Federal Government. "But the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government." Then gentlemen will notice that this language follows:—

"And no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith."

Now what is the meaning of that language? It is treating there of the people in their aggregate capacity—their corporate existence as a State—not as individuals. In the first place, as the section reads, it applies to the whole people as a nation—the whole people—and in the next place, Mr. President, it defines the personal and individual allegiance of the citizen to the Federal Government. We say here, sir, as I understand it, in language as concise and well defined as we could possibly obtain in the English language, that under our particular system and theory of government—which is as strong and perfect as it can be made—"No power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union"—(evidently, sir, referring to the people in the capacity of a State or in their corporate, or aggregated existence)—to dissolve their connection therewith. That is my understanding of the matter, and these are the only remarks which I desired to make on the subject.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article as amended, and the vote resulted—yeas, 28; nays, 1—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClintock, Murdoch, Nourse, Parker, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Wetherill, and Mr. President—28.

Nays—Mr. Proctor—1.

So the article was passed.

Mr. PROCTOR. I would like to explain my vote on this article, if there is no objection. I have been compelled to vote against the whole article on account of the latter clause of Section 2, in relation to paramount allegiance; and I have voted against it also on account of the amendment of the jury system, by which it is provided, in Section 3, that a verdict may be rendered in certain cases by two-thirds of the jury. I voted against it, also, on account of the innovation in the grand jury system, in Section 8.

THE ENROLLMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise for some information. As Chairman of the Enrolling Committee, I feel particularly anxious to facilitate the completion of our work. I have been informed by a gentleman who is probably known to every member, and who is undoubtedly competent to judge, that it will require at least two days and a half to enroll the Constitution. It is important to have the work under way as soon as possible, but it is impossible for the Enrolling Committee to take any action upon it until the Committee on Phraseology shall have reported, so that we may know whether the ordinance shall precede the resolution, or the resolution the ordinance, and so on to the end. We cannot begin the work at all until we understand the order of precedence.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that so much of the Constitution as has been already finally passed, be referred to the Committee on Phraseology, with the request that they report at their earliest convenience. I understand that, upon Article II, there is likely to be a considerable amount of discussion. I shall take no part in it myself, but I am satisfied that gentlemen will oppose several portions of it as it now stands, having been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest that the article which we have already passed, should be at once ordered enrolled.

Mr. KINKEAD. But the phraseology should be first attended to.

The question was taken on Mr. Chapin's motion to refer so much of the Constitution as had been finally adopted to the Committee on Phraseology, with instructions to report at their earliest convenience, and the motion was agreed to.

At five minutes before twelve o'clock, the Convention took a recess until one o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at one o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOVEY. I rise to a question of privilege. When we had under consideration Section 6 of Article VIII, I moved to strike that section out, and I see by the report in the Virginia Union, that I am represented as being opposed to banking institutions. I wish to be correctly represented in that respect. I am in favor of either giving the Legislature power to pass a general banking law, or of availing ourselves of the general banking law of Congress, establishing United States banking institutions.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's position will no doubt be corrected by the reporters.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the Chair, for the further consideration of Article VIII of the Constitution.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The CHAIRMAN. When this article was last under consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Committee had reached, and had under consideration Section 9, the question being on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) to strike out the words "to the company that shall first build a railroad to the State line," and insert instead the words, "to some one railroad to be built." The gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood) had also offered an amendment, to strike out all after the words "charitable purposes," that is, to strike out the entire proviso. The immediate question before the Committee will be the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Hovey).

Mr. HAWLEY. It may be, perhaps, a delicate suggestion, inasmuch as it may render me liable to be classed with those who are said to be desirous of wasting the time of the Convention, but still I will venture to make the suggestion, that the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has expressed a wish to make some remarks in opposition to this Pacific Railroad proviso, and his desire to close the debate upon the pending amendment. I would suggest to gentlemen, therefore, inasmuch as others have had an opportunity of expressing their opinions freely, that it would be no very great stretch of courtesy to allow the gentleman from Washoe that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that we could informally pass over this section.

Mr. FITCH. The gentleman from Washoe is not here at present, but I suppose he will, in any event, have an opportunity to express his views before the vote on the final passage of the article. I dislike to pass over our work, or to delay it because gentlemen do not happen to be present.

Mr. DUNNE. It is some time since the gentleman from Washoe expressed that desire to the Convention, and he certainly knew that this was the next business in order before us, and if he is so extremely anxious to express his views, he will naturally be here in time to do so; besides, he may have changed his mind on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Committee is the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Hovey).

Mr. HAINES. As I have not been here during the previous discussion of this subject, I desire to make a few remarks upon it. This is a question which was agitated and debated very fully in our last Convention, and I must say that I do not fully understand the amendment now proposed. I will therefore ask that the Secretary read the amendment again, or rather, that he read the proviso as it will stand with the amendment.

The Secretary read the proviso as proposed to be amended, as follows:—

"Provided, That the State may issue bonds, or secure the payment of principal or interest, or both principal and interest, of bonds, to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to some one railroad to be built connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi River; but no law to issue bonds shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people."

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise for information. I wish to ask whether the amendment does not contemplate a restriction of the issuance of bonds until the railroad shall be completed to the line of the State?—whether it is contemplated by this amendment to allow the bonds to be issued before the railroad is completed to the boundary of the State?"

Mr. HOVEY. The object of my amendment was, to give the Legislature a chance to make an appropriation for the building of a tunnel, if necessary, on any part of the road, even before it shall reach the line of this State; all that heavy work being understood to be west of the mountains.

Mr. STURTEVANT. My objection to that amendment would be, that it gives too good a chance for speculation. That is to say, the wording of it being, "to some one railroad to be built," nobody can tell who will get the appropriation. I cannot say, and no member can say which road will be built first, or which road will reach the State line soonest. Now, as I understand it, the object of this appropriation is for the purpose of encouragement—to shove along the road. The company which gets here first is to be considered the best fellow, and that company, it is supposed, will stand the best show of securing the appropriation. If that were really the case, there would be no chance for speculation about it; but the company getting here first would be entitled to, and would receive, the appropriation authorized in this Constitution. But according to this amendment, if it should prevail, my understanding would be that the appropriation will be made to some road to be built thereafter. Now we all have had some experience, undoubtedly, in these things, and we know that strong influences are brought to bear in the Legislature. Heavy log-rolling is done in pretty much every Legislature, and this appropriation would very possibly be given to some company—there is no knowing who would compose it, nor when that company would accomplish the work. That is my understanding of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, and that is my especial objection to it.

Mr. HOVEY. I look upon our position here as being somewhat like that occupied by the city of Buffalo, in respect to the Great Western Railroad in Canada. In order to tap that road, so that the city could receive the benefit of it, they appropriated six hundred thousand dollars, and they laid every dollar of that appropriation out in the province of Canada; and yet there is no doubt that it was a good investment for the city of Buffalo. Now, we may find ourselves in the same position in regard to this tunnel, or deep cut, whichever it may be, by which this road is to cross the Sierras, and it is for that reason that I propose to give the Legislature a chance to subscribe towards the work, or rather, to give the Legislature the power to allow the people, by their votes, to say whether they will give one million, two millions, or three millions, towards building this railroad.

Mr. BANKS. I had prepared an amendment embracing the same proposition, substantially, as that embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey;) but as his was introduced before I had a convenient opportunity of offering mine, I intend to support his amendment, and for reasons which I propose, very briefly, to state. I cannot hope to change the opinions of gentlemen of this Convention upon this subject, because many of them have, doubtless, devoted much more time and attention to it than I have; but I deem it proper, nevertheless, that I should present to their consideration the reasons which will actuate me in voting, perhaps in the minority, upon this question. The proposition before us seems to me to be plain. I have no disposition whatever to disguise this question in order to secure the passage of the amendment under consideration, upon anything but a square, straight-forward basis, and a distinct understanding as to the issues involved.

Gentlemen here have boldly proclaimed that we ought to do nothing for the Pacific Railroad that does not involve the expenditure within the limits of our own State of the entire amount which may be appropriated. Now, sir, for one, I am in favor of giving as much as we can in aid of this work, without restricting the expenditure to our own Territory, or within our borders. What we desire most of all is, to secure the construction of the railroad to our borders, and as far within them as is practicable, in the shortest space of time. I lay this down as a proposition that no one in this Territory can controvert, that whatever may be our financial condition, however unable we may be at this time to pay heavy taxes, however poor in all respects we may be, it is certainly beyond question that we are too poor to do without a railroad for any great length of time. Surely there never has been a community in the civilized world, and I do not think there ever will be, that can afford to pay for all it consumes ten cents or more per pound. If we were as rich as the wildest imagination ever conceived, we could not afford to pay six millions, or even five millions, annually, for our transportation across the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The Pacific Railroad is, therefore, something which has become as indispensable to our existence, almost, as the air we breathe. We cannot afford to pay any such tax on freight as we are now and have been paying, and the only way by which we can avoid it, is to secure the construction of this Pacific Railroad, at least to the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevadas. Once complete the railroad up the mountains, and then there is nothing to prevent us from securing the advantages of cheap transportation, because we shall have a very easy grade down hill; and we may, if we choose, roll down our barrels of produce, or slide down our boxes of merchandise and machinery. Get the railroad through to the summit, and not only do we have on this side an easy grade, that will almost admit of the construction of the rest of the road by the appropriation made by Congress, but we have also secured railroad communication to a point where the necessity will be greatly diminished.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey, contemplates that the Legislature of the State of Nevada may, in its discretion, and with the sanction of the people, appropriate money or issue bonds for the construction of this railroad, and also that the Legislature may provide that such appropriation shall be expended wherever in their judgment is best and most appropriate, or where it will best secure the early transportation of freights to this State at cheap rates. The heaviest work, it is notorious, is on the other side of the State line. There the most expensive tunnels are to be bored, there the heaviest grading is to be done, and there the most costly bridges are to be built. Any person who has examined the reports made to this railroad company, knows very well that when once the railroad reaches the State line, this State will not necessarily be required to furnish any aid in building it on this side, in addition to the amount appropriated by the Government of the United States. If, therefore, we desire to overcome the great difficulties, the chief obstacles in the way of this work, at the earliest practicable period, let us leave this provision of the Constitution in such a way that the Legislature may, in its wise discretion, contribute the money where it is most wanted, and not wait until the railroad is completed to a point which will place it beyond the necessity of our aid. I hope the Convention will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to suggest that the BANKS—HAWLEY—HOVEY—FITCH—DELONG.

[July 11.

amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, does not, as I conceive, fully cover the ground. It does not, in my judgment, guard the interests of the State, in the best manner, or secure the best application of the appropriation to be made. If I am correctly informed, there are rival companies which will be likely to strain every nerve to secure, beyond the possibility of forfeiture, the appropriation which the Congress of the United States has given, or provided to be given, to the company which shall first comply with the terms upon which that appropriation depends.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman give way for a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to ask, for my own satisfaction, and perhaps that of others, whether Congress has really made any appropriation that can be availed of by anybody except this Central Railroad Company? Is there any prospect of any other company whatever securing the appropriation made by Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY. That has been a question in my own mind. I may be misinformed on the subject, and entirely in the dark in relation to it, but I am told that there is another company now striving to get it.

Mr. BANKS. I do not know anything about it; that is why I asked the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the case, if I am correctly informed, and if not, I wish to be set right. What I wish to suggest is, that we should not pass this provision in such a form as to restrict it to one company. I have no objection to granting aid to the company that is going to build the road before they get to the State line, but I think it would be almost a suicidal act to pass this amendment and leave the provision in such a form as to allow those rival companies to lobby for it (to use the expression of the gentleman from Washoe) in the Legislature of the State. If such a condition of affairs does exist, I suggest that it would be suicidal to pass the amendment, unless the Legislature is restricted to granting aid to that company which shall receive the benefits of the grants and donations made by the Government of the United States. If the assertion made to me, that there is a rival company, has no basis of fact; if there is no rival to this Pacific Railroad Company, then it amounts to nothing; but if there is such a rival, it of course amounts to a great deal.

Mr. HOVEY. I think by the time the people are called upon to vote upon this question, they will have become satisfied as to which road they want to grant the appropriation to—whether to the Central Pacific route, or to the Placerville route.

Mr. FITCH. I was at first inclined to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey), but on reflection I have concluded to oppose it, and one reason for such opposition is, that it is my desire that the sovereignty, and the glory, and the prosperity, and the enlightened and blessed institutions of Nevada generally, shall be extended over as large an area as possible. Now, sir, if we pass this section in such a form as to declare that aid shall not be extended to the Pacific Railroad until it reaches the State line, then, there being a necessity for doing a large amount of grading, and other heavy work west of that line, as at present surveyed, we are, in effect, offering an inducement to the California Legislature—which they will no doubt see in an instant, and in view of which they will probably not hesitate to act—to move the State line sixty miles over towards the Pacific Ocean. [Merriment.]

The question was taken on Mr. Hovey's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend the section by striking out all after the words "Mississippi River" in the proviso, and substituting the following:—

"And provided further, that such railroad company shall expend the said amount of three millions of dollars for the further construction of said road within the borders of this State; but no law to issue bonds hereby authorized shall be effective, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people at a special election called for that purpose."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that amendment contains but two ideas: one is, that the three millions of dollars shall not be donated on the bonds issued for that amount, except for the building of a railroad in this State—that is, whenever the company shall have expended three millions of dollars for the railroad, then it will be entitled to the three millions in bonds. The other idea is, that the vote upon the subscription is to be taken at a special election, called for that purpose, so that the question shall not be blended with more important questions, or lost sight of in the excitement of a general election, involving a strife for County and State officers. The consequence of such a provision would be, that whoever should vote for the appropriation would do so knowingly, and thus we should obtain a correct expression upon that vote. It is true that that arrangement is subject to the objection that there will not be so large a vote polled as there would be at a general election, but it has also the merit that every one who votes at all, will vote directly on this one proposition.

Now, as to the first proposition, I have argued it heretofore, and I do not care about again representing my views upon it. I think if we leave this section so as to allow the Legislature to make this appropriation of three millions of bonds, without any restriction, the first Legislature we have will find itself besieged by the emissaries of the companies engaged in lobbying through the appropriation, and no doubt successfully. Then the next movement will be to have the bonds issued immediately, and doubtless they will succeed, also, in that; and before we get a railroad within thirty-five or forty miles of our borders, these three millions in bonds will all have been issued. Now, the State is poor, having very little taxable property. These bonds, we must bear in mind,

Monday.]

STURTEVANT—DELONG—CHAPIN.

[July 11.

are to bear so low a rate of interest that they cannot be sold here, of course, but will have to be sold in New York, or in Europe, and for such currency as may then and there be in use. The currency may at that time be more depreciated than it is to-day, and bearing this small rate of interest of seven per cent., I do not imagine that our bonds would really bring, in gold, more than twenty-five cents on the dollar, so that out of an appropriation of three millions of dollars, the company would derive the actual benefit of only about one-fourth of that amount. Nevertheless, we should find ourselves three millions of dollars in debt, upon which we should be obliged to pay seven per cent. interest annually, with very little indeed in the way of taxable property from which we can derive a revenue to meet it. Now, it strikes me that three millions of dollars, granted after the construction of the road to our own borders, will be just as beneficial to the company as it would be if the same amount were appropriated to be applied for the completion of a road which lies wholly in the State of California, if they are ever coming here with it at all. Besides, we should, in that event, be holding out a powerful inducement to the railroad company to push the road through, and not merely to get it up to the heavy grades in California, and there stop. It makes it an object to come beyond that difficult point, and they will build their road on as cheap and economical a plan as will promise to pay, and push it through as rapidly as they can, so as to get their reward. They will get the appropriation, too, at a time when the State, by the building of the improvements which will be made to connect our mines with water power, will be teeming with industry, when there will be tenfold more of taxable property than there is now, and consequently the bonds will be so much more saleable and available in market. I do not like the idea of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) of sliding down our boxes and rolling our barrels down the mountains; and I venture to say, that when the railroad reaches that point, we shall very soon obtain, as the democratic platform said in 1856, "speedy and easy communication across the plains." I though that, I believe, was supposed to refer to the celebrated camel route—President Buchanan's Pacific Railroad.

Mr. STURTEVANT [in his seat]. Do you refer to the Woolly-Horse route?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir, it is our own platform that I am referring to. I remember that I used to talk in favor of it, very frequently, on the stump. Now, I say, as I said the other day, that although I was misunderstood or misrepresented then, as being opposed to the Pacific Railroad, yet I do not believe there is a man in the world who is more in favor of it than I am. I see the promise of prosperity, and strength, and growth, on every side, in its construction and I am as desirous of seeing it completed as any man in the world can be. But, for one, I say that if we are going to expend this money, I would like to see it applied to building that part of the road which is to be constructed between here and Virginia City, and, so far as the money would go, towards Lander County. I think that might be done to advantage, on the route of this railroad, and thereby give us a road which will enable us to reach that chain of mountains which now cuts us off entirely from the outside world. That would unlock our resources, giving us access to water power, and supplies of wood, for the want of which our enterprises are now withering. I hope gentlemen will not insist on forcing upon us the burden of building this road before we are able to bear it, and that they will allow us to reap some benefit from the appropriation, whenever it is made.

My colleague (Mr. Fitch) has just shown me an amendment which I am willing to substitute in place of my own. It is a substitute for the whole section. It suits me very well, and if there is no objection, I will ask that it be read.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to, or be interested in the stock of any company, association, or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes; Provided, that the State may issue bonds, or secure the payment of principal or interest, or both principal and interest, on bonds to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, in sums not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, for each mile of railroad actually constructed within the boundaries of the State of Nevada, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company that shall first complete a railroad to the State line, connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi River; but no law for issuing bonds shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people, at a special election to be called for that purpose; and further provided, that any such law, to be so submitted, shall therein provide for levying and assessing a special tax for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds.

Mr. DELONG. That last proviso was just handed to me. I offer it all together, in place of my own amendment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. With the permission of the gentleman from Storey, I would say that there is one part of that amendment which I would heartily indorse, but the other part of it I do not like very well.

Mr. DELONG. I will withdraw that amendment temporarily, then. What I want is to get these two ideas embraced—first, that the money we appropriate shall be expended for the road in our own State; and second, that the appropriation shall be submitted to the people, at a special election to be called for that purpose. I have talked already as long as the Evening Herald will willingly allow me to, and therefore I will now leave the subject.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have only one objection, Mr. Chairman, to these various amendments. If gentlemen will only lay them aside until the meeting of the State Legislature, and until that Legislature is called upon to act in this matter, then their amendments will all be in proper place, and deserving of careful consideration.

DELONG—CHAPIN—BROSTAN—FRIZELL—FITCH—STURTEVANT.

[July 11.

That will be the proper time to impose these restrictions, and to raise these objections. I see we are falling back into that error of the former Convention, which the people so emphatically condemned, of legislating too much in this organic law. Now, I say, let us abide by this section, nearly or quite as it is presented to us in the old Constitution. I have no serious objection to some of the amendments which have been offered by gentlemen, if it were only proper to introduce them here. But I regard them as highly improper in our Constitution. That is no place for them. The people were disgusted with the numerous legislative provisions which were incorporated in the old Constitution, and I say, do not let us commit the same error in this Convention. I do not think all wisdom will die out with this body; I think some of it will be left in the Legislature to convene hereafter, and there let my friend and colleague present his amendments and his arguments.

Mr. DELONG. If my colleague will assure me that he will be in that Legislature, and there labor to carry out these ideas, I will do it.

Mr. CHAPIN. They are not very objectionable as legislative provisions.

Mr. DELONG. Then, why not put them in now, because we may not be in the Legislature?

Mr. BROSNAN. I suggest that we vote on the amendments which are now pending, before we offer any more, in order that we may not get the subject too much complicated.

Mr. DELONG. I will renew my amendment, omitting that last proviso.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's amendment, as last modified, and, upon a division, the vote stood—ayes, 13; noes, 13.

Mr. DELONG. I hope the Chairman will vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is satisfied that all the members present have not voted.

Mr. BROSNAN. If the Convention will allow me, I desire to suggest that I am rather in favor of my colleague's amendment, but I vote against it for the reason that it limits the expenditure to twenty-five thousand dollars per mile; and, besides, I think there is no necessity for a special election, which is always a great expense and trouble.

Mr. DELONG. I think my colleague misunderstands the effect of my amendment. The entire three millions are to be voted for at one time, but the bonds are to be issued only at the rate of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, as the road progresses. The three millions are all voted at once, and then the bonds are to be issued as fast or as often as the company brings in proof that they have got one or more miles completed. When they get to the end of each mile they present their vouchers, showing that they have got a mile finished, and draw their twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of bonds.

Mr. FRIZELL. I voted against the amendment of my colleague for this reason: I approve most heartily of the ideas intended to be carried out or established by his amendment, but I think there is too much legislation in it; that matters are embraced in it which properly belong within the province of the Legislature. I do not think we can do better than to take the original section, amend it, by adding that the money so appropriated shall be expended within the limits of the State, and then pass it, leaving all the rest to the Legislature. I hope that all these amendments will be voted down, and that then we shall add those few words to the section, and let it stand.

Mr. FITCH. I will say that my private opinion is in favor of not limiting the expenditure to this State, but rather to allow some portions of the appropriation to be expended in California, if necessary. I agree generally with the views of my colleague from Storey (Mr. Hovey) on this subject. But I am satisfied that nothing of that kind can pass this Convention. I suggested this amendment to my colleague (Mr. DeLong) as the only thing which, in my opinion, is likely to get through here, in order that we may have a vote upon it, and let the question be settled.

Mr. DELONG. It has been suggested that the appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile might perhaps carry the railroad beyond our own limits. I would like, therefore, to modify the amendment by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to allow the company to draw fifty thousand dollars for each mile.

Mr. FITCH. That would build the road, and stock it, too.

Mr. DELONG. Not in all places.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that it has cost only thirty-two thousand dollars per mile to build the road from Sacramento out, as far as it has been completed.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's amendment, as last modified, and upon a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 16; noes, 11.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I offer the following amendment:—

"And further provided, that the said appropriation shall be derived from the sale of the public lands granted to this State by Congress for internal improvements."

We have, I believe, or will have, five hundred thousand acres of land which are granted to us by Congress, as soon as we become a State, for this very purpose of internal improvement. I do not know how it is with the other members of the Convention, but I do not wish to be taxed, at least until we shall have first used up what means we have.

Mr. DELONG. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that by an Act of Congress, passed in 1844, every State then in the Union, and all which should subsequently become States in the Union, were granted, or upon their admission, to be granted—for it has been held to operate as a grant—five hundred thousand acres of land each, for purposes of internal improvements. And it strikes me, as suggested by the gentleman from

CHAPIN—NOURSE—STURTEVANT—FITCH.

[July 11.]

Washoe, that it is extremely proper that these lands should be made use of for purposes of internal improvements—that they should be sold, and the proceeds applied to a fund from which to pay this appropriation before the people are taxed for it. I am not strenuous about it, but I shall vote for this amendment upon principle.

Mr. CHAPIN. It occurs to me that there are at least two serious objections to that amendment. One is, that the money to be derived from these lands cannot be made available speedily for the benefit of this road, and that is a matter which is of the utmost importance to us. The other serious objection is, that if we attempt to force that land into the market now, we have got to sacrifice lands, which in time, would become very valuable. We had better keep that land until it is wanted, and let us make a manly, prompt, and speedy appropriation to hasten along this road so that we may enjoy its benefits. To my mind, these are insuperable objections, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand that this amendment provides the funds from which these bonds are to be paid. Now, do I understand that it is the idea of the gentleman who last spoke, that we must have a tax levied at once, sooner than we can derive any proceeds from the sale of those lands? I understand that this amendment provides, not for the bonds, but simply for the basis or fund from which they are to be paid. I am at a loss to perceive how there can be any objection to that.

Mr. CHAPIN. It provides that the appropriation shall be derived from the sale of the public lands.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am sure there will be no difficulty in changing the amendment to meet the objection, because that is what is intended—that the funds to be raised from the sale of these lands shall be applied towards the payments to be made on these bonds.

Mr. FITCH. It seems to me that that is a distinction without a difference. It does not make any particular difference whether the money derived from the lands shall be devoted directly to the road, or to paying the interest on the bonds, or the bonds themselves issued in aid of the road. In the first place, we shall be obliged to wait a long time for the money, and in the second place, we shall be compelled to wait a long time for the sale of the bonds. Capitalists would certainly be disposed to wait a long time before they would buy bonds dependent for their payment upon the money to be derived from the sale of those lands. I trust that the opponents of the Pacific Railroad will not endeavor in this way to push it to the wall.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Oh, no; we are not opponents.

Mr. NOURSE. We do not understand it that way.

Mr. FITCH. There is a disposition here in the Convention to aid this Pacific Railroad enterprise, and at the same time, those of us who are friendly to it, desire to hedge the provision round with all necessary guards and restrictions. I trust that gentlemen will be satisfied with those guards and restrictions, and not try these little clever tricks, in order to defeat the provision altogether.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Now, this matter reminds me of one of Mark Twain's recent letters, where he says, "Now you see it, and now you don't see it." [Laughter]. In the first place, we do not know what we are going to do, for gentlemen will remember we have not got the Constitution through yet. I do not know that any one of these gentlemen who have spoken at such tremendous length has ever attempted to make it appear that this railroad is going to be of any particular benefit to that humble portion of this Territory which I represent, or to any of our "cow counties." I have no doubt it is going to be a great benefit to the mines. Well, I myself claim to be a miner, as well as a rancher. I have some few feet yet up in Storey County, and I maintain that this Pacific Railroad will be a greater benefit to the mining interests which I own there than to any other property I have in this Territory, and the quicker and more speedily that road is constructed the greater will be the benefit which it will confer upon that particular business. Still, I am rather under the impression that there is a chance for this provision to get knocked all to pieces, because in case the mines are not taxed, and nobody knows yet that they will be, then who is it, I ask the gentleman from Storey, that he proposes to call upon to pay for this railroad?

Mr. FITCH. I do not propose anything about it; I propose to let the Legislature see to that. Let us provide that the bonds may be issued, and then let the Legislature, if they do issue them, provide for their payment.

Mr. CHAPIN. And at a time, too, when we shall have fifty millions, and perhaps, even two hundred millions of taxable property more than we have to-day.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I do not know but it may turn out to be so, but the Territory, if that is going to be the case, has got to take a good rousing upward start, and that pretty soon, because just now everything seems to be going out at the little end of the horn. I do not know that we have much taxable property to-day aside from what there is in the cow counties, and a little surface property perhaps in Storey County. At any rate, as I said in the first place, the cow counties do not expect to be very greatly benefited by this railroad, and it would not look to me altogether fair to call on them alone to foot the bills for its construction.

Mr. FITCH. We shall have less property very soon, if we have to do without a railroad.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Very true; but Congress has provided that certain lands shall be given to us, to be devoted expressly to purposes

HAWLEY—DELONG—FITCH—NOURSE.

[July 11.

of internal improvements, and for one, I wish to see those lands used up in building this railroad, at least before we are specially taxed for it. I have sent up my amendment to this section with that object in view. It was rather hastily prepared, but perhaps it can be amended so as to suit everybody, and perhaps it had better be amended in some respects. I am not unconvinced by any means, and I have no objection to allowing any member to assist me when I undertake to make an amendment in this important document. I am in hopes that this amendment will carry, at least in some form that shall go to the extent of using up these public lands in paying the bonds, as far as they will go; then, after that, we can have a tax levied, in whatever way the Legislature shall see fit, because it will rest with the Legislature to make such appropriations as may be necessary to pay the bonds when they become due.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from Washoe allow me to read a proviso, which I think may possibly meet his views? In case this amendment is withdrawn, I propose to offer the following:—

“Provided further, That the sum so derived from the proceeds of the sale of the public lands of this State shall be set apart as a sinking fund for the extinguishment of the principal of said bonds; and provided further, that a special tax shall be levied for the payment of the interest of said bonds.”

Mr. DELONG. I think the gentleman from Washoe cannot complain of that.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that it should specify the lands as those donated for internal improvements, because there are other lands donated by Congress for special purposes.

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman will amend that proviso so as to say that the proceeds shall be set apart “towards a sinking fund,” instead of “as a sinking fund.” I will not object to it.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not see the necessity of that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection, because I believe the five hundred thousand acres will be sufficient to pay the whole amount. At the suggestion of the Chairman, I will modify the first part of the amendment, so as to specify the public lands set apart for internal improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that this is offered as a substitute, or, rather, in the place of the whole amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Sturtevant).

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to have the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Douglas read as it now stands.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

“Provided further, that the sum so derived from the proceeds of the sale of the public lands granted to this State for internal improvement purposes, shall be set apart towards a sinking fund, for the extinguishment of the principal sum of said bonds; and provided further, that a special tax shall be levied to secure the payment of the interest of said bonds.”

The CHAIRMAN. I will suggest that if the Constitution, in effect, says that this fund shall be derived from the sale of those lands, the Legislature would be inhibited from the levying of a tax for that purpose, in case that fund should prove to be insufficient.

Mr. HAWLEY. That difficulty suggested itself to my own mind, but it was mainly with the view of getting the question before the Convention that I proposed this amendment. If we adopt that idea as the basis of our action, we can perfect the phraseology subsequently, so as to avoid the apprehended difficulty. It certainly becomes incumbent upon this Convention, if it is expected that the State shall grant any aid to the railroad at all, if it is designed to place those bonds in the market in such a way as to give them any value in the world, to provide hereafter further means for the extinguishment of the debt to be created by their issuance. A person of a sanguine imagination might be led to believe, from the present value of our agricultural lands, that the sale of half a million acres of such lands, if they can be found in our State, would be ample to provide a fund for the redemption of these bonds; but that is a question on which gentlemen better informed than myself, as to all the capacities of the agricultural lands within our borders, may be expected to give their views. I am, and have been from the first, decidedly in favor of the retention of the original section, with some slight amendments; but there seems to be manifested a disposition, on the part of a portion of the members of this Convention, to throw every possible obstacle in the way of the passage of any section or provision in this Constitution which shall authorize the future Legislature, or give it any power to lend any aid whatever to the construction of the railroad. That disposition makes itself apparent, not only by direct opposition to every provision proposed to be engrafted into our Constitution looking to that end, but also by the exercise of parliamentary strategy, and every other means that gentlemen can bring to bear, to secure their ends. Now, I believe that many who opposed the original proposition were really in favor of the Pacific Railroad, but unfortunately there seems to be no disposition here to take hold together, and adopt something that will be practical and effectual.

Mr. NOURSE [interrupting]. Is there any question before the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) as amended by his subsequent acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Hawley).

Mr. HAWLEY. I was stating my reasons for presenting this amendment, and I wish only to say, further—and with that I will close my remarks, and give gentlemen who are in the opposition an opportunity to reply—that it is my intention to move to provide further, in some way, for any additional appropriation which may be necessary to place these bonds upon a sound basis.

Monday.]

FITCH—HAWLEY—NOURSE.

[July 11.]

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman from Douglas will insert in the latter clause of his amendment the words "principal and" before the word "interest." I think the objection suggested by the Chairman will be obviated. That will strengthen the provision, not weaken it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The suggestion meets my approbation, and I will modify my amendment by inserting those words.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not see the necessity of providing for any power in the Legislature, so far as the payment of these bonds goes. I waited a moment after this amendment was offered, in expectation of seeing my friend from Storey, (Mr. Chapin), who has such a "holy horror" of legislation, bounce up and protest against this legislative clause. Now, I understand that the power of a Legislature extends to all proper subjects of legislation, except so far as it may be limited by the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution of the State, and if there exists a debt of the State of Nevada, will any gentleman say that it needs a special clause in the Constitution to authorize the Legislature to levy a tax to pay that debt? That would be a most unheard-of doctrine. The object of a special clause providing for a tax to pay the interest on these bonds is, as I understand it, to enable the people to know when they are voting for the issuing of these bonds, exactly what they are voting for—that they may understand that they who dance must pay the piper—and that if they vote for the appropriation, they must also take the necessary steps to pay the appropriation. It is not because it is in any sense necessary to give the Legislature power to levy a tax before they can proceed to levy that tax.

And while I am speaking of this amendment, I wish to say now and here, that I am opposed to this whole matter of loaning the credit of the State to any railroad, and I suppose I have a right to be. A most ungenerous charge was made, because I happen to be a representative of Washoe, and charged by the people of that county with the duty of representing their interests here—though I do not own a dollar's worth of property in that county, and I am sorry to say, not in any other—that I do not want the railroad built to this State for fear it would help Storey County, and diminish the value of property in Washoe County. It seems to me that we have had enough of this child's play. If the arguments of gentlemen are not strong enough to stand upon reason, if their points are not to be carried by appeals to reason, then let them fall to the ground.

Now, it seems to me that this amendment is exceedingly proper, for the reason that it diverts into the channel, and compels the appropriation for the purpose of internal improvements, of the grant of land which was made by Congress for this very purpose of internal improvements. And, further, it will reduce the chances of the Pacific Railroad Company, or any other company, getting our lands for nothing.

I care nothing more about the Pacific Railroad Company than any other, although all my impressions are in favor of that route as the only one over which a railroad is likely to be speedily built across the Sierras. But my objection is to this class of persons getting our bonds, when those bonds are compelled to be paid by heavy taxation imposed upon the people here, and then leaving this amount of money to be derived from the public lands to be granted to some other railroad company, perhaps, that may turn out to be only a wild-cat affair. It is in order that this grant of land by Congress may go to pay for the building, or, at all events, towards the building of that road which we need the most, that I favor the amendment providing that all the proceeds of the sales of those public lands shall go to pay the bonds, if the Convention is determined that the bonds shall be issued at all events. As I said before, I shall vote to the last against issuing any bonds, and when the question comes up on striking out all in relation to these bonds, I shall endeavor to give fully my reasons in favor of the motion to strike out. I disclaim any intention to use unfair means to defeat this clause, so dear to the hearts of some gentlemen. My sole desire is to make it as little objectionable as possible, so that if it shall be carried, against my convictions of right and sound policy, we may suffer as little as possible therefrom; and I still reserve the right to myself, of voting to strike out the whole provision, when the question comes up on that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I cannot see how it is necessary that the Legislature should have a specific grant of power to levy taxes to pay a debt which the State owes, when we have done nothing, that I know of, calculated to restrict the power of the Legislature in that respect. The Legislature, without any grant or restriction whatsoever, certainly has power to levy taxes to pay a debt of the State, and, as I understand it, the clause which provides that they shall pay the interest by a tax levied for that purpose, was inserted here only in order that the fact might not be lost sight of—that when the people come up and pay their dollars into the treasury, they shall know that so many of them are going to pay the interest on these bonds, which I predict will be called at that time, if it ever comes, stolen bonds, because that has been the history of all similar railroad grants.

Mr. FITCH. I agree with the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) that it is unnecessary to give the Legislature power to levy a special tax to pay the principal of these bonds. I agree with him further, that it is unnecessary to give the Legislature power to impose a special tax to pay the interest on these bonds. I go even further, and say that it is unnecessary to place in this section of the Constitution a power to devote the public lands to that purpose. It is all unnecessary.

Mr. NOURSE [interrupting]. I believe it says the Legislature are required to do it.

Monday.]

FITCH—NOURSE.

[July 11.]

Mr. FITCH. I think that is not the language of the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. Then I certainly wish to amend it in that particular, so as to use the word "require."

Mr. FITCH. On examination, I find that it does require them to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The original amendment provided for striking out all after the word "purposes," which would of course inhibit the Legislature from doing anything of the kind; and then this proviso which is under consideration proposes to invest the Legislature with the power specified, to issue bonds, or to guarantee bonds, in this particular case.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that to be so. Now, sir, if we place in this section a provision that the revenues derived from the sale of these public lands shall be devoted to the payment of the principal of these bonds, and if we further say that a special tax shall be levied for the purpose of paying the interest, do not we by implication inhibit the Legislature from levying a tax to pay the principal, and say instead that the entire principal shall be paid from the revenues derived from the public lands alone? It can certainly do no harm, if the gentleman believes the Legislature has the power to frame a law for levying a special tax for the payment of the principal of the bonds as well as the interest, to say so in so many words.

I am sorry that the gentleman from Washoe should entertain the erroneous impression that I desired to impugn his motives. At the commencement of this debate, in a speech somewhat jocose in its character, I alluded to the effect of this measure upon Washoe County; but he disclaimed the idea of being opposed to the measure on that ground, and I then said, as the Convention will remember, that I was very happy to accept of his disclaimer, and to believe that the gentleman had no desire to serve especially what certainly were the specific interests of his county, by striking out this proviso. And I am happy now to say that I consider the gentleman from Washoe, not only as not lacking in integrity or fair dealing, but as a monument of integrity, of patience, of courtesy, of fair dealing, and of personal beauty. [Laughter.] I have no desire to impute any thing to him which I would not willingly have imputed to myself. But, sir, I do protest that the proposition to make the issuing of bonds in aid of the Pacific Railroad dependent upon the sale of the public lands granted to this State by Congress for internal improvements, is calculated to defeat the very purpose of this provision. I do not say that such is the intention of the gentleman;—on account of his disclaimer, I am of opinion that he did not even think of it; but such is the effect, nevertheless.

You authorize the issuance of these bonds, and at the same time you declare that they shall be paid only by the sale of the public lands granted to this State for purposes of internal improvement, and what will be the result?

Why, sir, is there a capitalist in the world who would give fifteen cents on the dollar for three millions of dollars in bonds, with no better basis than the sale of the public lands in Nevada? I do not know what amount of lands could be sold at the present time by the State, but I venture to say that not one million of dollars could be derived from those lands. We have but very few acres of public lands which could now be brought into market, except perhaps out on the deserts, in the vicinity of Fort Churchill, and I do not think that many speculators are going to rush down there to purchase those lands or to pay any considerable sum for them. The fact is, that if we extend this aid at all, in order to make it effective we have got to make provision for its payment in such a manner as to give to the bonds the confidence of capitalists. If we do not do that, our aid will only be a pretense. If you issue your bonds based on the sale of the public lands alone, you may be keeping the promise to the ear, but you are certainly breaking it to the hope. Now, sir, I am in favor of aiding the Pacific Railroad, and I do not now believe—I am happy to say it—that the opponents of this clause are opposed to its being built. I am happy to believe that they very much desire to have it built—provided, always, that somebody else will pay for it. I do not think, at all events, that they would absolutely labor to prevent its coming here, although they have evinced no disposition to aid its coming. With the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) I believe that the finances of this Territory at the present time are in the most deplorable condition. I am almost inclined to quote in regard to them the words attributed to Jefferson Davis by Hosea Biglow:—

"Suthin's got to be done.

We are clean out of money, and eenamost out of land."

[Laughter.] I believe we are in a very bad condition. But I believe the Pacific Railroad would be the salvation of us: that by the construction of that road so as to run one year earlier into this State—and I believe it would be brought here one year earlier by this proviso—it would make a difference of from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars to this community. I think the property which would be created by the construction of that road would amount to so much that the taxes along the line would be sufficient to pay the principal and interest on all the bonds proposed to be issued, within five years. It would take but a moderate amount of increase in our taxable property to do that. I was in favor of supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) providing that this aid should not be confined to our own Territory, but may be expended in crossing the inaccessible mountains which lie some fifty miles to the west of us; but I became satisfied that the sense of the majority of this Convention was against that proposition, and I therefore suggested to my colleague (Mr. DeLong) to get something practical before the committee, because I wanted to get to a vote as soon as possible, and dispose of this troublesome question.

[July 11.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to ask the gentleman one question, and that is, how he would go to work to build a railroad over inaccessible mountains? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITCH. That was a little hyperbole—something that my colleague never indulges in, and therefore knows nothing about. [Laughter.]

Now lest there should be any shadow of suspicion lurking in the mind of any gentleman here, or in the lobby, or in the mind of the gentleman from Washoe, that I intended in any way to reflect upon his motives, I wish to repeat that I never designed to impute to him anything but the most exalted patriotism, the most profound morality, and the most perfect fair dealing; and furthermore, I believe him to be the handsomest man in the Convention. [Laughter.]

Mr. NOURSE. I would reciprocate the gentleman's compliments, if I could do so conscientiously. [Merriment.] And now I wish to say this: As this amendment stands at present, it says that the proceeds shall go "towards"—that is the language—"towards a sinking fund"; and the power of the Legislature to levy a tax is therefore not limited. The proviso only limits the power to loan or donate the public credit, and not the power to tax. If a State debt exists, the power in the Legislature of the State to levy a tax to pay that debt necessarily exists as a consequence. The gentleman from Storey will not deny that, and therefore I say, as the proviso stands now it fixes no limit, for it expressly says—and that amendment was made at the gentleman's own request—that the money derived from these lands shall go "towards" a sinking fund.

The question was stated on the amendment, and it was again read.

Mr. BANKS. I do not see the use of that word "sum," where it says, "for the extinguishment of the principal sum of said bonds."

Mr. HAWLEY. If there is no objection, I will strike out the word "sum."

The question was taken on the amendment as thus modified, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment to strike out the proviso altogether, so that the section would read as follows:—

Sec. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to, or be interested in the stock of any company, association, or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes.

Mr. NOURSE. I want to say but a very few words as to my reasons for offering this amendment to strike out the proviso. I believe, in the first place, that we need not argue the question as to the necessity to us of the construction of this Pacific Railroad. I believe every man who is not a fool must concede that the railroad is absolutely necessary for the development and continued prosperity of this community, and therefore I will pass that by.

Now, this proviso is, that the State, through its Legislature, may loan three millions of dollars; and there are no restrictions, except that it is to be used exclusively for the building of the railroad. Either we are expected to pay that amount of money which we loan, or we are not. Either it is a matter of security, by which we are to give a certain guarantee, that shall be deemed worth something, or it is a mere matter of form. If it is a mere matter of form, it is hardly worth while to put it in our Constitution; if it is a matter of substance—if it is really to allow the Legislature, through the vote of the people, to loan this amount of money—then comes up the question, what are we loaning? or, what are we granting? And I wish to say here, distinctly, that if I believed this loan would advance the building of the Pacific Railroad one year, although there are some objections to it, in this point of view—that the tax is levied on all property equally, while it benefits some property very much, and injures other property very much—yet, nevertheless, I should be disposed, as a mere matter of policy on the part of the State, to at once grant the loan—always provided we were able to grant it, and meet our obligations when they become due. But I would a great deal rather give that money outright than lend it, after all, because then we should have done with the whole thing. I really think it would be a good investment, if it would advance the building of this road as much as one year; and I agree with the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) that the benefit to the State of having the railroad for one year, would amount to a good deal more than the three millions of dollars which it would cost. But it is because I do not believe it will help the railroad a single year, or a single month, or a single day, that I oppose this provision. I think, in the first place, that except so far as the public lands will go—and they will amount to comparatively little—we shall have the whole amount of our loan to pay one of these days. We shall ultimately have to pay both principal and interest—the whole of it. Again, the railroad does not need any aid from us to secure its construction. This enterprise seems to possess already all the elements of wealth; and undoubtedly it will be built, in good time, if we let it alone; and, therefore, I say the issuing of these bonds before the wealth of the State is developed, would be imposing upon the State a very onerous burden. It would be unsafe and unwise to do such a thing in anticipation of a state of things which may hereafter exist, or may not.

Now, I have here some figures giving the amounts of the expenses which have been incurred in maintaining our government, even under the present territorial form. The expenses of the Territory of Nevada for the fourteen months ending December 31st, 1863, amounted to nearly $109,000. Deducting from that the proportion of expenses for two months in 1862, it leaves, as the expenditure for the year 1863, $93,200; and of that amount, only about $1600 was interest money. In addition to that expenditure, we have now to provide for a large amount of bonds, which did not exist a year and a half ago. We have what we called the Curry bonds, for the penitentiary, amounting to some $60,000, and other bonds for Territorial indebtedness, making, altogether, a total of $254,000 of bonded indebtedness, in addition to the current expenses; and in order to estimate our expenditures for this year, the interest on these bonds will have to be added to the expenditures which I have given for the last year, inasmuch as these bonds did not then exist. One portion of these bonds bear interest at ten per cent. per annum, and another portion at one and one half per cent. per month, making the total interest $35,400 per year. Deducting from that the amount which was paid during the year, or rather, during these fourteen months, and it leaves $34,000 of interest money to be paid this year more than was paid last; and adding that to the $93,000 of current expenses, brings the entire amount of expenditures up to something like $127,000 a year. That is, as a mere Territory, with no heavy expenditures required for judicial officers, or State officers, or anything of that sort, we have an absolute expenditure of $127,000 a year!

FITCH—NOURSE—DELONG.

[July 11.]

Now, sir, I have looked through the Auditor's and Treasurer's reports, and I cannot find that there was any income during that time, except $44,000, and out of that there had to be paid the Federal tax, amounting to $6,118, leaving an income for Territorial purposes of a little less than $38,000. Then I should take out of our expenditures this amount paid over to the Federal Government, and that leaves our total expenses at $121,000, showing for the year, or in that proportion, an income of about $38,000, and against that an expenditure of $121,000. That is the state of our finances at the present time, and certainly nobody complains, I believe, but that our taxes are already heavy enough.

Then when we become a State, with an expensive State government, we shall have to add to that an expenditure of at least double the amount of current expenses. We shall have to reckon our total expenditures at not less than $250,000 or $300,000, and only this small income to offset it. We shall have an annual expenditure of perhaps not less than $300,000 for current expenses, and an income, at least as the case stands now, of only some $38,000. That is certainly a bad enough condition of financial affairs to face.

But I pass that by for the present, and I ask in all candor and seriousness what is the value of the bonds to an amount of three millions of dollars which are going to be issued by a State which has such a show of income and outgo? I repeat the question of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), and I want that gentleman (Mr. Hovey) who says he has a thousand of his constituents up in Storey County too poor to pay a poll-tax, and yet who treats this three million loan as a trifle, and this interest of $210,000 a year, as the merest trifle in the world, to show me where the capitalists who are going to buy these bonds are to look for their redemption? I want these gentlemen who despise this contemptible loan so much, to tell me how they can sell bonds, made payable from the proceeds of your public lands? Where are the capitalists who will buy them? Where are you going to find the basis to make the bonds of any worth? I say it seems to me that if you loan the bonds the railroad company will get them, and sell them for what they will bring, and I think twenty-five per cent. would be a very high estimate, so that the whole three millions of bonds would only benefit the railroad to the extent of $750,000. I think that would be a very large and liberal estimate indeed.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman from Washoe allow me to suggest that, as the section has been amended, the bonds are to be issued only for $50,000 for each mile as the road progresses, in this State. And he should take into account the increase in value of the property, as the road progresses.

Mr. NOURSE. I did not understand that that amendment was adopted. I will withdraw all objection if that is the state of things. If the bonds are not to be issued until the railroad crosses the Sierra Nevada Mountains, I will withdraw all objections.

Mr. DELONG. That is the way it stands.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well, then, I withdraw all objection on my part.

Mr. DELONG. And the speech, also?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, I will take back the speech, also; but let us have the section read, so as to know what we are doing.

The SECRETARY read the section as heretofore amended, as follows:—

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association, or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes; provided, that the State may issue bonds, or secure the payment of the principal or interest, or both principal and interest of bonds, to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, in sums not exceeding fifty thousand dollars per mile for each mile of road actually constructed within the boundaries of the State of Nevada, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company which shall first complete a railroad to the State line connecting this State with the navigable waters of California, or with the navigable waters of the Mississippi River, but no law to issue bonds shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people at a special election to be called for that purpose; provided, further, that the sums derived from the proceeds of the sales of the public lands granted to this State for internal improvement purposes, shall be set apart towards a sinking-fund for the extinguishment of the principal of said bonds; and provided, further, that a special tax shall be levied to secure the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds.

Mr. NOURSE. I suggest one further alteration, out of abundant precaution, and that is, to say that the bonds shall be issued to the railroad "which shall first have reached the State line," instead of "which shall first complete a railroad to the State line."

Mr. DELONG. What is the difference?

Mr. NOURSE. Because otherwise the bonds may be granted to some company upon a condition that is to be the one which shall thereafter get there first. I will make it as a motion to amend by substituting those words.

Mr. FITCH. I will second the motion.

Mr. WARWICK. Am I right in understanding that the aid which we are now proposing to give, provided the people so vote, is only to be given to that portion of the road which is to be constructed within the boundaries of our own State?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the language employed, certainly; that is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I can only say, if that be the case, that, without impugning the motives of any gentleman, I certainly admire the liberality of those members who propose to give just nothing at all to aid this railroad company which is now struggling to reach us on our western borders. It is provided that if that company will construct thirty miles or sixty miles within our borders, then it shall receive this aid, leaving them, sir, to cross these mountain barriers, one of the most tremendous pieces of engineering that has ever yet been undertaken to be compassed by human genius, without any assistance on our part. It is there that they need the aid, while crossing that mountain barrier, and not within our own State. When this work was first proposed in the national Congress, some of the ablest engineers, men of large experience in that branch of science, stood appalled at the tremendous difficulties and the magnificence of the enterprise, and by many of them the work was pronounced to be utterly impossible. Now we see this railroad company rapidly approaching towards the western boundaries of our State, but the barrier still remains between us, and they now appeal for aid to enable them to overcome it. But gentlemen say: "O, let us hold back! Do not give them any aid, and they will struggle through. Do not give them anything; keep your hands on your pockets, and they will work their way through somehow." And as a warning example, we are referred to the oft-repeated instance of the ruin of Minnesota. In the most ingenuous and honest manner, which is a part of the nature of the gentleman from Minnesota—I beg pardon; from Washoe—he afterwards tells you that though that State had ruined herself by lending aid to railroads, yet that she had never paid a dollar either of interest or principal on her railroad bonds. [Laughter.] Is that the way States are ruined? I do not see exactly where or how, under such circumstances, the ruin is to ensue.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Probably it ruined what character the State had.

Mr. WARWICK. But she had no character to lose. She was like the man who was once asked by another to give his signature to a note of hand, and replied: "O, certainly; you can have my name if it will do you any good; it is of no service to me." It seems, according to the gentleman's account, that when her ruin did ensue, she left those whom she had inveigled into purchasing her bonds to work their way through as best they could, and never paid a dollar on those bonds. Is that what the gentleman proposes here? Does he ask us to leave this enterprise to struggle through, trusting to God Almighty alone, and saying that under no circumstances will we lend it any assistance? We are then to turn our backs upon this enterprise while it is struggling, but after it has got through, and all completed, and sixty miles further built in our own Territory, then we will come forward and give the company fifty thousand dollars a mile, at a time when they have no longer any need of our assistance. No, sir; it is not within the borders of this Territory or State that this road needs our aid; but it is in crossing this huge mountain barrier on the west of us. It is then that it needs aid, and every dollar of aid, too, that the State, and the nation, and each county through which this road shall pass, can afford to give it, to enable those who have it in charge to complete this great work.

This is no mere private or individual enterprise. It is a great national work, which is intended to bring to our midst the commerce of the East—to make this the great highway of the nations of the earth. If these gentlemen, with their narrow policy, were legislating only for to-day; if they could not look beyond their own counties, beyond their narrow valleys with mountains and rocky barriers all around, shutting them out from human society beyond, I would not blame them for the course they are pursuing; but, sir, I trust in God that this State has a future,—that we are legislating not for this day or this hour, but that when we shall have passed away, and when our children's children are no more, then this great Pacific Railroad shall continue to stand a monument of human wisdom and of the greatness of the age in which we live. I regard this as the grandest enterprise which has been undertaken in this age. It is one which has commanded the respectful attention of the whole civilized world. To effect similar purposes the energies of great nations have been directed for years. See what efforts have been made to cut a canal across the Isthmus of Darien—a work which presents almost insurmountable obstacles. Now here we have the opportunity, if we will but avail ourselves of it, of making our own land the great highway of the nations. It is for this reason that I am in favor of lending our aid to this work, not as an individual enterprise, for the benefit of a few, but as a great work undertaken by a great people, carried through in a great age, and finished by a great nation.

The gentleman from Washoe has most ingeniously woven together a quantity of figures and statistics, and on the top of the pyramid which he has thus reared, he has placed the cost of this enterprise. We have been told that five years ago this Territory was almost a howling wilderness; but five years hence what will it be? Does the gentleman imagine that our mines are all exhausted or depleted; that there is neither silver nor gold left in them? Have not we reason to anticipate that there will be a vast increase in their production?—that the same influences which have built a great city on the side of yonder mountain, and scattered flourishing villages all over the plains around us, will continue to operate? Have not we reason to believe that five years hence our population and our wealth will be doubled? Is the gentleman appalled by the fall in Gould & Curry? Does his mind dwell upon the fluctuations of Savage? Or are his apprehensions aroused by the low prices of hay? I hope we shall not be influenced by such considerations. Unappalled by the present, let us look to the future, and not imagine that we are legislating only for to-day. This sum of three millions of dollars now looming up so hugely before the affrighted imagination of the gentleman from Washoe, before we shall be called upon to pay it may seem to be but as a drop in the wide ocean. I hope that before another year shall have passed away our population will have been doubled, and I think we have every reason to expect that it will be. The new discoveries which have been made in our midst are such as to justify ten times our present amount of population. I think we need not shrink in the least from authorizing this loan of three millions, and I think the justice and liberality of this Convention will so determine this question. Let us, at least, allow the Legislature to act hereafter in such a manner as the then existing circumstances of the State shall warrant. I hope we shall not hamper and hem in this appropriation in such a way as to render it utterly worthless to the enterprise which we seek to aid.

Mr. FITCH. I start, Mr. Chairman, with the proposition that in giving aid to the Pacific Railroad, it is best that it should be given liberally and effectively. I am disposed to give to the managers of that enterprise all the aid possible, and also to allow them to expend that aid either in California or in this State, as they deem best. But the more I think of it—the more facts I hunt up in relation to it—the firmer becomes my conviction that the proposition as amended by my colleague, (Mr DeLong,) which is the form in which the proviso is now before the Committee—is the one which should prevail. Now, it is true that we should extend aid to the Pacific Railroad. I have always been in favor of that. And I believe, also, that we should give it as much aid as possible, or, at all events, as much as we can afford. But I was disposed, nevertheless, to accept of this amendment; and I am surprised that the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) should make any opposition to it, or should favor the idea of our giving money to this enterprise without restricting its use, or specifying, in some manner, where it is to be used.

Now, sir, I have in my hand a summary of "An Act to aid in the construction of the Pacific Railroad," which was passed at the session of the California Legislature, of which both the gentleman from Lander and myself had the honor to be members. And here I will ask, if the construction of this road is to prove, as it will prove, to be an immense benefit to the people of Nevada, what benefit will it prove to be to the people of California? If it will enhance the wealth of Virginia City, and Carson, and the various other cities and towns of Nevada, what will it do for San Francisco, and Sacramento? If it will do so much for the State of Nevada, what will it not do for the State of California? We shall be, for many years hereafter, as we have been heretofore, to some extent, dependent upon California; and the wealth which we produce will, a large proportion of it, at least, be poured into the lap of California, by means of this railroad; so that the railroad will be nearly as great, if not a greater benefit to her, than to ourselves. Now, in consideration of this promised benefit, what has the State of California done for the Pacific Railroad? Why, sir, this act provides that whenever the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall have completed not less than twenty consecutive miles, for the conveyance and transportation of passengers and freights, the road to be supplied with culverts and all other appurtenances of a first class railroad—when all this is done and completed, and the twenty miles of railroad ready to go into operation—then the State of California will give $10,000 a mile. It provides that in the construction of this railroad from the city of Sacramento to the State line dividing California from Nevada, when the railroad shall be completed from the city of Sacramento, through a distance of not less than one hundred miles, then the company shall have this $10,000 per mile, which is just one million of dollars altogether, and this for all that California portion of the road—the difficult portion which the railroad is now struggling to pass. Now, what does the State of Nevada propose to do? Why, our Constitutional Convention proposes here to adopt a provision authorizing our first, or any subsequent Legislature, to give $50,000 per mile for railroads to be built within our own boundaries; which is just five times the amount that California gives.

It may, very probably, be urged that California could not do more, because her Constitution prohibited her doing more. Well, sir; amendments have recently been adopted to the Constitution of that State, and it would have been very easy for them, if they had chosen to do it, to place such an amendment in their organic law as to enable them to give three, five, or ten millions in aid of this enterprise; and where we can afford to give three millions, California can certainly afford to give ten. Now, sir, I believe that not only for the sake of our own interests, but also for the sake of manifesting that liberality to which the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) appeals, we really ought to extend our aid to this struggling road which is trying so hard to get over the mountains to us. But we must bear in mind that this road is already bountifully aided. It has already $10,000 dollars per mile from the State of California, and $48,000 dollars per mile from the General Government, (and I believe that has since been doubled, making it now $96,000), and it is also liberally aided from Nevada County, Placer County, and San Francisco. It certainly has an abundance of aid already, and while I admit that we ought to aid this railroad, so far as it is in our power to do so, yet, I say we should be just before we are generous—just to our constituents before we are generous to California, the people of which State will be as greatly benefited by the road as we can be. I find that the logical deductions from my own premises are bringing me to conclusions which I would not have accepted one week ago; and I tell you that in giving three millions of dollars to any road, we are acting very generously. It is true that we should be just to ourselves at the same time, but we should be more so by prescribing that the aid we give shall be expended within our own limits. If there is a community on the face of God's earth to which this railroad will be a benefit—if there is a community that will grow rich by it—that community is San Francisco. It will bring her up to a position like that of Tyre and Sidon, and her merchant princes will become the honored of the earth. She will be next only to New York in mercantile wealth and grandeur. And yet, San Francisco is quibbling, and fighting, and getting out injunctions over the miserable few thousands of dollars voted by her people as her appropriation in aid of this road. I think the people of Nevada will be generous and liberal if they give $50,000 per mile, when California only gives $10,000. I am in favor of this railroad, and I believe that the people of Nevada will be able to give this aid; but I want it provided that the entire amount of it shall be expended in our own limits.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman is mistaken as to the amount given by the State of California. He refers to the law of 1863; but another law was passed last winter, giving the road a very large sum. The gentleman was a member of the California Legislature in 1863, but since that time another session has been held, at which a very large appropriation was made in aid of this enterprise. I forget the amount, but I think it was two millions of dollars.

Mr. FITCH. Then have not they had enough money given them?

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman is also in error in regard to the increase of the amount granted by Congress. I have just received a positive statement on that subject, to the effect that they did not get any increase of the amount of the Federal aid.

Mr. HAWLEY. The latest dispatches state that Congress gives double the amount of land, but no more in bonds.

Mr. FITCH. But the first mortgage may be made by the Railroad Company, taking precedence of the Government mortgage.

Mr. DELONG. As one of those amendments which the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) denounces is mine, I suppose I am called upon to justify myself against the charge of meanness in regard to the Pacific Railroad. Now, it strikes me that it is not mean to give $50,000 to the mile, when that amount will build every mile of the railroad to be built in the State—when we offer to father the whole cost—free, gratis, of building this railroad for the distance of sixty miles, as soon as it shall have reached us. It seems to me that, for a little four-year-old people, with no resources to depend upon, such a donation is a long ways from meanness. And when we take the whole of our revenues to be derived from the public lands, as we do by the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) and devote them to this object, we give the railroad company a double guarantee that the bonds shall be paid. In other words, we give the whole of the land; and not content with that, we tax the people for the residue. I know the gentleman does not use the language in an offensive sense; I know that he does not intend to charge the people of Nevada with meanness; but still, that is the effect of the language of the gentleman—that it is mean narrow-mindedness, which underlies a provision of this kind. I say it is far from that, when I am willing to mortgage myself, and the constituents I represent, to pay the whole cost of the railroad for sixty miles, whenever it shall come within our limits; a railroad, too, that promises to pay its projectors, whenever they do get it to our borders, more munificently than any other similar enterprise in the world—and they know it. It is a company aided and encouraged by the Federal Government, and by the people of the whole nation; aided and assisted by the State of California, by various counties in that State, and by the voices, the hopes, and the warmest wishes of the people of the entire Pacific coast. Such a company will not think us mean, when they hear that we give them $50,000 per mile for every mile they build in our borders to the extent of sixty miles. I am willing to leave that matter to the good sense of the proprietors, or rather, the projectors of that road, and let them say whether or not this donation—with all the security which we give for its payment—is a liberal one; and I feel well assured that we will not be charged by them with meanness.

It is strange to me that gentlemen will insist upon it that we are hostile to this enterprise. I have said, and I repeat it, and my assertion stands as good as any other member's, that there is not a man within the hearing of my voice, nor in the wide world, who is more anxious for the completion of that road than I am, or who foresees grander or more magnificent results naturally to flow from it, when it shall be completed. It will bind us together, indissolubly, as a nation. It will be of incalculable advantage to us in case of a foreign war. If a hostile nation should seek our coast, it would bring us millions of freemen from the eastern States, coming to our defence with bayonets glistening, over the mountain crests. They might be shoulder to shoulder with us almost upon a day's notice. I see the importance of all this; but I do not believe in giving away money which our people have so hardly earned—money raised by over-taxing our people—to be applied towards building a railroad outside of the limits of our State. I believe that would be unwise, and I believe, further, that it would plunge us into a debt of three millions of dollars, in return for which, we should receive no considerable benefit. It would not help the road to an amount exceeding $750,000, which would be, comparatively, but a mere trifle; while, if we grant our aid after the road reaches our borders at the rate of $50,000 per mile, our bonds will be worth then almost dollar for dollar, and the road would receive the full benefit.

Mr. WARWICK. I believe it was the gentleman from Storey who proposed what seems to me to be the death-blow of this railroad clause, that is, that the rate of interest shall not exceed seven per cent. per annum.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman is the most mistaken man in the world, for I voted against it.

Mr. WARWICK. Was it adopted?

Mr. DELONG. It was, and so stands now.

Mr. WARWICK. Then, with the leave of the gentleman, I would say, that our Territorial bonds heretofore issued are drawing not less than ten per cent. interest, and the Ormsby County bonds fifteen per cent. or thereabouts, if I am not mistaken—twelve per cent. at least—and yet it is almost impossible to raise money on those bonds, even at such rates. I therefore look upon this provision as entirely worthless, although I do not undertake to impugn gentlemen's motives at all.

Mr. DELONG. I will only say that the rate of interest seems to me very fair, as the time is far off, perhaps, when the bonds will be issued, and inasmuch as the Legislature is to issue only $50,000 at a time. It strikes me that when we have a railroad building across our State, and we appropriate $50,000 at a time in aid of it, our financial condition at that time will be such, or at least promises to be such, that those bonds may be fairly negotiated, as fast as they are issued, even bearing interest at the rate of only seven per cent. per annum. If, on the other hand, they are issued now, when we have no railroad and no resources to rely upon, I admit that the rate of interest would have to be greatly increased in order to command any price in the market, and seven per cent. would, in such a case, be but a niggardly rate of interest. I am willing to vote for the proviso as it now stands, including the rate of interest at seven per cent., because I believe that by the time the railroad is built, by means of the sales of the public lands, and a comparatively light tax in addition, perhaps, we can raise the amount without difficulty, and our bonds will be worth dollar for dollar in the market. I hope so at least, although I may be over sanguine.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend the proviso as it now stands, by striking out the word "seven," where it precedes the words "per cent.," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ten."

[Mr. FITZ in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, sir, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. While the difference between seven per cent. and ten per cent. could be of comparatively little value to those who received the bonds, yet when the aggregate amount of such bonds shall have been issued, it will so much more increase the burden upon the people of the State. It will require an additional tax upon the people in each and every year of $90,000. Those who are familiar with the financial condition and financial history of California, are tolerably well advised of the fact that in the early period of that State, bonds were issued, bearing interest at the rate of three per cent. a month; there was a time when those bonds could not be sold for more than fifty cents on the dollar; and sir, at a later period, but before the State had become assured in her financial policy the interest on the public debt had become an enormous burden. The bonds of the State were then issued to the amount of $3,900,000, covering its outstanding indebtedness, and bearing a rate of interest of seven per cent., and within eighteen months from the time they were issued, they were worth in the money markets of the United States, and were selling in the city of New York, for ninety-five cents on the dollar; and sometime afterwards, about the commencement of the war three years ago, before the financial reverses and the changes in the currency at the East, the bonds of California commanded a premium in the city of New York, although they bore interest only at seven per cent.

Now, if we were to proceed solely upon the basis of the taxable property which we have to-day, and upon our resources or probable revenues, then I am free to admit that ten, or even twenty per cent. would not secure the sale of these bonds for their face value; but we do not act upon that basis, nor anticipate any such result. At the time when it will be incumbent on the people, through their Legislature, to lend aid to this great and important work, I feel confident that we shall have such an amount of taxable property, and other resources, of a character to insure the prompt payment of those bonds, as they shall mature, and payment of the interest on them from year to year as it falls due, so as to make them equal in the market, or nearly so, to their face value. Therefore, as the proposed increased rate of interest can be of no substantial benefit to any one, except those into whose hands the bonds ultimately fall, I hope that no such increase will be made. It would be giving an additional argument to the opponents of a State Government, which we can now deprive them of, and at the same time we shall be saving to our people the burden of $90,000 a year of interest, which otherwise they will have to bear when the bonds shall be issued. It would be of no benefit, no possible advantage to this railroad enterprise, and at the same time it would be an unnecessary hardship on the tax-payers of the State. I hope the rate of interest will be permitted to remain at seven per cent. as in the original proposition.

Monday.]

BANKS—JOHNSON.

[July 11.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Warwick, and it was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Nourse, to strike out all after the words "educational or charitable purposes," (being the entire proviso relative to the railroad), and it was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

MUNICIPAL LOANS.

Section 10 was read, as follows:—

Sec. 10. No county, city, town, or other municipal corporation, shall become a stockholder in any joint-stock company, corporation or association whatever, or loan its credit in aid of such company, corporation, or association.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend the section by adding the following words—"except railroad corporations." It may be well enough to make some restrictions upon the power of counties, cities, and towns, in the way of their lending their credit, though I very much doubt the policy, and more especially do I doubt it in these matters, so far as railroads are concerned. For instance, on the other side of the mountains we have the case of the railroad from San Francisco to San Jose, which I think would not have been built up to this time, and probably not for many years to come, without the aid of the counties through which it passes. It is a work of very great importance to those counties, and that is one case among many which might be mentioned where aid of this kind should be permitted to be rendered. There was very strenuous opposition to the passage of the Acts of the Legislature by which that aid was secured; but now, after a very fair and thorough experience in that particular, I think it would be difficult to find a man in those counties which aided the railroad, who would seriously question the propriety of giving that aid. I refer to this case only because it happens to be a matter within my own knowledge and experience. I believe it would be bad policy in our State to place any restrictions upon towns or counties in that particular. It often happens that a town or county is deeply interested in some railroad within its borders, and it is not unfrequently the case that an enterprise of this magnitude cannot be entered upon with success by individuals, because it may be impossible to get capitalists to aid it in the way of private investments. It may be an undertaking in which everybody feels a deep interest, and in which everybody would be willing to invest, provided everybody else would come to its aid in proportion to their means; but still, upon the principle that what is everybody's business is nobody's business, men do not come forward to subscribe, and so the enterprise languishes. I think, in such a case, the people should have the privilege of deciding, as they have done very properly and successfully in the State of California, in many instances, whether they will generally and unitedly go into it, and by a system of taxation, imposing the burden equally upon all, secure the construction of a work which is going to benefit every person in the community.

In connection with one of those railroad enterprises in California which have been carried through successfully, I remember a circumstance, which I will mention as an illustration of this truth. I was one of those who very earnestly supported the issuing of the bonds of San Francisco in aid of that road. It so happened that many of my friends began to cherish feelings of hostility towards me, on that account. They wrote me letters, they telegraphed to me, and they did all they could to induce me to change my course. However, I voted and labored for the measure, and when I went home, some of those friends would scarcely speak to me. They thought I had done a monstrous act, and would scarcely exchange a word with me when we met in the street. But, as luck would have it, they all owned more or less of property along the line of that road, and in less than six months time, they were benefited by the increase in the value of that property to the extent of nearly one-fourth of the entire amount of the bonds issued by the county. Now, I do not know that many instances of that kind would be likely to occur here, but I do know that no work of that kind can be constructed in a county without benefiting some of the citizens of that county to a very great extent, and all, to a greater or less degree. All I ask is, that the people, in such cases, shall have the right of deciding the question for themselves, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that the gentleman modify his amendment so as to read, "except railroad corporations, companies, or associations."

Mr. BANKS. I accept the amendment.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment as modified, and it was adopted.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

The Committee of the Whole next proceeded to the consideration of Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt.

THE FISCAL YEAR.

Section I was read, as follows:—

SECTION 1. The fiscal year shall commence January 1st.

No amendment being offered the section was adopted.

Section 2 was read.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend Section I, by striking out "January," and inserting "May."

The CHAIRMAN. That section having been adopted, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DELONG. I will make that motion, then. I think May 1st is the best time to commence the fiscal year. January 1st is about the most impracticable time in the year.

Mr. HOVEY. This fixes the fiscal year for the revenue department, and it may, perhaps, be deemed desirable by the Legislature to change the time hereafter, as it has been changed within the last year from March to May. That change was made by the last Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will second the amendment merely that we may hear the reasons given why the time should be changed from the first of January. I suppose there must be some reason for it. The Legislature has changed the time from March to May; but now I understand it is suggested by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) that January is an inconvenient period to reach the State Capital.

Mr. HOVEY. There are other reasons, and I think that our Treasurer would be able to give them more fully, perhaps, than I could. Certainly, in the collection of our revenues it might make a great difference, because there are certain seasons of the year when we have twice as much personal property in our Territory as we have at other seasons. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) who has paid attention to this question, and should be inclined to defer to his judgment upon it. If we leave it to the Legislature, they can make the change, if necessary, but as the section now stands, we fix the time irrevocably.

Mr. KINKEAD. Under the existing revenue laws, I think it would be better to have the fiscal year commence at a later period in the year—say the first of May, or even July. The great bulk of the revenue is now collected during January and February, and it would be satisfactory to the Legislature, perhaps, to have the fiscal year commence later in the season, though I do not know as it is really a matter of very great importance at what particular date the fiscal year does commence.

Mr. FRIZELL. Probably it would be difficult for any person who has not been connected in some manner with the collection of the revenue, or with the operation of the revenue laws, to say why the first day of any one month in the year should not be as good as any other for the beginning of the fiscal year; nevertheless, the remarks made by my colleague, (Mr. Hovey,) that there is a vast difference in different seasons of the year, in the amount of property to be assessed in the several counties, is undoubtedly correct. For instance, if the fiscal year commences on the first day of January, it will be obligatory to commence assessing during January, and the law will give the assessors only eight months to complete the work, and deliver over the assessment-rolls to the County Auditors. Then if the assessment is made during the winter months, gentlemen are probably aware that the amount of property to be assessed would not amount to nearly as much as it would during other months in the year. Another thing; if we commence assessing in the month of January, and deliver the assessment-rolls the first day of September, taxes will become due under the revenue law, about the first of October, and consequently will require to be paid, under the law, in October and November. Taking into consideration the time when the taxes must be collected, under the law, my private opinion is—and I am pretty positive on that point, from having been connected with the revenue department for the last three years—that this question had better be left to the Legislature altogether.

Mr. JOHNSON. I confess that I have some diffidence about speaking on this subject, of which, apparently, others must have more knowledge than I possess. Each of the gentlemen who have addressed the Committee have occupied, and do now occupy, such positions, that it seems as if they must understand the matter thoroughly. But I take as my text, if you choose to so consider it, the suggestion of my colleague, the Territorial Treasurer, (Mr. Kinkead,) that is to say, that the laws can readily be so changed as to assimilate with the fiscal year as established in the Constitution. That being conceded, unless there be some good reason for a change, I hope none will be made. The revenue laws of the Territory should, and undoubtedly will, under this Constitution be continued, until they are changed or modified by the State Legislature, and I do not now see any reason why we cannot as well fix the fiscal year here, as to leave it to the Legislature. I believe it is usual to fix the beginning of the fiscal year on the first day of the year, and I do not now remember any exception to the rule that the beginning of the fiscal year is fixed in the Constitution. In the State of California the fiscal year is prescribed as commencing on the first day of July, and I can speak with some degree of personal knowledge of the difficulties which we have had to encounter in that State, on account of that provision. I refer to the assembling of the Legislature, and to the out-going and in-coming of the officers of the State Government, which takes place about the first of January. Now, what is the effect of a provision like this? Frequently the Executives of that State have been under the necessity of anticipating the time when the County Treasurers are required by law to make their settlements, and to require them to make them two or three months in advance, in order that members of the Legislature might be able to receive their mileage, otherwise they would have been without a dollar with which to pay their board bills.

[July 11.]

Mr. DELONG. They were often without a dollar, as it was.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, doubtless, that was so, but that was probably the fault of the legislators themselves, rather than of the fiscal year. Now, these revenue laws can be made to assimilate to the fiscal year's commencing on the first of January, as well as if it began on the first of July, and, I think, even better. It occurs to me that there is ample time and opportunity to arrange that matter. Then it may be provided that the taxes shall be assessed during that period of the year when, ordinarily, the greatest amount of taxable property is to be found—that is to say, the autumn months—and so the assessors would be enabled to secure the taxes upon that kind of property, to wit, personal property. There would still be ample time to have the assessment-rolls examined and corrected, and placed in the hands of the collectors, so that the great mass of the taxes would be collected before the first day of January. I think my colleague (Mr. Kinkead) will agree with me in that respect. Another argument which I think deserves some consideration is, that it would rather facilitate the collection of the taxes. I can see many good reasons why the section should not be changed, but should rather be left as it is now, commencing the fiscal year on the first day of January. Then when we come to adjust the accounts at the end going of one administration, and the in-coming of another, we can see how those accounts stand. When the fiscal year is coeval with the life of the administration—with its tenure of office—we can more easily approximate to the receipts and expenditures of each administration: while, if you carry the fiscal year along from one administration two or three months into the next, you necessarily get the accounts of their respective receipts and expenditures somewhat confused and mixed, so that the people cannot determine as to the state of the accounts and the relative economy exhibited by the respective administrations. The accounts become so confused that it is impossible for one of ordinary experience to comprehend and illustrate the various inquiries which may be propounded in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the question was upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which Section 1 was adopted.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope the vote will be reconsidered, for the reason that if the fiscal year commences on the first day of January, gentlemen will see that the collection of taxes will necessarily fall within the months of October and November. Now we have all lived in California as well as in this Territory, some a greater and some a less amount of time—I have for the last twelve years—and we know that that is a time of the year when we are called upon for money more than any other. We are then laying in our winter supplies, either as individuals or as merchants, traders, or miners. Therefore, if the section is reconsidered, I hope it may be amended by inserting the word May, instead of January. Then the collections will come in January and February, and we shall have time enough to recuperate after our necessary expenses in the fall. We shall be enabled to get together money enough to pay our taxes.

The question was taken upon the motion to reconsider, and upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 9; noes, 11.

Section 2 was again read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the State for each fiscal year; and whenever the expenses of any year shall exceed the income, the Legislature shall provide for levying a tax sufficient with other sources of income, to pay the deficiency, as well as the estimated expenses of such ensuing year or two years.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted.

LIMITATION OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Section three was read as follows:—

SEC. 3. For the purpose of enabling the State to transact its business upon a cash basis, from its organization, or for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, the State may contract public debts; but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars; provided, that the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII, of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for. Every such debt shall be authorized by law for some purpose or purposes, to be distinctly specified therein, and every such law shall provide for levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest semi-annually, and the principal within twenty years from the passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of said taxes to the payment of said principal and interest; and such appropriation shall not be repealed, nor the taxes be postponed or diminished, until the principal and interest of said debts shall have been wholly paid. Every contract of indebtedness entered into or assumed by or on behalf of the State, when all its debts and liabilities amount to said sum before-mentioned, shall be void and of no effect, except in cases of money borrowed to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the State in time of war, or if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to ask what would be the consequence if the State debt amounted to three hundred thousand dollars at the time of an invasion or insurrection? Could the State then raise money in order to repel such invasion, or put down such insurrection, notwithstanding this section?

Mr. COLLINS. I think so.

Monday,]

DELONG—JOHNSON—WARWICK.

[July 11.

Mr. DELONG. Let us look at it and see what must be the construction. It says: "but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars; provided"—and here follows the railroad arrangement, which says, that that three millions loan may be made, and that it shall not be considered a part of this aggregate indebtedness of the State. I think we shall have to amend this first part of the section by incorporating the words, "except for public defense;" or we may say, "except as hereinafter provided." That would remove any doubt of the legality of a loan negotiated by the State in a case of invasion or insurrection, though its debt might have already reached the limit of three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest whether the transposition of some of the language preceding the proviso would not reach the difficulty, better than to insert the words the gentleman suggests after the words, "three hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; I think it would read better as I have proposed it, at the end, after "three hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. JOHNSON. Then you want to strike out the words, "or for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses," and let the words "except for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, as hereinafter mentioned," follow the words, "three hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. DELONG. I think we had better include the next section, and let it read, "except for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, as mentioned in this and the following section."

Mr. JOHNSON. The word "hereinafter" will include that.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; that will do. My idea is, that capitalists are very careful when they are loaning their money, and when you put into your Constitution a provision affecting the legality of such a loan, they will scrutinize it very closely before they will make any loan. Let us hear the section read as it will stand with the amendment.

The Secretary read the section as proposed to be amended, as follows:—

SEC. 3. For the purpose of enabling the State to transact its business upon a cash basis from its organization, the State may contract public debts; but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, except for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses as hereinafter mentioned; provided, that the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII. of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for. Every such debt shall be authorized by law for some purpose or purposes, to be distinctly specified therein, and every such law shall provide for levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest semi-annually, and the principal within twenty years from the passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of said taxes to the payment of said principal and interest; and such appropriation shall not be repealed, nor the taxes be postponed or diminished, until the principal and interest of said debts shall have been wholly paid. Every contract of indebtedness entered into, or assumed by or on behalf of the State, when all its debts and liabilities amount to said sum before mentioned, shall be void and of no effect, except in cases of money borrowed to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the State in time of war, or if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendments being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

ASSUMPTION OF MUNICIPAL DEBTS.

Section 4 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 4. The State shall never assume the debts of any county, town, city, or other corporation whatever, unless such debts have been created to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the State in time of war.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think an additional amendment is necessary here. I will therefore move to amend by striking out the words, "defend the State in time of war," and inserting in lieu of them, the words, "or provide for the public defense."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

STATE SCRIP.

Section 5 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 5. No scrip, certificate, or other evidence of State debt whatsoever, shall be issued, for the payment of which there are no funds in the treasury, except for such debts as are authorized by the third section of this article.

Mr. WARWICK. I will move to amend, by striking that section out entirely. I will give my reasons for it. There was a provision similar to this among the laws of the State of California, but it was found to work a very great hardship. When there was no money in the treasury it was impossible, under this provision, to issue any certificate or acknowledgment of the indebtedness of the State, and the consequence was, in the case of members of the Legislature who came to the State Capital to serve the people, that although the indebtedness was incurred by the State, yet not being able to receive any acknowledgment of that indebtedness, they were unable to negotiate it. Although the debt was valid, yet having no certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, the individual members were unable to raise anything upon it, and it was therefore found necessary, at the last session of the California Legislature, in which I had the honor to serve, to abrogate that provision. There is no good reason why, if the State incurs indebtedness, it should not issue the acknowledgment to the creditor, whether the money to pay it be in the treasury or not. The creditor should at least have some acknowledgment of

HAWLEY—WARWICK—DELONG—TOZER—BANKS.

the indebtedness of the State in his hands or in his pocket. If, in the case of a private individual, an indebtedness has accrued, he has no hesitation in giving to his creditor an acknowledgment, so that it shall stand against him and be negotiable in the market. For that reason it was deemed necessary and expedient, by the assembled wisdom of California, to abrogate that provision of law. I know, if I may refer to my own experience in this connection, that that action of the Legislature had a very healthy effect, because when we had no warrants for our pay we could not negotiate at all, but with the warrants in our hands, we could go into the exchange and negotiate readily.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman misunderstands the provision. As I understand it, it only provides that a claim which is not authorized by the third section of this article, or elsewhere in the Constitution, shall not be allowed, or scrip shall not be issued for it. If the State incurs indebtedness authorized by this third section, the gentleman cannot suppose that the proper authorities will hesitate for a moment to issue the scrip or certificate of actual indebtedness. But, on the other hand, if any indebtedness is contracted by the State or its agents, outside of that which is authorized to be contracted by Section 3, or elsewhere in the Constitution, even if the scrip were issued it could not be paid. I was about to say that it would seem to be hardly worth while to make this provision at all, as it is merely a matter of extra precaution. I will merely say, however, that it would be useless to issue any evidence of such indebtedness, for it would have no force or effect, as it could not legally be collected in any manner. And furthermore, if such a case should ever arise, it is entirely probable that the only means of obtaining payment, would be by special legislative action, or some similar course. I think the gentleman from Lander labors under a misapprehension as to the effect of the section. I hope his amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WARWICK. I will endeavor to explain my view of the matter. When the aggregate indebtedness of the State reaches three hundred thousand dollars, then, upon the convening of the Legislature, (to make a practical illustration), the Controller would be bound by this provision not to issue any evidence of indebtedness to the members of the Legislature. I am only guided in this matter by the light of experience—I believe, in fact, that the gentleman now occupying the Chair (Mr. Fitch) has had similar experience as a member of the Legislature of California.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the Chair, being a capitalist, never had any occasion to negotiate. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARWICK. I stand corrected.

Mr. DELONG [in his seat.] And awfully astonished! [Laughter.]

Mr. WARWICK. The Chairman's present statement does not tally exactly with something he once told me in that connection, which, however, I will not repeat here. I say that under this provision the Controller is not authorized to issue his warrant for the indebtedness; so the consequence is, that every member of the Legislature, especially those coming from a distant part of the State, finds himself, as our chairman said on a former occasion, in a state of impecuniosity.

Mr. DELONG. O, they can get the Sergeant-at-Arms' scrip.

Mr. WARWICK. But that is not like the Controller's warrants. I think I am not mistaken about this matter, and I think my other able associate in the California Legislature, the other gentleman from Storey County, (Mr. DeLong,) will bear witness that in more than one instance he has been compelled to negotiate.

The question was taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. Warwick, to strike out the whole section, and upon a division it was agreed to—ayes, 16; noes, 6.

TAXATION.

The Committee of the Whole next proceeded to the consideration of Article VII, entitled Taxation.

Section 1 was read, as follows:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, including mines and mining property; excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes.

Mr. TOZER. I move to amend the section, by striking out all after the words, "both real and personal."

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend, by striking out only the words "including mines and mining property."

Mr. TOZER. I accept that amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I propose, as an amendment to the section, to insert, instead of the words proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Storey, the words, "provided, that in the taxation of mines, the proceeds only shall be taxed." Let those words be inserted at the end, so that the section will read thus:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes; provided, that in the taxation of mines, the proceeds only shall be taxed.

Mr. DELONG. O, strike it out altogether, and put the mines on a footing with other property: that is the best way.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask, for information, whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) is a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) as modified by the other gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong.)

Monday,]

JOHNSON—HAWLEY—BANKS—COLLINS—HOVEY—DELONG—HAINES.

[July 11.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is an amendment which proposes to add to the section, and consequently it takes precedence of a motion to strike out, although it is to be regarded as an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Chair understand that that amendment is properly before the Convention?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) is under consideration.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Humboldt, as to his object in offering his amendment. I wish to ask him whether, under the language of the section providing for the taxation of all real and personal property, he thinks the actual value of the improvements of mines are to be considered as legitimate subjects of taxation? For instance, what I mean by the actual value of the improvements is the amount which has been expended in the operations connected with the opening and the arrangement of mines, like the Gould & Curry, for example, and other mines, to such an extent that they can be worked. Is that expenditure to be reckoned as a part of the improvements? In other words, is the expense for tunneling, timbering, chambering, and all the other works of a first-class mine, to be reckoned as a portion of the value of the improvements? I wish to know if that is the view which the gentleman from Humboldt entertains, and if I am satisfied of that—if the amendment covers that ground—I will not occupy the time of the Convention with any argument in favor of it.

Mr. BANKS. I suppose that under this amendment the mines will occupy about the same position here that they do in California, and the improvements thereon will be taxed as other property. My further answer to the gentleman's inquiry is contained in the language of the amendment, that "the proceeds only shall be taxed."

Mr. COLLINS. Gross, or net?

Mr. BANKS. That question of gross and net I propose to leave to the Legislature, and for the reason that gross proceeds do not continue for any considerable length of time after it is found that net proceeds do not exist.

Mr. COLLINS. How are you going to get at the gross proceeds, when the Gould & Curry declares over two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in dividends, and returns its gross proceeds at only seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars? How is that to be determined?

Mr. HOVEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think it has been a little over four millions for the last year.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest to the gentleman from Humboldt to incorporate the word "net" in his amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I prefer not to incorporate that word, if it can be avoided, for the reason that I wish to leave the question, which is a difficult one, to the Legislature.

Mr. DELONG. It will be an unending source of wrangling. If this amendment is adopted in that form, each succeeding Legislature that meets will be divided in opinion on this subject. Every miner in the Legislature will insist that the Constitution intended "net proceeds," and every "cow-county" representative will contend that the Constitution meant "gross proceeds," and the question never can be satisfactorily settled. I think we ought not to shrink from our responsibilities, and leave them for others to assume, who must of necessity be powerless to settle such questions definitely. If this matter is carried into the Legislature, the discussion will be continued from year to year, and no good can grow out of it. Now let us come squarely up to our work. If we want to tax gross proceeds, let us say "gross proceeds," and if we want to tax net proceeds, let us say "net proceeds." If gross proceeds win, let gross proceeds have it; if net proceeds win, let net proceeds have it. There are hundreds of mines, the gross proceeds of which do not pay the expense of working the mines. That is the experience of any man here who has had any experience in the mines, and if you tax the gross proceeds of those mines, or even leave it a question of doubt whether or not they are to be taxed, so that their owners will fear that result, the people will bury your Constitution out of sight. You may as well tear this instrument up and go home, as to dodge this question, and submit the Constitution to the people in that shape. Now, I represent a mining constituency, and others here represent agricultural constituencies. I say, let us fight this thing out fairly; and if we do not succeed in fighting it out here, then let us go home and fight it out there. I move to amend by inserting the word "net" before the word "proceeds," in the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. BANKS. I would prefer very much indeed to have that question left to the decision of the Legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to decide that the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) is not in order, as it is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. DELONG. Well, let it come in by general consent, overlooking the point of order. I will ask a suspension of the rules, in order that I may offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order.

Mr. HAINES. I had the honor of occupying a seat in the previous Convention, in which this subject was discussed for six or seven days, and we then put in this provision as it now stands, in a form which seemed then, at least, to be generally satisfactory. Now, I find members here from Storey County, who apparently feel called upon to give us four or five hours more of discussion, upon a subject which we have already discussed until it has become absolutely a stench in the nostrils of the people.

Monday.] DE LONG—HAINES—NOURSE—STURTEVANT—FRIZELL—BANKS—FOLSOM. [July 11.]

Now, I assure gentlemen that one thing is certain—that unless our taxes can be made uniform and equal, we never can have a State Government in Nevada. That question may as well be settled at once. If our mining property has got to go untaxed, for the benefit of the few, then you never can have a State Government.

Mr. DE LONG. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, because I want to see whether we can agree or not, and, if possible, come to a conclusion on this question. Would the gentleman vote for leaving out all reference to the mines?

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman from Ormsby, our President, has a substitute which will satisfy me. There is no use of debating this question. We have some influence in this Territory, and I tell you plainly that my constituents never will consent to be taxed for a State Government, unless the tax shall be made uniform and equal. Your proposition to tax the net proceeds, if it went to the people, would never be heard of again on earth. I venture to say, if we were to adopt such a provision, that there would be found no net proceeds of the mines, if the State should last a thousand years. I am satisfied that my constituents will never submit to anything of the kind, and they have discussed the subject for weeks and months gone by.

Mr. DE LONG. That kind of talk is not going to drive me at all, because I could, if I please, retort by saying that the proceedings of the previous Convention to which the gentleman has referred, so stunk in the nostrils of the people that the people voted its action down, and very harmoniously too, there being hardly a dissenting voice.

Mr. NOURSE. I believe the gentleman from Storey proposes to amend, by providing that mines shall be taxed only on their net proceeds. Now, if he will add that farms, and saw-mills, and other property shall be taxed only on their net proceeds, there will be some degree of fairness in his proposition.

Mr. DE LONG. And lawyers' offices?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; and lawyers' offices. [Merriment.]

Mr. STURTEVANT. Now, this is where the railroad comes in, full bulge. [Laughter.] I think I can hear the whistle tooting now. And here is the opportunity for gentlemen to show their generosity. If they have any generosity, the gentlemen from the "cow counties" would like to see it just about this time. [Laughter.]

The several amendments which had been offered were again read, and also the section as it would read when amended as proposed.

Mr. FRIZELL. The question arises in my own mind, if in the taxation of the mines only the proceeds are to be taxed, whether or not that will include mining property? The Supreme Court may decide that the mines include the hoisting works over the mine—and I believe it has already been so decided in California—that if you build a mill, or hoisting works upon the mine, it becomes a part of the mine.

Mr. DE LONG. Until it is removed, it does not recede from it.

Mr. BANKS. I do not think it is liable to that construction, but, at all events, any objection on that score can be avoided by a verbal change, which I will propose here, namely, to strike out the word "mines" from the proposed amendment, so as to read, "including mining property;" then this last provision will cover the ground, and I think that will satisfy the Convention.

Mr. FRIZELL. It will satisfy me.

Mr. BANKS. I will move that amendment, or make it a part of my amendment.

Mr. DE LONG. I understand that the gentleman proposes now to offer an amendment to the language occurring in the middle of the section: is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can only be altered or modified if no objection is made.

Mr. DE LONG. Well, I will withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKS. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to indulge in any extensive speech on this subject, at this time, nor to inflict any lengthy remarks upon this Convention in regard to my amendment. I have made this modification of my amendment, suggested by the gentleman from Storey on my right, (Mr. Frizell,) because it seems to me to make more clear what I intended to express.

Mr. STURTEVANT. In order to understand the question before the Convention, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. FOLSOM. I believe the amendment is in such a shape now, that it proposes to tax mining property only. Is that the case?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir; as other property is taxed.

Mr. FOLSOM. Then I would ask, would not mining property be taxed as other property is taxed, any way, under a general law, without any necessity for a provision of this kind?

Mr. BANKS. In reply to that I wish to say, that not only in California, but in this Constitution framed by the former Convention, which we have adopted as our basis, there has always been a distinction made between mines and mining property. I propose to preserve that distinction, because I consider it a legitimate and proper distinction. Mining property is considered to embrace all the improvements on mines, and that is included with and taxed as other property is taxed. Mills, hoisting houses, and all the other property connected with mining operations, which is distinct from the mine itself, have been taxed as mining property, but the mines themselves have never been taxed. That is a distinction which I consider a very reasonable one, and it has been kept clearly in view by these words, "including mines and mining property." If the members of the former Convention had not clearly recognized that distinction they would not have used the two sets of words, but would have said "mining property" alone, or "mines" alone. So much upon that point.

Now, I claim that there should be a distinction made, in regard to taxation, between the two classes of property—if you can designate mines as property—for this reason: Property, as found in real estate—in farms, fences, town lots, and buildings—is essentially and inherently different from that kind of property which is designated under the head of mines. Let us choose an illustration, familiar to all, of the principle I have advanced. Suppose that you, Mr. Chairman, were to invest ten thousand dollars in a farm, while I at the same time invest ten thousand dollars in a mine. Now, in the ordinary course of a legitimate transaction, if you expend ten thousand dollars in addition to the amount originally paid, your farm will be worth twenty thousand dollars. It is true, the proceeds may fail for one or two years, or more, but still your property retains an inherent value, at which it may be appraised, and of which it cannot be divested by the failure of crops for one, or two, or even more years. To be sure your house or your barns may be burned down, or your fences destroyed, but these are things which may be guarded against. By means of insurance they or their value may be placed, in a considerable degree, at least, beyond the reach of danger. But how is it with my mine? If the same rule applied, my mine should be worth twenty thousand dollars also. But we find that the rule which applies in your case does not operate in regard to my mine, because we find that in a great number, if not in an absolute majority of instances of that kind, the expenditure has not really added to the value of the property, but, on the contrary, has demonstrated the fact that it is nearly if not entirely worthless. Now, sir, I claim that that shows a marked difference between these classes of property—a difference which we ought to recognize. One kind of property has an absolute, inherent value, while the other, instead of an inherent value, has only the chance of finding something of value, to constitute its valuable characteristic. That is all that can be claimed of any undeveloped mine within the borders of this Territory. It has no value except that kind of value which is connected with a lottery, to wit: the chance of obtaining something of value.

A very serious objection to classing these two interests together—the mining interest and the other property interests—in regard to securing a revenue from them, is this: that it is next to impossible to place anything like a proper value upon a mine. But you can by proper legislation secure the placing upon the statute-books of the State of such laws as will enable the State to obtain from the proceeds of the mines, gross or net, as the Legislature may choose to determine, a revenue which will be very considerable in amount. I do not suppose that there is any doubt that the Federal tax, under the recent law of Congress, will be obtained from this source. There will be really no more difficulty in determining the proceeds of a mine, whether net or gross, and certainly not in determining the gross proceeds of a mine, than in determining what amount of license should be levied upon a merchant, when all such licenses depend upon the amount of monthly or quarterly sales. Now upon the same principle, and in something like the same mode, the monthly or quarterly proceeds of mines can be determined with facility.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman: A gentleman familiar with the subject which is about to agitate this Convention—for I conceive that this discussion has but just commenced—has declared that the mines are the "nigger" of this coast; that they are the "noli me tangere" of the body politic; that they cannot be touched, whether for good or for ill; and that they must be left in that anomalous position, which, in comparison with every other description of property, they have occupied on this coast, ever since the first discovery of the gold fields of California.

Now, sir, while this statement of the case may seem plausible to some, I conceive that it is entitled to no weight in this Convention. I conceive that our duty in the premises lies in the determination of the question, whether or not that element of our country's wealth, which has elevated so many men from penniless circumstances to princely incomes, shall be made to pay its proper share towards the support of that Government which we are about to inaugurate. The manner in which the public lands have hitherto been held in the State of California, and in which they are still held, both in California and Nevada—at least a large proportion, not only of the arable, but other lands in this Territory—has been such, or the tenure of the occupants of these lands has been and is such, that, as a general thing, the occupant has been compelled, whether willing or unwilling, to pay his taxes upon the possessory right of occupation.

The emigrant who comes into our valleys, or settles upon our hill-sides, building his cabin worth perhaps fifty dollars, is visited by the Assessor when he makes his round. The poor emigrant is questioned, and not only that cabin which has cost him fifty dollars and which barely serves to shelter him and his family from the blasts of winter is taxed, but also his possessory right to the few acres of sterile land from which he ekes out his scanty existence. Now, on the other hand, the question before us is, whether or not the mines, those lands in our Territory which have raised men to princely fortunes, shall be taxed. I maintain that there is no justice in exempting them from taxation. And while I believe, for my own part, that any Court of competent jurisdiction would set aside a judgment assessing a tax upon a mine, as such, still I believe that the possessory right to that mine, and the advantages, pecuniary and otherwise, which that right gives to the possessor, is as legitimately a subject of taxation as the miserable cabin I have alluded to, or the few barren acres held and tilled by the man who owns and occupies it.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Will he consent to the passage of this section after striking out the words, "including mines and mining property," leaving it so as to provide simply, that all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed? I desire to ascertain whether or not we can come together and agree upon something which will be satisfactory to all.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say in reply to the gentleman, notwithstanding this amendment now before the Convention is still persisted in, that while the proposition he now makes in some degree does away with the objections which I have felt compelled to urge, in the position which I occupy as a representative of one of the "cow counties," although I must be permitted to suggest that it does not meet with my entire approval, yet if he, as he is the author of this amendment, is disposed to meet me on half way ground, he will not find me backward. And inasmuch as the gentleman professes to be willing to make a compromise, I suggest that this pending amendment be temporarily withdrawn, and the amendment which he wishes to offer proposed to the Convention.

[Mr. WARWICK in the Chair.]

Mr. DELONG. I suggest, then, that we vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks), in order that we may get this amendment in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that we can vote it down.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to say a few words to the Convention, and particularly to the "cow county" representatives, upon this question. I occupy, in this respect, somewhat of an anomalous position. I represent a mining constituency, a constituency, a majority of whom I believe to be opposed to any taxation of the mines, and yet I am in favor of mining taxation, and such has been my position from the first. I have publicly advocated that policy, both with my voice and pen; and although my views have been perfectly well known on that question, yet my constituents have seen fit to send me here. Like the gentleman from Douglas, I can see no good reason why the mines should be exempted from bearing a just share of the public burdens. I cannot see any reason why mines possessing a definite market value should not pay for the support of the Government, just the same as a ranch or any other species of property. I conceive, furthermore, that the greatest expenses of our State Government will be incurred necessarily in its judicial department, and as the time of Courts in this State (as I hope it soon will be) will be occupied, to a very great extent, in trying mining suits; as three-fourths of the litigation of the State will be on the subject of mines; as the expenses of the Government for the protection of the mining interest will be greater than for all the other property in the State, I can see no good reason why the mines should not bear a just proportion of the public expenses. Yet, on the other hand, I really cannot see any good reason why the mines should be taxed upon their gross proceeds, because if you levy a tax upon the gross proceeds indiscriminately, you tax a mine from which it costs nearly its full value to extract the precious metals, just as much as you would tax one from which the gold and silver may be extracted for one-tenth of its value. I believe that the only proper basis, after all, is, to tax mines upon their market value. If a mine is worth a thousand dollars per foot, if a man owning in such a mine can take that amount for it in the market, and get it in gold coin any time he pleases, I do not know that there is any good reason why it should be taxed for any less amount than it would be if it were a ranch worth a thousand dollars per acre.

Yet, believing this, holding these views of the matter, I nevertheless hope that my friends from the "cow counties" will consider the peculiar circumstances by which we are at present surrounded. It must be remembered that we have to submit this Constitution to the people; to a people imbued with strong prejudices; to a people whose passions may be aroused very easily on the subject of taxing the mines. If we provide for levying an indiscriminate tax upon mining property, men will go before the miners throughout the Territory and tell them that our Constitution taxes the mines, and imposes upon them a burden which they cannot bear, and which will be destructive to their interests; and in that way they will succeed in defeating the Constitution. Now I respectfully submit to my friends from the agricultural counties, and to the whole Convention, whether, if you strike out the words, "including mines and mining property," you do not leave the provision just as strong, for all practical purposes, as in the shape in which it now stands. It says:—

"The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property."

Why not let it stop there? I ask if it does not already include mines and mining property, without putting in the words "mines and mining property?" If it does not, then I do not understand the English language.

Mr. NOURSE. I see that the Constitution of California provides as follows:—

"Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

Now I have been told—I do not know that it is so—that in California, under that provision, the mines are not taxed.

Mr. FITCH. I do not know that there has

Monday.]

NOURSE—FITCH—DELONG—HAINES.

[July 11.]

been a decision on that subject; I think there has not.

Mr. NOURSE. What is the practice, then, in regard to taxing the mines?

Mr. FITCH. It is to tax the dust wherever they find it. But here our mining is differently conducted. We have our quartz ledges, which are fixed and well defined, while in California, as a general thing, the mines have no such definite market value.

Mr. DELONG. I will state, that in California they tax the proceeds, where there are ledges, and they can get at them, and the property also.

Mr. FITCH. The mines there have seldom any fixed, definite, easily-ascertained market value—merely a hill or a tunnel, or a placer claim, rich perhaps to-day, and poor to-morrow—but here we have our silver-bearing quartz ledges, which have a definite, fixed market value, just as certain as the market value of a ranch, or any other piece of property. We know that certain strata of quartz produces so many hundred tons of ore, which will average so much per ton, and we can see the results. A man claims to own a certain definite and fixed proportion of a mine, and it bears a certain definite and fixed value, like other property. A change in the system of mining, unknown until now in the history of our country, has taken place. Corporations have taken the place of individual and unincorporated effort. Mining stocks are issued, and those stocks have a market value. Therefore, I say, that the piece of paper which entitles the holder to so many feet in the Gould and Curry Mine, or any other mine which has a fixed and definite market value, should be taxed to the extent of that value. And I maintain that under a proper construction of our Constitution, (and we have no right to anticipate an improper construction by our Courts), when we say that property of all kinds shall be taxed—"all property, both real and personal,"—mining property will not escape. We necessarily and by implication, include mining property, and stock in the companies owning the mines. Now I will submit the question to my friend from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse), supposing that we should strike out "mines and mining property"—words which I consider as mere surplusage, adding no vigor or force to the section—and supposing that the first State Legislature should provide for the taxing of mines by law, whether such a law would not be held constitutional?

Mr. NOURSE. I appreciate fully the gentleman's position. I desire as much as any one to avoid unnecessary debate, and I will tell the gentleman now the reason why many of us are unwilling to leave the section as it is, merely striking out these words, "mines and mining property." It is simply this: that we fear, whether rightly or wrongly, that a certain argument may be successfully used in the Courts—that because the former Convention had put in those words and this Convention had stricken them out, therefore it may be claimed and used as an argument—with what effect we do not know—that this Convention did not intend to include mines and mining property. Now an amendment has been shown to me which satisfies me perfectly, and I hope an opportunity may be given for its introduction and consideration.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman excuse me if I interrupt him one moment. If I could be satisfied that the mines would be regarded as property, I would be satisfied with the amendment just proposed, to strike out the words "mines and mining property;" but as an old Californian, who has seen the workings of the California Constitution for the last thirteen years, I am by no means satisfied on that point. I know what has been the invariable construction there, and that there has never been a dollar received for taxes from the mines, in any shape, except for taxes on bullion, dust, and the materials used in working the mines. I believe that the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong), will remember that that is the case: I believe, also, that all the members of this Convention are aware of it. It is generally understood that no mining property in California is taxed, notwithstanding that the Constitution of California says: "All property shall be taxed equally." I do not think, as has been said, that a case ever came before the Supreme Court of California involving the question, but I know, however, that it is generally the opinion throughout the State that the mines are not taxable property.

Mr. FITCH. All of which is true. I will, however, explain my position in a moment. Suppose the first State Legislature, in passing a revenue law, should fail to provide for the taxation of the mines, what would be the result? Some person owning a sufficient amount of taxable property to make it for his interest to test the question, will test it, and carry his case to the Supreme Court. I ask you, sir, and every lawyer here, if it would be possible for the Supreme Court to decide anything else than that a revenue law which exempted a large and valuable class of property from taxation was unconstitutional, under such a clause as this, providing for a uniform and equal rate of taxation of all property, both real and personal? It seems to me clearly impossible that they should decide otherwise. As the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Haines) has said, the question never was tried in California, and if it should be, this difficulty would occur, that there has been as yet no definite, certain, fixed market value attached to the gold mines.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him. They have in California quartz mines, copper mines, and other mines, some of which, certainly, have a definite cash value.

Mr. FITCH. Then I venture to say that any man who chooses to carry the question up to the Supreme Court, can get a decision, and that any law exempting these mines from taxation, will be decided unconstitutional. That is my belief; and if that belief be well founded, I ask what is the use of putting in these words—"including mines and mining property"?

Monday,]

HAINES—FITCH—CROSMAN—CHAPIN—NOURSE.

[July 11.

Mr. HAINES. We put them in so that there can be no misunderstanding about it, when we shall have framed and adopted our Constitution.

Mr. FITCH. And yet, at last, the gentleman is obliged to depend upon the Legislature to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, and if the Legislature fails, what is he to do about it, even if we do insert the words "mines and mining property"? A portion of our last Territorial Legislature was instructed—and in my opinion very improperly—to exclude the mines from taxation, and such may be the case hereafter. Therefore, if we put in these words, "mines and mining property," and there happens to be in the Legislature a majority opposed to the taxation of the mines, the Legislature would, probably, neglect or fail to tax the mines, and then what would the gentleman do about it? He would have to carry the question to the Supreme Court at last, and, in my opinion, we can add no force at all to the provision by including these words of mere surplusage. They would not add any value to the provision, while gentlemen know very well that they would constitute a strong argument with many, against the adoption of the Constitution. Why, sir, if you put in those words in substance—modify them in whatever way you will—you compel us to go before a people liable to be highly excited on this subject, and to face the arguments of our opponents against the taxation of the mines. If you do that, I believe the people will vote this Constitution down, to a dead certainty. Now, I tell the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Haines) that I am earnestly—as I believe he is, and every other gentleman on this floor—in favor of the adoption of a State Government. I think the time has come when we must have it, when our interests imperatively demand it, and I am in favor of doing anything which we can honorably and honestly do to secure that end. I am in favor of taxing the mines; I say that openly and fearlessly, and if I knew I was walking to my political tomb, I would still say it. In my opinion, it is right, and I am, and always have been, in favor of it. But, at the same time, if you put in these words—which are unnecessary, which are surplusage, which add no force or vigor to the constitutional provision—I say you thereby insure the rejection of the Constitution, and you will have no State Government at all.

Mr. CROSMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I understand that he is in favor of taxing the mines, and thinks that this section would be just as operative to secure that end with these words out of it, as it would be if they were left in; and that if they are allowed to remain in the Constitution, it will be defeated. Now I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is a fair and honorable way to treat a constituency. Now, sir, I represent a mining constituency, as the gentleman from Storey does, though mine is somewhat different in its circumstances from his; the mining region he represents being confessedly the richest and best in the State, while our mines are only in their infancy, or wholly undeveloped. We do not know whether they are worth anything or not; and yet, they have a certain value in the market. For myself, though I am opposed to taxing the mines indiscriminately, yet I am in favor of taxing those which are yielding a revenue. I think that is nothing more than fair. But, sir, I want our Constitution to go to the people fairly and honorably. Let us agree among ourselves what we want, and what we mean, and then let the Constitution express our meaning plainly, and go to the people upon a fair and square basis.

Mr. CHAPIN. I was somewhat surprised at hearing, and I certainly very much regretted to hear, the remarks of my colleague (Mr. Fitch). If I entertained the views he does, I would certainly favor the retaining of the language which was contained in the article originally, and let it be plainly and fully understood. But I do not believe that it is right to do any such thing as to tax the mines at their market value. Why, sir, what would have been the result in the past year, if we had taxed all our mines at the full market value which they bore at the time of assessment? We then assessed the Gould & Curry at six thousand dollars per foot, while now it is worth fifteen hundred.

Mr. FITCH. Well, I had a lot up in Virginia then, which I could have sold for two thousand dollars, but I could not get four hundred dollars for it now.

Mr. CHAPIN. Savage sold for five or six times as much then as now; Opbir was worth four thousand dollars, and it is only worth seven hundred now; Pride of the West was sold for two hundred and seventy-five dollars then, while now it is begging for purchasers at two dollars a foot; Daney was selling readily at that time at five hundred dollars, and now it ranges from forty to sixty dollars; and Wide West not long since was five hundred or six hundred dollars, while now it is sold at forty dollars, or thereabouts.

Mr. NOURSE. Have not the mines, prior to this, gone up, as much as they have now gone down? Did not the Gould & Curry go up in a single year from two hundred dollars to six thousand dollars per foot? And have not saw-mills gone down also? Does not all property vary in price?

Mr. CHAPIN. The gentleman may refer to these matters when I get through; I do not mean to be long. Now, I say it is not right to tax the full value upon property which is as fluctuating and uncertain as this, as we would put the full value upon farming or ranching property. Why, it appears to me that is so self-evident that no gentleman ought to ask it. It is altogether wrong, and therefore I express my surprise that my colleague from Storey County, representing a community where we have such an amount of mining property, should say that in his opinion it ought to be taxed at its full value. Tax the proceeds, if you please, but do not burden the mines with any such taxation as that. By adopting such a course, even at a rate of taxation of one per cent, you would tax the Gould & Curry seventy-two hundred dollars, assessing the stock at six thousand dollars per foot.

Monday.]

HAWLEY—CHAPIN—JOHNSON.

[July 11.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment, on the part of those "cow-counties," which have to bear the blame of this proposition to tax the mines? We are not so wild as to anticipate that the result of taxing the mines will be anything like what the gentleman seems to apprehend. I have endeavored to express my views and those of my constituency, but I certainly should not express such views as those. I trust I am more reasonable than that in my calculations.

Mr. CHAPIN. I should hope so, and I am glad to hear it. Let us reason together, and fix this matter up in a manner that will be right, and mutually satisfactory, for if we go to either extreme, this Constitution is as dead as it can be. I would utterly despair, if you should impose any burden similar to that now provided for in this Constitution, of ever passing the Constitution. If you do that, I am willing to take my hat and go home, for it is wholly in vain to present a Constitution containing any such provision to the people of this Territory.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know whether it would be proper at this time—and I would not like to obtrude my views, nor present any amendment for the consideration of the committee before it is properly in order—but I have an amendment here, however, which I wish to offer as a substitute for the whole section whenever it will be in order, and if there is no objection, I will read it for information.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of taxes by a uniform rule, so that taxes shall be assessed and collected on all property, possessory rights and claims, according to their true value in money.

At a proper time I wish to offer this as a substitute for the entire section. A single word, however, in regard to the arguments which have just now been advanced by my friend from Storey, (Mr. Chapin.) As that gentleman tells us, Gould & Curry has receded, and Ophir and many other mining stocks are in the same category—all of which is quite familiar to every gentleman here. But there is one theory which the gentleman has apparently forgotten, and that is an argument to which I listened, and he replied (and ably, too, I will say, assuming his premises to have been correct,) in the first Constitutional Convention. The line of argument referred to was substantially this, that while the amount or value of taxable property may be very greatly depreciated, yet the ratio of taxation must be reduced in like proportion. That is, if you tax the Gould & Curry at one time at six thousand dollars per foot, and another mine at fifteen hundred dollars per foot, and so on through the list, carrying out the same relative rate of assessment through the whole range and scope of your taxable property, taxing everything at the like inflated valuation, you will have perhaps four times the amount of taxable property that really exists at the present time; yet, while you thus increase the value, you must at the same time decrease the ratio of taxation, and only levy your assessment at such rate as will suffice to raise a given sum. The difference in taxation at different periods of time is not solely in the amount of property subject to taxation, but in the prevailing rates of taxation. If in one instance we should levy a tax of twenty-five cents on the hundred dollars, in the other you would be compelled to levy a tax of one hundred cents, in order to obtain the same required amount. What is the difference, then, whether you tax property at a low valuation, or at an increased, or, if you please, at a fictitious valuation, provided you have the same amount to raise? The result is the same if you levy a twenty-five-cent tax on an assessment of six thousand dollars, as if you levy a dollar tax on an assessment of fifteen hundred dollars; and therefore I cannot see the potency of the gentleman's argument.

Now I will say, in brief, that this is the position which I took in the former Convention—a position which, however far it may be from suiting the views of others, I know is at least in accordance with the views of those whom I represent, and, far beyond that, in accordance with my own sense of right and of duty—that is to say, that all property that has any value, in proportion to that value should be taxed for the support of our government. This, sir, is my position, and I do not seek, nor will I, by any word to which I shall give utterance on this floor, nor by any amendment which I propose, seek to escape the full effect of the proposition that all property, according to its cash value—that is, its money value, if you please, using the language which I propose to employ in this amendment—shall be taxed proportioned upon that value. When this is done, we shall have recognized a principle founded in truth and justice, and we shall not have done that which will tend to confuse or blind the sense and understanding of the people. We shall have done more than that: we shall have established a firm and just basis upon which our government should rest—that all property, according to its full value, shall be taxed equally—that every individual within and protected by the government, shall contribute his proportion to the support of that government. Now, sir, if we are not prepared to meet the issue on that basis, then for one I will say that I want no State Government. I see that the hour has arrived for adjournment; and as I propose to speak further on this question, I will give way.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Committee rise and report Articles VIII and IX, as amended, and also report progress upon Article X, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DUNNE. I am opposed to that motion, for the reason that I want the Convention to finish this Article on Taxation while we are engaged upon it.

The question was taken, and Mr. Fitch's motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair, The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, and Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt, and had made some amendments thereto, in which he was instructed to ask the concurrence of the Convention. Also, that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article X, entitled Taxation, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was accordingly granted to sit again upon Article X.

Mr. CHAPIN offered the following resolution, which was adopted:—

Resolved, That the President of the Convention be requested to place upon the standing committees such members as have recently taken seats in the Convention and have not been appointed upon any of the standing committees.

The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the President declared the Convention adjourned under the rule, until nine o'clock, A. M., to-morrow.

EIGHTH DAY.

CARSON, July 12, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M., and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Collins, DeLong, Earl, Gibson, Haines, Jones, Morse, Tozer, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 28; absent, 11.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, leave of absence for the day was granted to Mr. DeLong.

No clergyman being in attendance, the usual morning prayer was dispensed with.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APPOINTMENTS ON COMMITTEES.

The PRESIDENT announced that, in accordance with the resolution adopted yesterday, he appointed Mr. McClinton on the Committee on State Seal and Coat of Arms, and Mr. Haines on the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KINKEAD, from the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement, presented the following report:—

Mr. President: Your Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement of the Constitution beg leave to report the following arrangement for the several articles referred to them:

1st. Resolution adopting the Constitution of the United States;

2d. Ordinance;

3d. Preamble;

4th. Article I—Declaration of Rights.

Your committee also recommend the insertion of the word "City," after the word "Carson," in the said resolution.

Also the substitution of the words "and this," in lieu of the word "which," in the seventh line of the engrossed copy of the Ordinance.

Also to strike out the word "the," where it occurs before the word "citizens," in the third section of the Ordinance.

Respectfully submitted.

J. H. KINKEAD, Chairman.

The report was adopted, and the several amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. TOZER, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported that that committee had examined and compared Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, Article III, entitled Distribution of Powers, Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, and Article V, entitled Executive Department, and found the same correctly engrossed.

The report was accepted, and the several articles reported were placed on file.

Mr. HAWLEY moved that the several matters reported from the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement be referred to the Committee on Enrollment.

The PRESIDENT suggested that these matters would have to be reengrossed, as certain amendments had been made.

Mr. BANKS. It is hardly necessary, because no changes have been made beyond a half a dozen words, and I suggest that the corrections be made in the margin of the engrossed copy in red ink, and the indorsement signed by the Secretary, so as to show that the corrections have been made. That is the customary course, I believe. I will move that the enrolling committee be instructed to make the corrections in accordance with the action of the Convention upon the report of the Committee on Phraseology, and that a note be made on the engrossed copy, to the effect that the corrections were made in accordance with that order.

The PRESIDENT. I find, on examination, that the Secretary has already made the indorsements in red ink, and they are signed by him as Secretary.

Mr. BANKS. Very well: that covers the whole ground.

Mr. TOZER. The Secretary states, I suppose, that the amendments are made upon the report of the Committee on Phraseology.

The SECRETARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw my motion, as that is all that is necessary.

The PRESIDENT. I will suggest that there should be a motion, to go on record, in order to show hereafter why the changes were made.

Mr. BANKS. I will move then that all the changes made by the Convention upon the report of the Committee on Phraseology be entered by the Secretary, over his signature, on the margin of the documents.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Hawley, that the several matters reported by the Committee on Phraseology be referred to the Committee on Enrollment, and it was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. DUNNE. I will state to the Convention, in explanation of a resolution which I am about to offer, that the Convention is progressing very rapidly with its business, but the Committee on the Judiciary have not yet completed their labors, and will require an opportunity to hold another session. There is no time when we can get the committee together unless it is in the evening, and for that reason, believing that one more session will enable the committee to complete the report on the Article entitled Judicial Department, I offer this resolution:—

Resolved, That in consideration of the necessity of another evening session of the Judiciary Committee, the operation of so much of the standing rule as relates to evening sessions be postponed until to-morrow, the 13th instant.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

[Mr. CROSMAN in the chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to embody such provisions in the judicial features of the Constitution as will provide for the election of a District Judge in each organized county of the State, (except Storey County, wherein there shall be two District Judges,) with such additional jurisdiction as is now conferred upon County or Probate Courts, so as to dispense with such County or Probate Courts.

I should feel reluctant to join in any attempt to make radical or material changes in our judiciary system, in any respect, unless I thought it quite clear that great compensating advantages would be gained thereby. We have now had two meetings of the Judiciary Committee, I believe, and we find that some diversity of opinion exists among its members upon the judicial features of our Constitution, or in respect to the judicial system as established in the old Constitution, adopted as the basis of our action, and in the Constitution of California. We have encountered a great deal of difficulty in one respect, namely, in arranging the judicial districts in such a manner as to accommodate the greatest possible number within the respective counties, and at the same time to restrict and limit the expenditure within reasonable and proper bounds. Now it must occur to gentlemen, I think, that if we can, without any increase of expenditure, so arrange our judiciary system as to have a Court with an enlarged jurisdiction in each of the several counties, we shall in that way greatly subserve the interests of those who sent us here. And I think by the adoption of the proposition involved in the resolution, we can obtain and establish such a judicial system, which, while it dispenses with County and Probate Courts, will enable us, instead, to have a judge in each county, upon whom can be conferred the jurisdiction ordinarily possessed by the District Courts, as well as that exercised by the County and Probate Courts. I have made some estimates of the relative expense of these two systems, comparing one with the other. On the one hand, I take as a basis the salaries of the County and Probate Judges, as they are now fixed by territorial laws, and add to these the rate of salary likely to be established for the District Judges, fixing it within what would be reasonable and proper bounds, taking as a basis five District Judges within the State, and one County or Probate Judge in each county. I then make a like estimate upon the other proposition, as embodied in this resolution, of having one District Judge in each county, except Storey County, and there having two judges. I fix their respective salaries at the same rate as that of the District Judges in the different counties. I find upon these estimates that the expense of the entire system here proposed does not exceed that of the other more than two or three thousand dollars a year. It must be evident to every gentleman here, that if the difference is no greater than that, or even if the cost were as much as ten thousand dollars a year more, it would be an expenditure for which the people would be amply repaid, by the additional benefits secured on account of having a court in each county. It was chiefly for the sake of eliciting the views and opinions of other members, that I presented the resolution at this time. I hope we may have some discussion upon it, and if it is the judgment of the Convention that a system such as contemplated by the resolution I have offered should be devised, then the Judiciary Committee, before proceeding further with its labors, can proceed to embody the proper provisions in the Article which they shall report.

Mr. DUNNE. I concur entirely with the views of the gentleman from Ormsby as to the propriety of the adoption of the resolution presented by him. I think no alteration of this Constitution which we have adopted as a basis, in respect to the judiciary system, could be presented to this Convention, that would be more satisfactory than this, to the people of the outside counties, at least. For those counties which are in the immediate neighborhood of the capital I do not pretend to speak; but I am sure that it will be beneficial in its operation in those large districts known as Humboldt and Lander Counties, and others so far removed from the capital and so large in extent. If two of those counties are embraced in one judicial district, the residents of one of them, at least, must be situated at a distance of from eighty to a hundred miles from the residence of the District Judge, and therefore, for all chamber business required to be performed, it would be necessary to travel that distance of from sixty to one hundred miles. That would amount almost to an absolute denial of justice. There is another feature of this proposition to be regarded, and that is, that those counties I speak of, covering one half of the area of this Territory, are so large that in the course of the natural growth of the State we may expect that in time they will in themselves each constitute a large judicial district, after becoming subdivided, as they naturally will be, by reason of their great extent. Therefore, as one of the representatives of one of those counties, I heartily indorse this resolution, and I think I am authorized to state to the members of this Convention that the proposition it involves meets with the hearty sanction of all the delegates from Humboldt and Lander Counties. I would like, however, to hear an expression of opinion on the subject from gentlemen representing counties nearer the capital, and which are smaller in extent. If it satisfies them, I think it will be satisfactory to all. There is one other point involved, however, and that is, the question whether two judges are sufficient for Storey County when all the county and probate business is thrown upon those two judges; but that is a matter which I presume the Storey County delegation will ventilate.

Mr. HAWLEY. For all the reasons which have already been presented by the two gentlemen who have spoken upon this resolution, I heartily indorse it, and I trust it will obtain the sanction of the Convention. The county of Douglas, which I represent, stands somewhat in the same category in regard to chamber business as the county of Humboldt. In committee last evening, we made a careful calculation of the manner in which the State should be divided into judicial districts, and we could come to no other conclusion than that Douglas should be attached to Esmeralda County, as a part of that judicial district, in which event we should have to travel nearly one hundred miles to obtain, for instance, a restraining order, or to have one set aside. For this reason I trust the Convention will adopt the resolution, and that the feature which it contemplates will be embodied in our judiciary system.

Mr. FITCH. For my own information, as well as for the information of the Convention,

I would ask the mover of this resolution if it is not contemplated that under its operation each county shall establish and pay the salary of its own District Judge, instead of having it paid out of the common treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. The idea is, although not embodied in the resolution, that these judges shall be paid by the counties respectively. It is an immaterial matter, however, because, although the money may be paid from the State Treasury, it will have to be first paid into the State Treasury by the counties; and if it is to be paid directly by the counties, of course there will be so much the less for them to pay into the State treasury; so that, whether it first passes to the County treasury and thence to the State treasury, to be drawn therefrom by the Judges, or whether it is drawn at once from the county treasury, would seem practically to make no difference.

Mr. FITCH. Excuse me; I think it makes a good deal of difference, because the counties paying the largest amount of taxes would have to contribute towards the payment of the salaries of the Judges of other counties.

Mr. JOHNSON. Excuse me; I likewise propose that the Judges shall be paid by the counties. My idea is derived from the old Constitution, and it is, that all the judicial officers shall be made preferred creditors, so as to insure their payment in cash, and thereby we offer such an inducement as will enable us to procure the services of men who, by their character, talents and legal attainments, are best qualified to fill those positions. If it is left so that the payment of such salaries may be dependent upon the condition of a County Treasury, which is liable to temporary or permanent embarrassment, men may be deterred from occupying those judicial positions who would be the very best qualified to fill them. I believe the occupants of judicial offices should be so protected by law as not to render it necessary or incumbent upon them to embark in other pursuits, and I think most assuredly that they will, by law, be so protected. The provision we have in this Constitution in relation to the salaries of those officers should be retained, and should be made to apply to the judges of the courts in the different counties; and by having the advantage of a Judge and a Court in each county—having a Court at home—in my judgment the people will be well compensated for the slight additional expense. The provision I refer to relative to compensation is in the schedule, I believe.

As to Storey County, a provision might be incorporated making that county an exception. If gentlemen from Storey County do not deem it sufficient for the necessities of that county to have one court, an exception can readily be made and power lodged in the Legislature to provide, if you please, by a two-thirds vote, for additional courts, if it shall at any time be deemed that there is a necessity for them. I only proposed, in this resolution, to provide for embodying in the article the general framework of our judicial system; and, of course, there are many things in the way of detail which it may be found necessary or proper to incorporate in the Constitution. The idea is, simply, to dispense, as a feature of our judicial system, as we find it now in the old Constitution, with County and Probate Courts, and confer their jurisdiction on the District Courts, with a view to having a Judge in each county. So far as salaries are concerned, I think it proper for us to fix them in the Constitution, at least for the time for which the first incumbents are to be elected, making such term say for two years, and leaving it to be fixed thereafter by the Legislature.

BROSNAN—HAWLEY—BANKS.

[July 12.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend the resolution, by striking out the word "two," and inserting the word "three," so as to provide for three Judges in Storey County, instead of only two.

The question was stated on Mr. Brosnan's amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I heartily concur in the plan proposed by this resolution, and if the additional expense will be no more than two or three thousand dollars a year, I do not see why there should be any objection whatsoever, to the adoption of the resolution. Indeed, I agree with my friend from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that if the difference in expense should amount even to $10,000 a year, it would still be amply counterpoised by the great benefits to be derived by the people from the adoption of the system proposed. In the first place, under such a system, we have all the judicial business done in the county which could be done by the District Judge and by the County Judge of that county; that is to say, we have ample force on the bench, in each county, to discharge all the duties that could be discharged in that county by the District and County Judges, and we have those duties performed, too, more expeditiously, and more economically; and we, at the same time, obviate the necessity of an appeal from the County Judge, or, if you please, from the Justices of the Peace to the County Judge, and from the County Judge to the District Judge, and then again from the District Judge to the Supreme Court. We rid ourselves of all this delay and difficulty by adopting this resolution, and thus we avoid, as it were, two intermediate stumbling-blocks in the way of justice, wiping them out of our judicial system altogether. In each of those inferior courts, expenses are necessarily incurred, and time wasted by litigants, before they can reach the court of final resort.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but if you adopt the system proposed, you dignify the character of your judiciary in the several counties, and secure the respect of litigants for the courts, to a degree which, I humbly submit, they do not always challenge at the present time. Further than that, you also secure the services on the bench, of men of ability—men in whom the community can confide. You get men whose qualifications are known, coming from the neighborhoods in which they are elected, and known to all the citizens within their counties, and you avoid the great struggle which, aside from political considerations, would always be sure to arise, to a certain extent, under the old system of judicial districts comprising several counties in each, between the different counties of those respective districts, where men would naturally be combating and struggling over the question of which county should present the candidate for District Judge.

As I did not propose to myself, when I left home, to occupy much of the time of this Convention in discussing any of the questions that might come before it, (although I have desired on several occasions to do so, on important questions arising in the Convention.) I shall leave other gentlemen to discuss this question more fully, if they desire to do so. I hope the resolution will be adopted, for I foresee manifold benefits likely to accrue to the community from the establishment of such a system.

Mr. HAWLEY. One word by way of suggestion. Under the present distribution of the revenues of our Territory, I believe it is provided that five-thirteenths of the taxes in each county shall be transferred to the territorial fund, to be applied to liquidating the territorial indebtedness; and a portion of that fund, as is well known, is applied to the payment of the judges under our present judicial system. Now, this serious objection, I think, will be raised by many of our citizens to the adoption of this provision, unless it can be obviated and removed in some manner; that if we continue to pay to the State treasury, under the State organization, the same pro-rata of the revenue received in each county, it must be apparent that out of what remains, (which has heretofore been used exclusively for county purposes), the county will be called upon to pay this additional charge for the salary of its judges. I am heartily in favor of the proposition, but I still think that, in the wisdom of the Convention, some provision may and should be made to retain in the respective counties a portion of the amount hitherto paid to the territorial treasury, for the purpose of enabling the counties more readily to meet the additional expense required for the payment of the salaries of the county judges. In our county we pay the county judges fifteen hundred dollars per annum, and under this estimate we are expected to pay the district judge of the county four thousand dollars, which is a very heavy increase. I hope this suggestion will be taken into consideration, if it is deemed to be worth anything.

Mr. BANKS. I have considered this matter now, I suppose, about a half an hour in all, and I presume that most of the members of the Convention have not considered it much longer.

JOHNSON.

[July 12.]

It is proposed by this resolution to direct the Committee on the Judiciary to make a radical change in the judicial system which has generally prevailed, and with which we have heretofore been familiar. Now, sir, it seems to me that that discretion proposed to be given to the Committee on the Judiciary is a correct and proper one; and I have found during the half hour which I have been considering the subject, not one good objection to it. But, at the same time, I do not think it is proper for this Convention, on so brief a consideration, to instruct the Judiciary Committee absolutely to do anything of the kind. I, for one, would very much rather risk the united judgments of that committee on so important a subject, than my own judgment, or the judgment of this Convention, upon so short a notice, in regard to making so radical a change. I think however, this resolution is one which it is very desirable for that committee to consider, and I hope, therefore, that the whole matter will be referred to the Judiciary Committee, to report just as they please; and when they do report, we can be prepared to consider the question, or at least when their report is brought up for final action. I would prefer that the resolution should be laid on the table for future consideration, but I shall not make that motion because others may wish to express their views. Before the final vote is taken, however, I shall make the motion to lay the resolution on the table, because I deem it improper to instruct the committee on so important a subject after so little deliberation.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will be seen, that some action will be necessary, other and further than that proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) in order to meet this question, by authorizing a certain course of action on the part of the Judiciary Committee. As one member of that committee, I would scarcely feel myself authorized, so far as my vote would go, to incorporate in the report which the committee is to make, any provisions contemplating the establishment of such radical changes in our Constitution as are embodied in this resolution, unless I were so directed by instructions emanating from this Convention. We have adopted, as the basis of our action, the Constitution prepared by the former Convention. That Constitution embodies, in a general way it is true, what I must regard as certain instructions, from which I would not conceive myself at liberty to deviate materially, by making any such radical change as is proposed in the resolution I have offered, unless, as I before remarked, it were done directly under the sanction of the Convention. Now, the Judiciary Committee have had two meetings, and they have discussed the features embraced in several sections of this article on the Judicial Department, as contained in the old Constitution, and they have finally reached that point in their deliberations where it has become necessary to devise or adopt some general system, if not that proposed in this resolution, then something which is in conformity, or at least approximating to conformity with the system prescribed in the old Constitution. Members of the Convention, I am sure, will appreciate the importance—having in view the progress made in other portions of our work—of obtaining, at the earliest possible moment, a report from the Judiciary Committee; for I do not conceive that there can possibly arise, in other portions of the Constitution yet to be acted upon, many vexed questions, and certainly none involving consequences so important to the people of this Territory, or State, as that which will be involved in the adoption of our judicial system. Now, if the Judiciary Committee, regarding itself as instructed by the previous action of this Convention, in adopting as its basis the Constitution framed by the former Convention, should proceed to embody in its report the same judicial features as are contained in that Constitution, and if, when they come to present that report, it should prove to be the sense of the Convention to make those radical changes proposed in this resolution, or to make any material changes, then gentlemen will perceive that we shall be under the necessity of expending, either in Committee of the Whole or in Convention, a great amount of time and labor. Gentlemen know how inefficient and unsatisfactory, often-times, are amendments which are proposed in a large body like this, upon the spur of the moment, when a subject is under consideration. Delay is necessarily involved in correcting the phraseology of such amendments, so as to meet the particular points desired. And especially in this judicial feature of the Constitution, must the language be framed with great care. The whole frame-work of our judicial system must be so adjusted, and the various parts of it must be so harmoniously dovetailed together, that there can be no misconception as to the powers of the different courts and judges, as to their jurisdiction, the right of appeal, &c. Obviously, this work cannot be so efficiently performed either in the Committee of the Whole or in the Convention, as it can be by the Judiciary Committee, provided that committee is so authorized. Then, when the report of that committee shall be presented, it will be in as perfect a state as the committee can get it, and it will be before the Convention, subject of course to such alterations or amendments as any member may see fit to propose for the action of the Convention itself. But these proposed changes are so radical and extensive in their character, pervading many sections, that if they are to be adopted at all, the whole article will necessarily require to be remodelled—almost every section. It certainly will be a great saving of time and labor; therefore, if the Convention will take such action now, as may be regarded in the light of instructions to the committee, and it was with that object that I presented this resolution.

Tuesday,]

COLLINS.

[July 12.

I regret that circumstances have been such as to prevent its introduction at an earlier period, for I can appreciate the importance of the question, and how difficult it is, with scarcely any opportunity for consideration or conversation among members, to pass upon a matter of so much moment. But the thought only occurred to me after the last adjournment of the Committee on the Judiciary, since when, I have had an opportunity of conferring with but two or three members of that committee. It seemed to meet their concurrence, and hence arose the idea that we should get the instructions of the Convention on the subject, and also the views of other members, whose opinions I, for one, value most highly, and am very desirous of hearing expressed. I think that before another meeting of the Judiciary Committee is held, whether it be at the present time, or deferred to some future hour of the day, we should have an expression of the sense of the Convention on this subject. I do not want to press this matter with undue haste; but, at the same time, I think I am but expressing the sentiments of many of the members of the Judiciary Committee, when I say that it is important that action should be taken before the next meeting of that committee.

As to the question of the number of courts or judges in Storey County, three districts may be necessary in that county, but that is a matter which I feel disposed to leave to the judgment of those who are the immediate representatives of that county. I believe there has been already an amendment offered providing for three judges in Storey County, instead of two, and I would suggest, with a view of carrying out that proposition, considering the amount of business in that county, it may be necessary to create another court, and to retain there a County Court with probate jurisdiction. That might perhaps meet the difficulty, better than the plan of having three District Judges, and for this reason—that I cannot perceive how it is possible to make in the County of Storey a territorial subdivision in such a manner as to divide, with any degree of accuracy, the business of the three different courts. Yesterday, and until last evening, it was my individual opinion that those two courts proposed to be established in Storey County, should have concurrent jurisdiction; but I have given the matter some further thought, and I can conceive of cases where, if it would not be absolutely impossible, it would, at least, be productive of very injurious results. A division of the county might possibly be made so as to embrace two distinct districts, but I cannot see how it could be divided, with reference to mining claims, into three districts, at the same time conferring on those courts concurrent jurisdiction. In a case where the plaintiff and the defendant reside in two different districts, there would necessarily arise a strife as to where the jurisdiction should be. The same difficulty would be encountered in regard to judgments. There might be a judgment in favor of one party in one court and another in favor of the adverse party in the other court. In questions of injunctions, too, cases might occur where the plaintiff would be a resident in one district and under the jurisdiction of the court of that district, and the defendant in the other district, subject to the jurisdiction of the other court, and each might make an application for a restraining order in his particular district, and each court grant it. Here there would be a conflict of jurisdiction, which no legislation could possibly cure. To obviate that difficulty, I submit that whether there be one, two, or three districts, they should be subdivided in reference to territory. I therefore propose, or rather, would suggest, that the boundary line between Gold Hill and Virginia would constitute a proper dividing line for two districts, one court exercising its jurisdiction on the northerly or Virginia side of that line, and the other in the southern or Gold Hill portion—the jurisdiction of each extending to the boundary lines of the county eastward and westward. In that way, I think the difficulty might be obviated, although members representing that county are, undoubtedly, better advised than I am, and I only throw out the suggestion for their consideration. It seems to me that such an arrangement would very nearly equalize the business of the two courts, while if you create this third court, I do not see how you can make any subdivision by which you will obtain a just equalization of the business at all. Then by continuing this County Court—or, if you please, let it be called the Probate Court, for the name is not material—with the same jurisdiction as is contemplated under the old Constitution, you can dispense with the necessity for a third District Court, and can, at the same time, secure the same advantages. But these, as I before remarked, are all matters more properly for the consideration of the Storey County representatives.

As to the matter of action being had upon this resolution, or something of like import for the guidance and instruction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I believe it is eminently proper that such action should be had.

Mr. COLLINS. I feel inclined to agree with the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks), that we should not dispose of this matter without due consideration. I confess I would like to hear some objections presented against this radical innovation upon our judicial system. I have given the proposition considerable attention since it was presented to me last night by the gentleman from Orsmy, (Mr. Johnson), and I must say, that it struck me then, and strikes me now. the more I think of it, as a very brilliant thought, and one which if reduced to practice will be likely to place us all under great obligations to its author. If there is any one thing more than another that tends to produce discouragement in our community, it is

DELONG.

[July 12.]

the difficulty and expense attending our litigation. In all small matters, even if a man is the gainer in litigation, he is a loser in the end. I have heretofore been considerably embarrassed in my own mind, in endeavoring to discover some mode by which we could do justice to the outside counties, in establishing a judicial system to meet their wants, as well as the wants of the more populous counties. The capital of Douglas is some eighty miles from the county seat of Esmeralda County; and how difficult it is for citizens of that county to attend the District Court, whether to make an answer in a suit, or to attend the sittings of the court in bench or at chambers. And just so it is with every county which is extensive in territory and sparse in population. It occurs to me, inasmuch as every county must have a County Judge, that we might as well give something more of dignity to that officer, and enlarge his jurisdiction. That would have a tendency to bring a more efficient, learned and intelligent officer upon the bench, and a judge would certainly be none the less qualified to discharge the lesser duties of a County Judge because he was amply qualified to discharge the duties of the higher jurisdiction. It seems to me that such a system would be efficient, and that by this means we would enable the litigants to have their cases adjudicated more promptly, and with very considerably less expense. The Courts could then be in session, if necessary, the greater portion of the entire year, and that is an important consideration, for the delay of justice, under our present system, is practically a bar to justice, and anything that will conspire to hasten litigation, to bring about some determination, whatever the result to the litigants may be, is practically an improvement on the slow and tardy movements of our present system.

I do hope, if gentlemen in the Convention see any practical objections to this system, they will present them now. I am far from being desirous of making a radical leap into anything like sweeping changes, especially in so important a matter as the judicial system; but this proposition does seem to me to be plain, clear and practical, and so far as it is a change, it is all for the benefit of the respective counties. Then again it is a cheap system. As every county must have its judge, at all events, by the additional expense of one, two, or three thousand dollars a year, in the way of increased salary, you place within the reach of each county all the facilities and appliances necessary for the prompt and speedy adjudication of all the litigation which may arise. That will save this State very many thousands of dollars, if not millions.

I do believe that if this resolution is adopted, and the system it contemplates presented to the electors of this Territory, it will have a very material influence in securing the adoption of the Constitution which we are framing, by the people of this Territory.

Now, so far as Storey County is concerned, I would be very unwilling to see a system adopted or attempted to be put in practice, in that county, which should provide for three judicial districts, or for confining the litigation entirely to the District Courts. There is a vast amount of minor litigation in that county which should be confined to a court of inferior jurisdiction. If you invest the County Court, or Probate Court—it matters not what you call it—with jurisdiction in all cases amounting to five hundred dollars, together with all cases that may come before it in regard to mechanics' liens, and in regard to forcible entry and unlawful detainer, giving it, also, all the criminal jurisdiction, with the exception of homicide, I am of the opinion that that court will have all it can possibly do. Then—if you establish two District Courts, though the question of jurisdiction may be attended with some difficulties, yet those difficulties could be obviated to a great extent—I think that Storey County will be able to clear up its docket, and place its property in a condition free from the embarrassment of the never-ending litigation by which it is now nearly all tied up. That will give Storey County a great advance in the value of its property, and in its improvement and development. For these reasons, I trust that the instruction will prevail, and that the resolution will be adopted now, unless gentleman of the Convention have strong objections, and are willing to present them. For one, I will listen attentively to any objections. If there be any, I certainly want to know them, and if they prove to be good and valid objections I shall vote against the adoption of the resolution. On the other hand, unless objections are presented, I shall vote most heartily for the resolution.

Mr. DELONG. Certainly this is a very novel proposition; at all events, it is one that had never before presented itself to my mind. I have been listening with a great deal of attention to all that has been said on the subject, conning over in my mind as rapidly as I could the probable working of this scheme, if carried into effect, and trying to determine for myself whether or not it would have an injurious effect. I suppose I am mentally constituted like other men, and I approach the consideration of this change, which the gentleman from Ormsby has properly called a radical change, with some degree of prejudice, or, at all events, of hesitation. Since it has been my privilege to be a member of the bar, I have always practised in a country where a system prevails somewhat similar to our present system—a system of Probate and County Judges, District Judges and Supreme Court Judges—and it is a little singular, perhaps, that I should never have thought of the system proposed by this resolution. I have thought very frequently, however, of the miserable working of the old system, in many respects, and since the discussion has been going on here to-day, I have been carefully trying to discover some reason why this system should not work well, because it appeared to me that there must be some reason, inasmuch as a different system has so long been acted upon elsewhere. But after that careful reflection, I declare that I cannot yet see any objection to the system proposed. It appears to my mind clear and reasonable. It saves to clients a great amount of expense, by having a permanent court, instead of having a traveling court, going about like a band of Bohemians or Thespians—a system which I have always regarded with disfavor. If you have a District Court in each of the counties, a man cannot sneak off, in a sly way, and get out an injunction somewhere else, stopping the work upon a whole mine, when it would require three months for the opposite party to have the injunction dissolved, because it is impossible to get the District Judge to bear the case, and the County or Probate Judge cannot hear it, and reverse the decision granting such injunction. The facility for obtaining injunctions in that way, is a great anomaly in our system, which, with other evils, I would like to see abolished.

DELONG.

[July 12.

I am frank to admit that though the system here proposed is to me entirely novel, yet I cannot find, in my own mind, a single valid objection to it—not one. I think, however, in order to save the Supreme Court from considering an almost endless amount of trifling matters, we shall have to enlarge the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, and, probably, we should give the right of appeal from the Justice's Court to the District Court, and make it final there, without the power to go to the Supreme Court; otherwise, as gentlemen are aware, and every member of the bar certainly knows, every trivial case will go into the Supreme Court. In nine cases out of ten, men who go into litigation, even for an amount not exceeding fifty dollars, would carry it to the Supreme Court of the United States before they would stop, if they could get it there. But if you limit the right of appeal in all small cases to the District Courts, then you will have but one appeal, and the Supreme Court will properly take cognizance of all cases involving large amounts. I think if this resolution is adopted, I would be in favor of giving jurisdiction to justices of the peace in cases amounting to five hundred dollars, then allowing an appeal to the District Court—not to be tried de novo there, but to be tried upon statements on appeal—and let the decision there be final, as the judgment of the court of last resort finally determines the appeals from the District Courts. In that way, we insure a speedy end to litigation. I am not in favor of having more than one appeal in any case, for I have always been of the opinion that when a man is twice beaten, he ought to throw up his hand and acknowledge that he has got the worst of the two.

I do not know that I assent entirely, however, to the idea of instructing the Judiciary Committee in this matter. I think it will have just as happy an effect to allow the resolution to go to the Judiciary Committee without instructions, as with them, because, from what I have seen of that committee, I have found it to be composed of men of good practical judgment, and with no foolish pride of opinion, but on the contrary, ready at once to consider any suggestion which commends itself prima facie to their judgment. I think they are all favorably inclined to this proposition now, and unless some new view shall present itself to the minds of one or more of its members, when they meet, I am satisfied that they will as readily agree to adopt this system without instructions, as they would with them. If you instruct them, then when they go into committee their hands are tied, and they cannot help themselves, whatever objections may be urged. That, I think, would operate badly, and at all events, it could be productive of no good.

Although it is hardly pertinent in this connection, yet in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) in relation to my own County of Storey, I would state, as one of the delegates from that county, that I would be unwilling to favor any proposition to divide the county into districts. I think it would be productive of a great deal of trouble and annoyance, both to litigants and to practitioners in such districts; and the trouble which the gentleman thinks is likely to result from giving the judges concurrent jurisdiction, it appears to me would be found not to exist. A suit must be conducted in the court in which it is begun, and the plaintiff, of course, always commences the suit. He can only commence it in some one court having competent jurisdiction, and the defendant then cannot rush off and commence suit against him in another court, because the fact that a suit involving the same subject matter was pending in one court would be a bar to a suit in another court. If B owes A, A only can sue, and if B owns property and A sues him for it, it is hardly a probable case that A is going to attempt to bring his suit in two courts at the same time. Another thing: in New York, as I understand—although I do not know the fact, having grown up almost entirely upon this coast—they have Supreme Courts in certain districts having concurrent jurisdiction. In the city of New York, for instance, they have a Supreme Court with several Judges, (the court of final resort being known as the Court of Appeals,) and there they have found no trouble whatever in relation to jurisdiction. The rule there is this, that the first suit abates the second; and undoubtedly we might have the same rule here. If A, B, and C own property which D unlawfully took, A commences suit in the first district, B in the second, and C in the third, but B and C would have to await the determination of the first suit brought by A for the same subject matter, and it would be a good plea in

JOHNSON.—DELONG—DUNNE.

[July 12.]

abatement put in in the second suit that a previous suit had been commenced for the same subject matter. It would unquestionably have the effect to abate the proceedings, and throw the cost on the plaintiff, and that would soon teach gentlemen better than to commence several suits for the same subject matter. They would not, by that means, injure the defendant at all, but would only mulct themselves in costs. Suppose A claims a mining claim, and B enters thereon and commences to exhaust the estate by taking from it the metallic ore. A goes and files his complaint in ejectment, and his bill in equity, ancillary thereto, praying for an injunction. Now, how is it possible for B to turn around and sue A for having wasted the estate, or for trespass, or for being in possession, when he, the plaintiff himself, is in possession, and the only party who had taken out ore?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will explain that point, with the gentleman's permission. I infer that his experience, and certainly my own observation in his county, has demonstrated it clearly. Here is a ledge of which A claims to be in possession, and B also claims possession, having actual possession of another adjoining ledge, perhaps, and upon some hypothesis claiming that the possession of one, gives him, rightfully, possession of the whole. B, being in possession and extracting valuable ore, A institutes a suit and obtains an injunction against B. Whilst that suit is pending, B in turn brings his action against A, setting forth that A is a trespasser, and is extracting valuable ore. Now, in a case of that kind, cannot the parties make their applications in different courts, each having co-extensive jurisdiction, and would not there then be a conflict of jurisdiction?

Mr. DELONG. I see the gentleman's point; but that difficulty cannot arise where there are two District Courts any more readily than where there is only one. Suppose one party holds possession of a claim which another party owns, and each brings suit against the other, would not the same subject matter—

Mr. DUNNE (interrupting.) I rise to a point of order. The jurisdiction of the courts in Storey County is not before the Convention, and this discussion, it seem to me, is taking up too much of our time.

The PRESIDENT, pro tem. (Mr. Crosman) overruled the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the instance which the gentleman states, where application is made to the same District Court, I admit that the difficulty could not arise, and that the decision of one case necessarily or ordinarily would include the merits of the other, and the rights of the parties therein. It is not usually the case, although such instances have occurred wherein both parties have been restrained, and then, when the judge in deciding the one case passes upon the rights of one party, the decision necessarily involves the relative rights of both and the conflicting claims of the adverse parties are decided in the same case. But that is the practical working of a system where there is only one judge instead of two. If there were two judges passing upon the relative rights of the parties, one judge might, in his opinion, take the view that one of the parties had superior rights, and the other, that the other party's rights were superior, and thus a conflict of jurisdiction would inevitably arise.

Mr. DELONG. Nothing is more frequent in the practice of our courts, than where a suit is commenced by one party, for the party sued to bring a cross-suit. For instance, the Uncle Sam Company brings a suit against the Overman, and the Overman turns round and sues the Uncle Sam, for the same property, in the same court, and in the same character of action. The Uncle Sam is in possession of a part of the mine, and claiming the whole, and so is the Overman. Very well, if the Overman did not commence a suit, the Uncle Sam would allow the time fixed by the statute of limitations to expire, and then, when it was satisfied that the Overman could not obtain possession, it would bring its suit against them. Now what do they do? The Overman has sued the Uncle Sam, and the Uncle Sam has sued the Overman, in the same kind of action; but there is a provision in our code for the consolidation of actions, and the court immediately directs that both actions be consolidated into one, to save the parties the expense and trouble of two suits.

Mr. JOHNSON. How would you do this, if the actions were brought in different Courts?

Mr. DELONG. Why, we would do it with the greatest ease, by your Legislature passing an act, under this Constitution, providing that when more than one suit is commenced and pending between parties in relation to the same cause of action, whether it be in one court or more, on motion of either of the parties, the cases should be consolidated and tried in the court where the first action was brought.

Mr. JOHNSON. Suppose they were both instituted on the same day?

Mr. DELONG. Then it would be a matter within the discretion of the court, which should yield the jurisdiction: that, again, would be a case which you could regulate by legislation. You may say that the party who is plaintiff, if there is difference in the time, shall be entitled to consolidate in the court where the action was first commenced; or, in the other case, you may establish the rule that the court shall exercise its discretion as to the change.

Mr. JOHNSON. Suppose there is a difference of opinion between the two courts as to the exercise of such discretion?

Mr. DELONG. Very well; you can regulate it in this way—that the one suit shall abate the other, or that one shall stand till the other is tried, and then the party may plead the judgment in that suit, in abatement.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Convention will excuse me for making these interrogatories, because I want to see how these difficulties can be overcome. Now I will ask, suppose the two cases were commenced in two courts at the same instant of time?

Mr. DELONG. One can hardly imagine a case where two suits would be commenced and tried instantaneously, and judgment obtained in both courts at the same instant. And you would have to imagine, besides, that both the judges refuse to do a plain duty, or to relieve themselves from the performance of a disagreeable duty, by consolidating the actions in the two courts. I can imagine how any law I ever read is liable to be abused to some extent, but I can see how the system the gentleman proposes for Storey County would be subject to gross abuse.

The older portion of the Comstock lead has already been pretty well litigated, and the litigation is now passing almost entirely away from there to the southern portion of the district. I do not see, therefore, how the gentleman's proposition is going to equalize the amount of business in the way of litigation which these two courts would be required to transact, because it is an incontestible fact that the great mass of litigation, or subjects of litigation, now lies south of Gold Hill, where previous to one year ago there was scarcely any litigation at all in relation to mines, almost all of it lying in that portion of the district north of the divide, between Gold Hill and Virginia.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to know what objection, if any, there is to that system which has been tried for us in New York, where the condition of things in regard to litigation is not unlike that now existing in Virginia City. The litigation is immense before the Supreme Court there. They have one district for the Supreme Court, with four judges, and they have but one clerk. The four judges are at work simultaneously, sometimes several of them trying jury cases, or hearing law cases, and so on, at the same time, in different rooms. Then the one clerk has his deputies attending upon each judge. They divide up the calendar, one judge taking perhaps twenty-five cases, and another twenty-five cases, and arranging the calendar in such a manner that the lawyers may not be compelled to be in attendance in four different places at once. That system is found to work admirably in practice, at least so I am told by those who have practiced under it. It saves the expense of clerks, and saves the necessity of more than one fire-proof safe for keeping the records, which, instead of being scattered about in three or four different rooms, are kept all together. If there is no objection to that system, I would like to see it tried, and it seems to me that it is an admirable one.

Mr. DELONG. I can see no objection to that system, and I think it would suit me better than the one I proposed myself. We can have one court with three judges, and let them divide the work and discharge their duties coordinately, having but one place for the records, so that there would be no trouble to find the papers, or the records of cases passed upon and determined. I would like that very well, but I would prefer to retain the Probate Judge, and have only two District Judges. However, if that is going to disturb the harmony of the system—for I believe we should have a general system of some kind or other—why, then I do not know but it would be well to take the plan of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) for Storey County, instead of the plan of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson).

Mr. DUNNE. I would suggest to the mover of this resolution, that it is too much to ask the Convention, upon the spur of the moment, to agree upon a judicial system upon which the committee themselves do not agree, as is evidenced by the discussion which has taken place. I make the suggestion that he withdraw that portion of his resolution which requires, or instructs the committee, and let them simply bring the matter before the Convention upon their report. It will be time enough to ask us to agree to the proposed system when it shall be reported from the Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. As to this matter of a judiciary system for Storey County, gentlemen will recollect that I was disposed from the first to leave it mainly to the Storey County delegation. I only threw out a suggestion for their consideration, as I conceived that that subject was indirectly, if not directly, involved in the resolution. The inquiries which I propounded, were intended only to elicit the views of other gentlemen, for the consideration of the Convention.

I had a two-fold object in the introduction of this resolution. One fact which I desired to express by its introduction was, that as an individual member of the committee, I felt that we were in a measure instructed, by the action already taken by the Convention in adopting as a basis the old Constitution—that, this being a change radical in its character, I, for one, was unwilling to assume the responsibility, in the absence of definite instructions from the Convention, of adopting such radical change. The other purpose I had in view, however, which applies individually to other members of the Judiciary Committee as well as to myself—the other, and material object was, to elicit the views and opinions on this important subject, of members from the various counties, because the resolution, before its introduction, had only been submitted to the consideration of a few—four, five, or possibly six, at the most—of the members of this Convention. It seems to have met with favor, however, briefly and hastily as it has been considered, and if the Convention do not feel authorized to instruct the committee on so material a matter, upon the short notice which has been given, yet, at least, we shall have obtained the views of members of the Convention, so that the committee may feel authorized

COLLINS—DELONG—JOHNSON—BROSNAN.

[July 12.]

to take some action on the subject, which the Convention may hereafter approve.

As to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, that, it strikes me, is a matter of detail only, and I regard it as being of comparatively little consequence whether that jurisdiction shall be limited to two hundred, three hundred, or five hundred dollars. The exact limit of such jurisdiction, I suppose, may be adjusted hereafter. In regard to the appellate power, the one idea I have in view is, that the Supreme Court shall be the appellate court from the District Courts, and that the District Courts shall be the appellate courts from the Justices' Courts, so as to allow but one appeal in any given case.

The other matters which have been discussed in this connection are mostly, if not altogether, matters of detail. I do not care what disposition may be made of the resolution by the Convention, when the main purpose for which it was introduced shall have been subserved; that is to say, the eliciting of the opinions of members. I will then, if it is generally desired, withdraw it. If the members of the Committee on the Judiciary do not feel themselves imperatively bound by the instructions heretofore given by the Convention—if they feel authorized to make the change, as proposed by this resolution without express authority previously given by the Convention—I am perfectly willing to withdraw the resolution, but will not do so at this time, if other gentlemen wish to speak upon it.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not agree with the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) that this discussion is a waste of time. I think this is the most important business to come before the Convention, and from the colloquial conversation which has occurred between our President and the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) I have, for one, derived a great deal of benefit. It is by virtue of these questions and cross-questions, that we are enabled to arrive at definite conclusions.

Now, sir, in regard to Storey County; I have been of the opinion that that county ought to have two District Courts, because I thought that to have one court only in the county, with two or more judges having concurrent jurisdiction, would lead to a great deal of embarrassment. And I would ask my colleague (Mr. DeLong) whether, if we have one District Court with more than one judge, it will be in the power of litigants to elect which judge they will bring their suits before?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; not if you follow the plan proposed by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse). When you go into court and commence an action, you file your complaint, and a demurrer or answer is filed, and issue is joined. Then the case is placed on the calendar, whether it be a case at law, in equity, or on appeal; and when that calendar is made up, that is, when the court term commences, our practice would be, under the system proposed, for the judges to select from the calendar so many cases to be tried by each, taking alternate cases, for instance. It would be regulated altogether by a rule which would be established by the court itself, each judge taking twenty-five or fifty cases, selected alternately from the calendar, and in that way it would be impossible for litigants to know in advance before which of the judges their cases would be tried, nor could there be any picking of cases by the judges.

Mr. COLLINS. Would that apply to the present calendar?

Mr. DELONG. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe San Francisco has three judges, and also three distinct districts, and as the lawyers in California generally have great admiration for the New York practice, I do not see, unless they thought unfavorably of it, why they did not adopt this system in San Francisco.

Mr. DELONG. It was a very feasible plan for the city of San Francisco to divide that city into districts, for the reason that no more litigation was likely to arise in one district than in another. But that is not the case in Storey County. If you divide that county, the probability is that the large mass of business will fall almost entirely in one court, to the exclusion, almost, of the others; and the same trouble will exist in regard to getting suits tried as exists there now. For instance: had we divided Storey County a year ago into two districts, drawing the line between Gold Hill and Virginia, what would have been the result? There would have been nine new cases located south of that line to one north of it, and the consequence would be that the Southern District Judge would be unable to try the cases before him, and the calendar would be blocked up in the same manner in which it is now. But under the system proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, I do not see that any difficulty in the world can arise. We might have half a dozen judges, and yet all would be harmonious.

But one of two things I must insist upon, and I give notice that I shall insist upon them, namely: that we shall have a Probate Judge who shall have jurisdiction in cases of minor importance, and in criminal cases, such as felonies, and the like—all except homicide—or else we must enlarge the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace. Otherwise we shall have in our higher courts an immense amount of business which is altogether unworthy the attention of a court of respectable character, and which will block up the business of the courts, to the exclusion of important matters, at all times.

Mr. JOHNSON. You can do both. You can have Probate or County Judge, and enlarge the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace also.

Mr. BROSNAN. The objection of my colleague relates to what I presume can be easily remedied, as it is a matter of detail only. I wish to say only that, in my opinion, no trouble

Tuesday.]

BROSNAN—NOURSE—WARWICK—FITCH—FRIZELL.

[July 12.]

can arise from giving concurrent jurisdiction to two or three judges in Storey County. In San Francisco, at the present time, there are not three judges for the city proper, because the county of Contra Costa is attached to one of the judicial districts, and San Mateo County is attached to another. To show how well this arrangement might be made to work in practice, I will state that in the first organization of the city of San Francisco, there was a City Court, having three judges, each having jurisdiction over the whole city. They had but one clerk, and one place for the records of that court, and when the calendar, as my colleague (Mr. DeLong) has here exemplified, was made up on the issues formed for trial, there was distributed to each of the judges a portion of that calendar—to this a portion, to that a portion; and to the third the remaining portion—and then they went into separate apartments and tried their cases. They encountered no difficulty under that arrangement, as I am a witness.

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Brosnan to strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. BROSNAN. I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. Such a thing as a County Court is not known in New England, I believe. My native State of Maine I know has none, nor has Massachusetts, nor Minnesota; they may have in Illinois, but I think not, nor has Pennsylvania, I think. At all events, in a large proportion of the States of the Union there is no such thing known as a County Court. They have Probate Courts, but no such thing as a County Court. Consequently this proposition is not an innovation; it is simply going back to an earlier system, which has been departed from in many cases, because here we see no necessity for departing from it.

In regard to this matter of a single district having three judges, it seems to me to be as simple a plan as can well be provided for Storey County. There is certainly no practical difficulty to be apprehended about it. As the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has said, the calendar is made up and divided among the judges, and they have special terms. Perhaps they will devote Mondays to hearing and disposing of motions and demurrers, and so on, dividing up the business through the week. Then a motion or demurrer cannot be brought before any certain judge which the moving party wishes, but he makes the motion to be heard before the court at a special term; the calendar for the special term is made up, and it is decided by the judges themselves, among themselves, who shall hold the special term. All these matters of detail are arranged by the rules made by the judges themselves, and they themselves make the selection of the judges, from time to time, who are to attend to this or that particular part of the business. They will fix and establish those rules, as occasion requires, among themselves. In respect to the number, I should suppose that three judges would be needed for Storey County.

Mr. WARWICK. I think I can make a motion which will quiet this whole matter, since we have exhausted a great deal of time upon it without making any progress. As we have none but lawyers on the Judiciary Committee, and as it will be much easier to settle the matter there, I move that the whole subject be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FITCH. I would like to know if the gentleman means to be understood that none but lawyers have participated in the discussion?

Mr. FRIZELL. The object sought for here, I understand, is the accommodation of the people in their local affairs, so far as the judiciary is concerned. Now I am from the southern portion of Storey County, a county which, although not large, it is true, nevertheless contains a large number of people; and as a delegate from Gold Hill, I have reasons to urge which I think are not only plausible, but just, why Storey County should be districted. With all due deference to the practicing attorneys of our delegation, I think, on the part of the people of Gold Hill, which is an incorporated city, and in view of the just rights of those people, as citizens of that portion of the county, that I have good reasons to urge before the Convention why that county should be districted. And in case it should turn out, in the wisdom of the Convention, that in shaping and putting in operation this machinery, it is found to be impracticable to district the county, then, in case we should have two District Judges in the county, I hold that one court-room should be established at Gold Hill. Now the primary object of this amendment is, as I before remarked, to accommodate the people. You are well aware, Mr. President, that cities are districted and divided into wards for that one purpose of accommodating the people. Now, I say, and every gentleman from Storey County knows it, and many gentlemen from Ormsby County know it also, that Storey County can be districted perfectly; that the landmarks are perfect there. There are two corporate cities in that county, and there are two official maps of those cities. The land has been surveyed from the western boundary next to Washoe, to the southern boundary adjoining the county of Lyon, and the lines as surveyed have been marked, and can be plainly fixed. There can therefore be no inconvenience on account of any uncertainty of jurisdiction. Juries can be drawn from the body of the county, as it is right they should be; and I say this, that Gold Hill, which is the oldest mining camp in the Territory of Nevada, and the mining district having within it the dormant wealth of an empire, should not be overlooked. That city has assisted and worked side by side with her sister city of Virginia—they are twin sisters. Now

CHAPIN—FRIZELL—DELONG.

[July 12.]

I firmly believe that if the plan of districting can be conceded and agreed upon, it will accommodate the people of Gold Hill better than any other arrangement. Although some of the delegation from Storey County may not be willing to accord it, yet it is only fair and just, and I ask nothing more than that.

One word as to the argument of my colleague from Storey (Mr. DeLong) that the greater amount of the litigation arises in the southern portion of the county. That is the argument which he urges as a reason why the county should not be districted, and why all the judges should sit in Virginia. Now I ask if, on the contrary, that is not a strong reason, if you wish to accommodate the people, why one district, or one court, at least, should be established at Gold Hill? According to the gentleman's own showing, if you establish courts altogether in Virginia, the litigants will have to go from Gold Hill to Virginia, or even from American Flat, or the intervening country between Gold Hill and American Flat, and the expense would be the same as if they had to come to Carson City. A man has to be away from home in order to attend the courts. He cannot be with his family, any how, and the distance he may be from them is not material.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. [interrupting]. This is a matter not strictly before the Convention, although under the resolution discussion has been allowed to take a wide range.

Mr. CHAPIN. I cannot feel, with some of the gentlemen who have spoken, that this long discussion has been a waste of time. It is a subject of vast importance to us, and this, it seems to me, is the proper time to have a full and free discussion upon it, and to bring out all the points. I have been very deeply interested in the discussion which has thus far been had, and I am more fully satisfied than I was when the resolution was first presented, that it was dictated by wisdom, and that we ought to, and I trust will adopt it, with great unanimity.

Now, a few words, before I take my seat, in reference to dividing that little county of Storey. I did not expect that any such thing would be proposed. We are already groaning there under a taxation that is enormous, and we have the figures coming before us in the papers of this morning, showing a debt or expenditure to the amount of $466,128 for that county of Storey. The proposition is now being made, to consolidate the city and county, in order that we may reduce our expenses, and save ourselves from such enormous taxation. Now, my friend, the gentleman from Gold Hill (Mr. Frizell) favors a proposition to make a division, which will add still further to that taxation, and to those expenses. That would be the result.

Mr. FRIZELL. I ask the gentleman to show it.

Mr. CHAPIN. Why, if you make a provision for a District Court and a County Court, you must have two court-houses, separate and distinct from each other, and a whole batch of clerks, to prepare and conduct the business in each.

Mr. FRIZELL. Cannot you hold two courts with one clerk and a deputy?

Mr. CHAPIN. But you can have one court without employing a deputy, and if you have two courts, you must have two offices that will be accessible for the business of those courts. Let us condense it all into one court, and have but one clerk; and let us economize, especially if we are going to have a State Government, which will certainly increase our taxation. If the government of our new State is going to cost so much more than the territorial government, do not let us add to our expenses in matters of minutia, where it is not necessary.

Mr. DELONG. I merely want to suggest that down in Gold Hill they could, perhaps, find an excellent place in which to hold a court for the accommodation of my colleague, by taking one of the quartz mills—and I believe there is little or nothing but quartz mills there. But, seriously, I would ask if my colleague (Mr. Frizell) thinks it would be very convenient to run the attorneys and litigants backwards and forwards between Virginia and Gold Hill. They would have to do some tall running, most certainly. A man would want to know what was up in the court in Gold Hill, and when he got there, very often he would have to travel back to Virginia, as fast as he came. It would be a good thing to give custom to the livery-stable keepers. Now, Gold Hill is a nice place, and always has been, and I have always admired it. I have a particular admiration for her representatives. [Merriment]. I do not blame them at all for proposing this division; but I think the Convention would be mistaken if it should adopt their views, and so give rise to perpetual racing matches between attorneys. I am willing to run a little race with my colleague, if he wishes, but I do not like too much of that exercise, that is all.

Mr. FRIZELL. Now, sir, I have been a resident of Gold Hill for four years and a half, and I feel authorized to speak for her interests. There is a flag in our possession in the town of Gold Hill, which speaks volumes for her patriotism and liberality. She has contributed, for each of her inhabitants, something like eleven dollars and a half to the Sanitary Fund. Now I pledge myself that, if a court is established there, so far as the court-room is concerned, it shall not cost the State of Nevada, nor Storey County, either, so much as one cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The discussion of this matter, the Chair will suggest, had better take place when the report of the committee comes up for consideration.

Mr. FRIZELL. I was merely answering the argument of my colleague. I will say to my other friend and colleague, (Mr. Chapin,) that his argument against having a court at Gold Hill,

Tuesday,]

DELONG—CHAPIN—BANKS—JOHNSON—STURTEVANT—DUNNE.

[July 12.

reminds me of a certain anecdote of Dr. Johnson. This resolution, you will remember, started out with the idea of accommodating the people, as regards the judiciary, and their attendance on the courts. Now it is related that Dr. Johnson frequently visited at a house where a certain young lady was constantly preaching up democratic principles, social equality, and the idea of bringing all people up to a certain level, or all down to a certain level. The Doctor did not fully believe in her sincerity, and so, in order to test her, he one day proposed to bring in the footman to dine with them. "Madam," said he, "we will all dine together, and so be on a level." But the lady was terribly indignant that he should bring in a menial and propose to seat him at her dinner table. "Madam," said the Doctor, "that is just what I expected. You levellers are willing to bring those who are above you, down, but you are not willing to elevate those who are below you." In the same way my colleague professes to be willing to accommodate the people, but he has shown no willingness to bring himself down to the level of our town. He is willing to accommodate the people to a certain extent, and until it reaches his own case, and then he is not willing to level any further.

Mr. DELONG. I would like to ask the gentleman how he can expect people in Virginia to bring Gold Hill up to their level? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAPIN. I desire to make but one remark further in regard to this division of the county proposed by the gentleman from Gold Hill. Such a division would be like dividing a family, and there is no propriety in it. Those two places are bound together, and built up together, so that you cannot tell where one ends and the other begins. Why, sir, only a little while ago it was reported that a stranger on his journey came to Gold Hill and inquired the way to Virginia.

Mr. DELONG. He was lost.

Mr. CHAPIN. They told him to keep right on up the road, and it is said he did keep on, right through Virginia, and away beyond, to the summit north of Virginia. When he got there, he met a resident, and inquired how much farther it was to Virginia, and the man replied: "Why, sir, you are going the wrong way!"

Mr. DELONG. He was a Muggins. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAPIN. No doubt of it, because he came from Gold Hill. He said he had just come from there, and it was all one place all the way. And so it is. A stranger would regard it all as one town, and if he did not know the size of the town, would pass right on through Virginia, supposing that he was still in Gold Hill. Now, the gentleman should not undertake to divorce those twin portions of that county. We have had enough of divorces there already, and we want none of that kind. Now, I move that this whole matter be referred back to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to prepare their report, and present it to this Convention.

Mr. BANKS. I do not like to have the resolution referred in its present form, for it seems to be in an improper shape for reference. To refer a resolution to a committee which that resolution instructs, seems to me absurd. I would prefer to have it amended so as to begin—"Resolved, that it is the sense of this Convention"—and so on, and then we can properly refer it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will change the phraseology so as to read that the committee be instructed to report upon the expediency of making this change.

Mr. STURTEVANT. What objection is there to referring it to the Storey County delegation, and letting them arrange it to suit themselves?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will modify the resolution, so as to read as follows:—

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to consider the expediency of embodying such proceedings in the judicial features of the Constitution as will provide for the election of a District Judge in each organized county of the State, (except Storey County, wherein there shall be two District Judges), with such additional jurisdiction as is now conferred upon County Probate Courts, so as to dispense with such County or Probate Courts.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution as modified, and it was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the rules be suspended, so that we may pass over the intervening order of business and go into Committee of the Whole on the article in relation to Taxation.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would prefer to take up the regular order of business, and finish that up. I am opposed to changing the order of business.

The PRESIDENT. I would suggest that we have but a short time remaining in which to transact any business in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNNE. That is the reason I made the motion—to get into Committee of the Whole as soon as possible. We have an hour left yet.

Mr. DELONG. We do not save anything by skipping one portion of our business in order to take up another portion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Dunne, and it was not agreed to.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, was taken up in its order on the general file for a third reading.

THE OATH FOR VOTERS.

Section 2, as passed to engrossment, was read, as follows:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot or insane person, or any person who refuses to take the following oath or affirmation, to wit: "I, ———, do solemnly swear or affirm) that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State, Convention, or Legislature, to the contrary, notwithstanding; and, further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever—So HELP ME GOD"—shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

[July 12.]

Mr. COLLINS. I suggest that that clause which relates to requiring the oath to be taken, should be made to read so that no person who refuses, "on being challenged," to take the oath, shall be allowed to vote.

Mr. DELONG. Out of abundant caution, because it is urged by some that it is incumbent on every voter, as it now reads, to take that oath, if my colleague will move the amendment, I will second it.

Mr. FRIZELL. I see no necessity for that. It is evidently the meaning of the language, as it stands, that a man is only to be required to take the oath when some obstacle is placed in the way of his voting. If you take the entire language as it is, I think that will be the understanding.

Mr. COLLINS. I think, as it now stands, it would be within the power of any man who wishes to defeat an election to so embarrass the polls as to prevent more than one-third of the votes from being received. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "who," the words, "when challenged;" so as to read, "who, when challenged, refuses to take the following oath," etc.

Mr. DELONG. I second the amendment. I will say to my colleague, (Mr. Frizell), that although the language seems so clear, yet I heard a lawyer in this city the other day insist upon it that this section required every man to take the oath. Now, although I do not say that that construction is correct or logical, yet in order to remove every quibble or doubt, I would like to see this amendment made. It can do no harm, and it certainly may avoid confusion.

The PRESIDENT. If there is any objection it will require a motion to recommit the article.

Mr. FRIZELL. I withdraw my objection.

[Mr. COLLINS in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. There is another matter I would like to suggest, in this connection, which has occurred to me since the Convention last took action upon this section. I recognize the fact that an amendment in this particular, or embodying substantially the same language as that now proposed, is necessary; but there is another difficulty, it seems to me, which is not met by this amendment. Suppose a precinct where there are five or six hundred voters—and there are several such, I believe, in Storey County, and some containing more than that number—and suppose an individual places himself in a position to challenge every voter. Now, in the judgment of the Convention, where the voters are so very numerous, would it be possible, within the hours of election, for that oath to be administered to every one, so as to enable all to deposit their votes? It will be observed that this oath is of considerable length.

Mr. FITCH. I will suggest, that in Storey County, anybody who tried that on would find it mighty rough for him about ten o'clock in the morning.

Mr. JOHNSON. We are providing now for a law; not a mob law, but, on the contrary, a law of such a character as, I hope, will prevent any such evil practice.

Mr. FITCH. I do not say that I would advocate it; I only state what would probably be the result.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the inquiry, whether difficulties are not likely to arise by the operation of this section, if left as it is, or even with the amendment which has been offered. I would prefer that the Convention should take further action upon the subject. Let us dispense with the third reading of the bill at this time, and consider the matter a little; and let us make any corrections that may be necessary, when we shall have had time to prepare any amendments needed to obviate this difficulty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to suggest that it is contemplated in another portion of this article to provide for a registry law, and it has been my view, from the first, that when the voters are registered, then and there, this oath should be administered. That would do away with all this objection.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope this amendment will be made, because that will improve the section to some extent. Then I shall propose to make a further amendment by striking out that oath altogether. I can see objections to it, which, in my judgment, are most serious. Any person in the city of Virginia, in some of those wards where they cast from twelve to fifteen hundred votes at an election, when he finds his faction in a minority, might get together a number of men who are "on the shoulder," and get them to take up their positions around the polls, and require every man who comes up to vote to take that oath; and then look at the amount of time that would be consumed. Such a faction may see to it that every vote on their side is cast in the morning, and in the afternoon, when the laboring men, the "honest miners," come in to cast their votes, every one may be required to take that oath, so that not one-fourth of them can have the privilege of voting for want of time to get through with all this long form of oath. I ask that gentlemen see to it here, that, while every possible safeguard is thrown around the ballot-box, we do not guard it so strictly as to prevent honest voters from exercising their rights. We have a registry law provided for now, which will be in itself almost a perfect safeguard, and now let us strike that oath out, and leave it to the Legislature to make such provision in relation to the registry of voters as may be necessary. Let them provide, if they please, that such an oath shall be taken at the time of registration, and then we shall be safe.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. TOZER. When this Article was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, I proposed an amendment to this section, which, however, was voted down by a large majority. And I do not propose now to offer the same or any similar amendment; but I hope that the amendment already before the Convention will prevail; and I hope that, as suggested by my colleague, (Mr. Chapin), this entire matter of the oath will be stricken out. It seems to me, that if we leave it in it will very much encumber and embarrass the machinery of elections. At any little petty election, under such a provision, this difficulty may arise, and at an election for county officers, where the heat of the contest is great between the different contestants for some of the offices—in populous towns like Virginia and Gold Hill, or other large towns of the State—the election may be so embarrassed by this means as to occupy the whole day in challenging perhaps only two or three hundred voters, although there may be a thousand or twelve hundred men entitled to vote at the same polls. The day would not be sufficiently long to compass the whole election at that rate. I hope the section will be so amended, at any rate, that persons entitled to it shall not be denied the privilege of an elector. Let us leave the Legislature to settle and arrange these matters of detail. We are seeking to remodel this Constitution in such a way as to render it acceptable to the people of the Territory, and we should bear in mind that one chief objection upon which it was formerly rejected was, that it legislated too much. I think I can see a disposition on the part of this Convention to fall into the same error, by legislating too much in this article, as well as some others before us. We are pursuing the same course that swamped the work of the former Convention, and I trust that we shall adopt some other course, and devise some other way by which this difficulty may be obviated.

Mr. KENNEDY. I believe I was the author of this oath, at least so far as the introduction of it into this section is concerned, and I must say I cannot see the difficulties which other gentlemen have discovered in regard to it. I acknowledge that, theoretically, there may be a difficulty. Suppose you challenge every man who comes up to the polls, then, of course, all could not vote. But that same objection exists at the present time. If any person wishes to challenge any or every voter, he has the right to do so, and can insist that the oath shall be administered to every man who comes to the polls. That is the case under our present territorial laws, and I do not see that the administration of this oath would take much, if any longer, than the one we now have.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Ormsby now in the chair, (the President,) will be adopted. There are several matters here which seem to need some change, and if any amendment is to be made, it should be done at this stage of our progress. I think that, upon consideration, gentlemen will agree with me that the words "unless an amnesty be granted" should be stricken out, before the section is finally adopted.

Mr. HOVEY. I move to recommit the section to a select committee, with instructions to report on the propriety of striking out the oath.

Mr. CHAPIN. In reply to my friend from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) who remarked that there is an oath now which could be required to be taken, I would say that that is very true, but that same oath would still be necessary, in addition to this, which makes it so much the worse. The oath now required by law, is a very brief one. The voter must swear that he has been so long a time in the precinct, and a few other matters, and the addition of this long oath to that, makes the matter so much the more objectionable.

Mr. FITCH. I trust the oath will be stricken out, for I do not see that it would be of any particular use. It will devolve upon the Legislature to prescribe the punishment for illegal voting, and the Legislature will designate the manner and means by which convictions for illegal voting can be procured. They can at the same time require and prescribe an oath to be taken, and fix the punishment for swearing falsely. I think it is too much like legislation, to insert a provision of this kind in the Constitution.

Mr. CROSMAN. I am in favor of recommitting the article without instructions. I have an amendment which I wish to propose, and there are several others who have amendments to offer. I will move as an amendment to the pending motion, that the article be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole, without instructions.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I hope, as there are several amendments which gentlemen wish to offer, that if the article can be recommitted for amendments generally, that course will be taken. I do not see why the Convention may not instruct itself in regard to amendments; at any rate, I trust that gentlemen will not spend the time in harping upon the matter.

Mr. DUNNE. I should be opposed, entirely, to the motion to recommit without instructions, and I think the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) has hit the nail exactly on the head. The oath should be required to be taken, but it is generally impracticable to administer it at the polls. The place to do that is the registration office, and the Legislature should be authorized to require it to be done at that place at the time of registration, and let the right of a man to vote be settled when his name is registered. The registration should be completed ten days before the election, and then let every person who desires to exercise the right of suffrage, take care that his name is registered in due season. It would be dangerous to empower any citizen who might see fit, to obstruct the polls by challenging every voter, and requiring him to take this oath. I think the propriety of the amendment will suggest itself to every one, and I hope it will be adopted, and then let the article be recommitted for further amendment if necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY. In order to avoid the tedious debate which is likely to ensue, with the consent of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) I withdraw my motion to recommit, and will let the question be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins).

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope we may be allowed to come to a direct vote without recommitting the article. I think it may be done just as well now, and save time.

Mr. BANKS. I dislike to rise to a question of order, but gentlemen all know that we cannot recommit an article without instructions, upon its third reading. The regular Parliamentary course is to go on and consider it. I raise the question of order, that it is not in order to recommit the article without special instructions.

The PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CHAPIN. Then I move to recommit the article to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out the oath and all pertaining thereto.

Mr. WARWICK. If the Convention wishes to retain this oath, I think it can readily be put in such a form as to satisfy all. Let it be made to read, that when the voter is challenged before the Registrar, he shall, if there be any question about his loyalty, take this oath. A man's loyalty can be tested as well before the Registrar as anywhere, and if there be any doubt about it, that is the proper place, and then the best time, to settle the question. Then there will be no necessity for occupying the time at the polls by making challenges. I think, by substituting those words, we can obviate the only difficulty in the way of the adjustment of this question, and I respectfully submit that suggestion to the judgment of the Convention.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentlemen is obviously wrong, in anticipating any office which may or may not be created. We do not know but that section relative to registration will be stricken out. Moreover, there is another objection: the Registrar may be in his office, and if he is not required to demand the oath of every one, without any challenge, there may not be a man to make the challenge within three squares of the office, and so the provision would be entirely nugatory. I would be in favor of making it obligatory on the Registrar to administer the oath to every man who is registered.

Mr. FITCH. Now why not leave the matter to the Legislature? I am afraid we are laying ourselves open to the same criticism as the last Convention—that we are leaving nothing for the Legislature to do but to pass a law declaring whether or not dogs are property. I think we had better leave something to the Legislature, and not attempt to put into this Constitution all the legislation which may be required for the State for the next ten years.

Mr. WARWICK. I did not make any motion, because I understood there was an amendment pending.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope the gentleman will offer his amendment in such a form as to make it obligatory on the Registrar to require the oath to be taken by every man, whether he is challenged or not.

Mr. WARWICK. I will move to amend the motion to recommit, so as to recommit the section with instructions to insert between the word "who" and the word "refuses," the words, "when challenged before the Registrar."

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am somewhat of the same opinion as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) in regard to our legislating here. If you were to insert the whole proceedings of a camp meeting in this section, I do not see as it would make any particular difference. [Meriment.] These little technicalities ought to be left to be regulated by the Legislature, for it is not to be presumed that we are going to enact an entire election law here. We cannot well do it if we would. I am in hopes that we shall come speedily to a vote on these numerous amendments, and either kill or cure. We can vote them all up, or all down, in about two minutes, if we will.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Warwick, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Chapin to recommit, with instructions to amend by striking out the oath and all relating thereto, and it was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

Article III, entitled "Distribution of Powers," was taken up on its third reading, and read as follows:—

ARTICLE III.

SECTION I. The powers of the Government of the State of Nevada shall be divided into three separate departments—the Legislative, the Executive, and Judicial—and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases herein expressly directed or permitted.

The question being on the final passage of the article, the yeas and nays were taken, and the vote resulted—yeas, 31; nays, none, as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—31.

Nays—none.

So the article was passed.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, was taken up on its third reading, and read as far as, and including, Section 3.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to recommit this article, with instructions to strike out the words in Section 3, "on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November," and to insert instead the words, "on the first Wednesday in September;" and also to add to the section the words "except as hereinafter provided." I will ask that the Secretary read the section as it will stand if amended.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the first Wednesday in September, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. DUNNE. One reason for offering this amendment is, that in November great numbers of our qualified electors return to the State of California to spend the winter, and on that account, if we have the election in November, it will reduce our apparent vote. It is quite an object for us to show a large vote, for the purpose of securing a large representation in Congress. I think, also, that November is too late in the season. As a general thing, the weather would be much better for campaigning in September. Again, that is the time for the Presidential election, every four years. These things will certainly commend themselves to almost every member here, though Storey County may not be, perhaps, so much in favor of the change, as that is a very small county, as regards its territorial extent, and there is not much difficulty in travelling about in it. I think, however, that there are very potent reasons for making the change in these two respects. At all events, I desire to bring the subject before the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. I am willing to support the amendment if we can have it engrafted right into the article at once; but if we go to recommitting all these sections, we shall never get through in the world.

Mr. DUNNE. I will ask a suspension of the rules, in order to make the amendment now.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and, upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 15; nays, 11—not two-thirds having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DUNNE. Now I renew my motion to recommit the section, with the instructions which have been read.

The question was taken, and on a division the motion was agreed to—ayes, 15; nays, 13.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Article V, entitled Executive Department, was taken up on its third reading and read, as follows:—

ARTICLE V.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The supreme executive power of this State shall be vested in a Chief Magistrate, who shall be Governor of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and places of voting for members of the Legislature, and shall hold his office for four years from the time of his installation and until his successor shall be qualified.

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, who is not a qualified elector, and who, at the time of such election, has not attained the age of twenty-five years; and who, except at the first election under this Constitution, shall not have been a citizen resident of this State for two years next preceding the election.

SEC. 4. The returns of every election for Governor, and other State officers voted for at the general election, shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of Government, directed to the Secretary of State, and on the third Monday of December succeeding such election, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Associate Justices shall meet at the office of the Secretary of State, and open and canvass the election returns for Governor and all other State officers, and forthwith declare the result and publish the names of the candidates elected. The persons having the highest number of votes for their respective offices shall be declared elected, but in case any two or more have an equal, and the highest number of votes for the same office, the Legislature shall, by joint vote of both Houses, elect one of said persons to fill said office.

SEC. 5. The Governor shall be commander-in-Chief of the Military forces of this State, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

SEC. 6. He shall transact all Executive business with the officers of the Government, civil and military, and may require information, in writing, from the officers of the Executive Department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 7. He shall see that the laws are faithfully executed.

SEC. 8. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the next election and qualification of the person entitled to such office.

SEC. 9. The Governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the Legislature, by a proclamation, and shall state to both Houses, when organized, the purpose for which they have been convened, and the Legislature shall transact no legislative business except that for which they were specially convened, or such other legislative business as the Governor may call to the attention of the Legislature while in session.

SEC. 10. He shall communicate by message, to the Legislature, at every regular session, the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 11. In case of a disagreement between the two Houses, with respect to the time of adjournment, the Governor shall have power to adjourn the Legislature to such time as he may think proper; provided, it be not beyond the time fixed for the meeting of the next Legislature.

Tuesday.]

DUNNE—FITCH—CHAPIN—NOURSE—DELONG.

[July 12.]

SEC. 12. No person shall, while holding any office under the United States Government, hold the office of Governor, except as herein expressly provided.

SEC. 13. The Governor shall have the power to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves for a period not exceeding sixty days, dating from the time of conviction, for all offenses, except in cases of impeachment. Upon conviction for treason, he shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the Legislature at its next meeting, when the Legislature shall either pardon, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. And if the Legislature should fail or refuse to make final disposition of such case, the sentence shall then be enforced at such time and places as the Governor, by his order, may direct. The Governor shall communicate to the Legislature, at the beginning of every session, every case of fine or forfeiture remitted, or reprieve, pardon, or commutation granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence, its date, and the date of the remission, commutation, pardon or reprieve.

SEC. 14. The Governor, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Attorney General, or a major part of them, of whom the Government shall be one, may, upon such conditions and with such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments, and grant pardons after convictions in all cases, except treason and impeachments, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, relative to the manner of applying for pardons.

SEC. 15. There shall be a seal of this State, which shall be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called the "Great Seal of the State of Nevada."

SEC. 16. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the State of Nevada, sealed with the Great Seal of the State, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 17. A Lieutenant Governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor, and his term of office and his eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall only have a casting vote therein. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, or be absent from the State, the President pro tempore of the Senate, shall act as the Governor, until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

SEC. 18. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of said office, resignation or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, and at the head of any military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of the military force of the State.

SEC. 19. A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, a Controller, and an Attorney General, shall be elected at the time and places, and in the same manner as the Governor. The term of office of each shall be the same as is prescribed for the Governor. Any elector shall be eligible to either of said offices.

SEC. 20. The Secretary of State shall keep a true record of the official acts of the Legislature and Executive Departments of the Government, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all matters relative thereto, before either branch of the Legislature.

SEC. 21. The Governor, Secretary of State, and Attorney General shall constitute a Board of State Prison Commissioners, which Board shall have such supervision of all matters connected with the State Prison as may be provided by law. They shall also constitute a "Board of Examiners," with power to examine all claims against the State, (except salaries or compensation of officers as fixed by law), and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. And no claim against the State, except salaries or compensation of officers fixed by law, shall be passed upon by the Legislature, without having been considered and acted upon by said Board of Examiners.

SEC. 22. The Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, Attorney General, and Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. DUNNE. Before the question is taken on the final passage of the article, I call the attention of the member who gave notice of his purpose to move an amendment in respect to the term of office of four years for the Governor. If he wishes to offer that amendment now is the time to do so, unless gentlemen think that the matter can be reached in the schedule.

Mr. FITCH. I believe I gave that notice, but upon reflection, I will not offer the amendment.

SURVEYOR GENERAL.

Mr. CHAPIN. I wish to move an amendment in Section 19, to add after the word "Controller," the words, a "Surveyor General," so that the section will read—

"A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, a Controller, a Surveyor General, and an Attorney General shall be elected," etc.

The PRESIDENT. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NOURSE. I object. What do you want of a Surveyor General?

Mr. CHAPIN. Then I move to recommit the article with instructions to make that amendment. We have public lands which will require the attention of such an officer.

Mr. DELONG. I believe the Act of Congress donates to us five hundred thousand acres, and the State may require to have it segregated, by the joint action of the Surveyor General of the United States, and the Surveyor General of the State.

Mr. CHAPIN. There is no doubt that we need such an officer.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to see the law in respect to that donation. I know that Minnesota got her lands without any Surveyor General.

Mr. DELONG. I think I can find the law for the gentleman.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to suspend the rules in order to make the amendment without recommitment.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on recommitting the article, with special instructions, to make the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a question of order. The time has arrived for the recess.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is correct. The hour (twelve o'clock) for the recess having arrived, the Convention is at recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

Tuesday.]

CHAPIN—NOURSE—DELONG.

[July 12.]

The SECRETARY reported that twenty-eight members were present.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT—SURVEYOR GENERAL.

The PRESIDENT. The business before the Convention is, the consideration of the motion made by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Chapin), to recommit Article V, entitled "Executive Department," with instructions to amend Section 19, by inserting after the word "Controller," the words, a "a Surveyor General."

Mr. CHAPIN. I will modify my motion. I move to refer the article to a select committee of three, with instructions to make that amendment and report immediately.

Mr. NOURSE. I have a word to say about that motion before the vote is taken. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Storey on my right, (Mr. DeLong), with his usual accuracy of legal citation, that the law granting lands to the several States for the purposes of internal improvements, provided that such lands should be selected by the United States Surveyor General, acting in conjunction with the Surveyor General of the State, or words to that effect. Now, sir, that law was passed in 1841, and it reads as follows:—

"There shall be granted to each State specified in the first section of this act five hundred thousand acres of land for purposes of internal improvement: provided, that to each of the said States which has already received grants for said purposes, there is hereby granted no more than a quantity of land which shall, together with the amount such State has already received as aforesaid, make five hundred thousand acres, the selections in all of the said States to be made within their limits respectively, in such manner as the Legislatures thereof shall direct; and located in parcels conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions, of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in any one location, on any public land except such as is or may be reserved from sale by any law of Congress, or proclamation of the President of the United States, which said location may be made at any time after the lands of the United States in said States respectively shall have been surveyed according to existing laws. And there shall be, and hereby is, granted to each new State that shall be hereafter admitted into the Union, upon such admission, so much land as, including such quantity as may have been granted to such State before its admission, and while under a Territorial Government, for purposes of internal improvement as aforesaid, shall make five hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected and located as aforesaid."

Now, Mr. President, I do not see, so far as that statute goes, or so far as relates to any other lands which this State is going to receive from the General Government, what a State Surveyor General has to do. In relation to school lands: there are no grants of school lands until the townships are divided into districts, and surveyed, so as to know where the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections are. After the survey, showing where the section lines are, those sections may be located; and only after the United States has surveyed the lands, can we make the selection. What on earth, then, have we for a Surveyor General to do? And why should we fill up our State Government with sinecure offices? I can see only one advantage to be derived, and that is, that some very good fellow indeed may get a sinecure office. An office is to be created, with absolutely no duties to be performed, just for the sake of giving it away to somebody. For these reasons, I shall vote against the motion to recommit.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman has read the original act of Congress, but to that act there have been at least a dozen amendments. Now, sir, it happened to be my duty, as well as my pleasure, to act as counsel in a case involving the title to the land where the town of Red Bluff is situated. That land had been located by school-land warrant, by N. L. Clark and others, in 1852, and finally passed into the hands of J. Granville Doll, he claiming under the location of school-land warrants made before the division or subdivision of townships made by the General Government. The case may be found in the Fourth California Reports. After the United States survey was made, so as to establish the division lines, it became a serious question as to the validity of those locations under the school-land warrants, but they were confirmed by the Supreme Court of California. The citizens of Red Bluff then, at my suggestion, applied to the Land Department, at the office in Marysville, to have that location sanctioned and confirmed, but the Land Department of California denied us the relief we sought. We then applied to the United States Land Commissioner in Washington, Judge Edmonds, and the matter was submitted before him upon briefs prepared by Mr. Edward Cadwallader, of Sacramento, and myself; and Judge Edmonds decided in favor of the citizens of Red Bluff. That decision is now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. In his decision Judge Edmonds held that the segregation contemplated by law in relation to school-land warrants was to be made by the cooperation of the United States Surveyor General and the Surveyor General of the State of California, acting coördinately, and that the reports of those two officers, if they agreed, should be submitted to the Land Department for approval. That was the decision of Judge Edmonds in the case of the citizens of Red Bluff vs. J. Granville Doll, which is now on file in the city of Washington. I do not remember the language of the statute, although I was engaged five days in trying the case, and nearly twenty more in making my brief; but I know it was a point made by me in the case, and Judge Edmonds distinctly decided, that the segregation of the public lands should be a joint act on the part of the officers of the State and those of the General Government. It was an equity right on the part of the State. They were entitled to so many acres before they were segregated, and when that segregation took place, the operations of those officers must be approved by the Land Department.

Mr. NOURSE. That is precisely so; but there is one thing which is overlooked. The gentleman neglects to make the statement that the State authorities simply took such action as was prescribed by the Legislature of California. If the Legislature chose to create the office of Surveyor General, and to say that he should locate those lands, then, of course, it is competent for him to act.

Tuesday,]

DELONG—NOURSE—PRESIDENT—BROSNAN—KENNEDY.

[July 12.]

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? If we do not provide for a Surveyor General, what officer will have that power?

Mr. NOURSE. Why, it will be done as it has repeatedly been done in almost all the Western States. It may be done by the Governor, the Secretary of State, or any other officer. The law prescribes that the segregation shall be made after the survey by the United States. All there is to do is, not to run the lines, but simply to make the selections, which the Governor, the Secretary of State, or any other officer can do, just as well as a Surveyor General. There is no surveying to be done about it, but we avail ourselves of the survey made by the United States. This very decision in respect to the location of those school-lands which the gentleman has referred to, sustains my view. It was decided, as he says, that that location had no operation whatever, until the action by the State Government had been approved by the United States authorities, after the survey. Under the law which I have read, neither this grant for internal improvements, nor any other grants to the State by the General Government, can be located and confirmed until the section lines are run; and they must, of course, be run by the United States Surveyor, before such location can possibly be made. So it appears, therefore, that this office is entirely unnecessary. We may, if we please, create such an office, and give the incumbent a salary, if our State expenses are not high enough without; and then the Legislature may assign to him, if they please, the duty of making these selections. I do not dispute that; but I say there are no duties necessary to be performed, which would require such an officer, and if we create the office, it is merely a wanton expense imposed upon the people of this State.

Mr. DELONG. The Constitution which we propose to adopt, names the respective State officers, and defines their duties, and I believe it is a principle of law that the Legislature cannot, where the Constitution prescribes the duties of an officer, clothe him with any other or further powers and duties, than those which are so defined in the Constitution. Now, I submit that by the terms of this section, neither the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, the Controller, the Secretary of State, nor any other officer of the State, is authorized to make these selections, and no such duty can be imposed, nor any such power conferred, upon either of them.

The PRESIDENT. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him. If he will look at Section 22, of this article on Executive Department, he will find that the officers of the State are required to "perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law."

Mr. DELONG. Very well; I presume, then, that that position is untenable, and the Legislature might confer upon the Governor, Attorney General, or other State officers, further powers. That provision had escaped my attention. But then, there is another principle of law which intervenes, and that is, that if the Legislature prescribes any further duties to be performed by an officer than those which were prescribed by law at the time of his election, he is not compelled to perform those additional duties, and probably would not, without additional compensation. If that is the case, where is the saving of money?

Mr. NOURSE. Where is the authority for that principle of law?

Mr. DELONG. I suppose it would not be considered good authority by the gentleman from Washoe, because it is the authority of the Supreme Court of California, and to him I might about as well quote Old Mother Goose, since he holds that court in utter contempt. I suppose it will be necessary to get Minnesota authorities, if I want to convince him. It has been suggested to me that that was the only way to show the gentleman from Washoe that a State can build a railroad.

Now, I insist that this office of Surveyor General is necessary, because the locations must be made according to the division and subdivision lines, as established and laid down by the General Government. In the making of the selections of school-lands, as provided by law, we shall certainly need that officer. But we can fix his salary, or the maximum of his salary, at a very low figure. I take it for granted that in any new country, official surveyors are required, and especially where, as in our case, there are already on the statute books some laws relating to such officers. We propose to retain the statutes which we have on our territorial statute books in relation to County Surveyors, and it would be a sort of adventure, in my opinion, to leave out this office of Surveyor General.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am disposed to think that the office of Surveyor General is a necessary one, and one principal reason why I shall vote for it is this: that in case of a dispute or controversy between two counties in regard to their boundary line, it is important to have an authority to which either county may appeal. There ought to be some head to decide where the dividing line should be located in such a case. If the duties of the office are not likely to be onerous, as seems to be the general impression, then I am willing, if gentlemen wish it, to leave the Legislature to establish the amount of his compensation. I hope, at all events, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am in favor of the motion to recommit, with the proposed instruction, and will suggest whether it would not be necessary to amend Section 22, also.

Tuesday,]

CHAPIN—KENNEDY—DELONG—CROSMAN—BROSNAN—NOURSE.

[July 12.

Mr. CHAPIN. Yes, sir; I will modify my motion so as to embrace an amendment to Section 22, by inserting therein the words "a Surveyor General" after the word "Controller." It is the same amendment as that proposed to be made in Section 19.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit, with the instruction, as modified, to a special committee of three, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. Chapin, DeLong, and Proctor, as the committee.

Mr. CHAPIN, from the special committee, to which was recommitted Article V, with instructions to amend Sections 19 and 22, by inserting in each the words, "a Surveyor General," immediately reported the same back to the Convention amended in accordance with the instructions.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, the rules were suspended in order to receive the report.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to make a suggestion so as to obtain the sense of the Convention upon it, and that is, whether or not the State officers are to receive any extra compensation for the performance of those extra duties provided for in Section 22.

The PRESIDENT. I should judge that it is not so contemplated, and I think it is expressly provided elsewhere that they shall not.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would suggest the propriety of an amendment in Section 21, that the Surveyor General be named in the place of the Attorney General as one of the Board of State Prison Commissioners.

Mr. DELONG. No, I would not do that; the Surveyor General may be away surveying when it is necessary for the Board to meet.

Mr. CHAPIN. And the Attorney General may be somewhere else, also.

Mr. DELONG. He has no business to be.

Mr. CHAPIN. Is he required to be at the Capital?

Mr. DELONG. That is his place, certainly.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article, and the vote resulted—yeas, 29; nays, 1—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—29.

Nays—Mr. Lockwood—1.

So the article was passed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE—THE SOLDIERS' VOTE.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will ask leave of the Convention, inasmuch as Article II has been recommitted for amendment, to propose a further amendment to that article here, as I should otherwise have to propose it when the article comes up again in Convention. The amendment I wish to propose is in Section 5 of the original Article II—or Section 4 as it now stands—to insert the following:—

"Provided, That the votes so cast, for officers of a lower grade than State officers, shall be made to apply to the county from which said voters were recruited.

The Convention will, I think, readily see the effect of this amendment. Take, for instance, Lyon County, where there are some four or five hundred recruits now. If that vote is counted in the county, upon the county ticket, it may change entirely the aspect of things there. A large proportion of those soldiers were recruited from Storey County, and the object of my amendment is to provide that the soldiers' vote shall be counted in the respective counties in which they shall have been recruited.

Mr. BROSNAN. I had that idea in my mind at the time I offered a substitute for this section, providing that, in the election of officers above the grade of county officers, the soldiers' vote should be counted, but I apprehend the difficulty is obviated by the language as it now stands. It says the right of suffrage shall be enjoyed "by all persons otherwise entitled to the same." They are required by other provisions of the Constitution to have been residents of the county thirty days before voting, etc., and I think that language, as it is, if it is fairly understood and construed, covers the difficulty. If they are not otherwise qualified to vote for the officers of the county, although they may be located in the county as soldiers, they would not be entitled to vote there. In other words, they would not be entitled to vote for county officers in a county, in consequence merely of their being there, in the service of the United States. That would be my understanding of it.

Mr. CROSMAN. They may acquire a residence by being there thirty days, and a majority of them have already been there long enough for that. I think, in order to make the matter clear, some explanatory clause should be inserted, and it seems to me that this is the proper place for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope this amendment will be adopted. Perhaps we feel this difficulty in our county more than they do in any other. It always has been a question in this Territory, (although I believe it has been passed upon in California,) whether or not soldiers stationed in one county are entitled to vote there, having been recruited in other counties. I do not think it is fair that those who are recruited in Storey County, for instance, should be allowed to come up and vote in our county elections.

Mr. NOURSE. I agree with the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) that this matter is already provided for. This section seems to me to provide only against the loss of the right of voting on the part of the soldier who may be out of the State, and we find in another section a provision that "no person shall be deemed to have lost a residence by reason of his absence while employed in the service of the United States."

[July 12]

Mr. CHAPIN. I would remind the gentleman that Sections 3 and 4, as here printed, in the old Constitution, have been stricken out.

Mr. NOURSE. Then there certainly should be some provision made, if there has not been already.

Mr. PARKER. I have no objection to this amendment being inserted, but I would like to ask how it is going to operate? How are soldiers, under the command of their officers, to get away in order to vote? Are they going in each county to prepare ballot-boxes and send them to every officer who has command of soldiers recruited in that county, or are the men expected to go to that county to vote? For instance, are men recruited in Virginia City to go there from Lyon County to cast their votes?

Mr. CROSMAN. The last clause of this section provides for that. It says:—

"Provision shall be made by law regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections."

Mr. NOURSE. I call for the reading of Section 3 as it has been amended.

The SECRETARY read Section 3, as follows:—

Sec. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States; nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

Mr. NOURSE. It seems to me that that covers the whole case, inasmuch as the soldier has not gained or lost any residence. The Legislature has simply to provide the means to establish the regulations of elections, and I take it the Legislature would be abundantly authorized under that section, to provide, as has been done in other States, that the county officers or commissioners, or whatever officers may be appointed for the purpose, may take the vote of the soldiers, wherever they may be, and that such votes shall be counted as a part of the votes of the respective counties where they belong. For instance, the commissioner at Fort Churchill might find one hundred voters from Storey County, who would vote for officers in Storey County; and then ten voters from Washoe County who would vote for officers in that county, and so on through the entire list.

The PRESIDENT. I call the attention of gentlemen to Section 3 of the Enabling Act, which will probably furnish some guide for the Convention in this matter. It reads as follows:—

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the general assembly of said Territory at the date of the passage of this Act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe; and also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such Constitution as may be formed by said Convention, under such rules and regulations as the said Convention may prescribe; and if any of said citizens are enlisted in the army of the United States and are still within said Territory, they shall be permitted to vote at their place of rendezvous, and if any are absent from said Territory by reason of their enlistment in the army of the United States, they shall be permitted to vote at their place of service, under the rules and regulations in each case to be prescribed as aforesaid," &c.

Mr. NOURSE. That applies only to the first election, but we are here making a law for all time—an organic law. I understand that this section of the Enabling Act provides only for this first election under the Constitution, and for the vote on the Constitution.

Mr. CHAPIN. That is all.

Mr. BROSNAN. The modus operandi of taking the votes of those who are in the military service of the country, (although it is a matter of legislation, to be sure, to prescribe the manner in which it shall be done,) is, as I understand it, this:—The commanding officer has upon his roll the place of enlistment of each soldier—the name of the man and where he enlisted—and by means of that roll the votes of the soldiers from each county respectively are taken and transmitted to the State officers. They can see by looking at their rosters or muster-rolls where each soldier comes from, and to what county his vote will properly apply.

Mr. CROSMAN. That is my understanding, also, but it looks to me as if it would be good policy to make it clear, by putting it into our Constitution. I really hope that this amendment will be inserted, in order that no question on this subject may arise hereafter under our Constitution.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to hear the section as it will stand if the amendment is adopted.

The Secretary read as follows:—

Sec. 4. The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be absent from this State in the military or naval service of the United States; provided, that the votes so cast for officers of a lower grade than State officers shall be made to apply to the county from which the voter was recruited; provided further, that the payment of a poll-tax, or a registration of such voter shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections.

Mr. NOURSE. I will suggest, that perhaps the gentleman would like to make a further change in his amendment. We know that in the enlistments of volunteers in various States in the East, a great many are enlisted by counties who do not reside in those counties. Men go to certain counties to enlist, tempted by the higher bounties offered by them. For instance, here, men might go to Storey County to enlist, and, under this provision, would not they be made voters in Storey County, though not residents there at the time they were recruited?

Tuesday,]

CROSMAN—WARWICK—FITCH—DUNNE—KENNEDY—CHAPIN.

[July 12.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think the wording of the amendment already covers that objection.

The question was taken on Mr. Crosmán's motion to instruct the special committee to make the amendment proposed by him, and it was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. WARWICK. I move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of Article X.

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend the motion by including Articles II, III, and IV, so as to finish them up as we go along. I want to report them back to the committee, and have them passed.

Mr. WARWICK. I accept the amendment. The question was taken, and the motion, as modified, was agreed to.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole [Mr. CROSMAN in the Chair] and proceeded to the consideration of the several matters which had been referred to such committee.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE—VOTERS' OATH.

The Committee first took up for consideration Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage.

The CHAIRMAN. This article has been re-committed to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend Section 2, by striking out the oath, and all pertaining thereto; also, to amend Section 4, by inserting after the word "provided," where it first occurs, the words, "that the votes so cast for officers of a lower grade than State officers, shall be made to apply to the county from which said voters were recruited; and provided further"—

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Secretary be instructed to make the amendment, in accordance with the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not know that it will be of any use, the instructions having passed the Convention, to oppose, at this time, the striking out of this oath. But I cannot consent that the oath shall be stricken out entirely, without entering my protest against it. Other gentlemen have told you, in eloquent strains, why this provision denying the right to vote to persons who have held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, should not be stricken out. Now, much as I despise that class of men, and much as I regret the adoption of any provision giving them a power at the ballot-box, by which any one of them might annul and destroy my vote, yet there is another class of men for whom I have a more thorough contempt—men who will remain in our loyal States and Territories, too cowardly to go and fight the battles of the Confederate States, but attempting, through the ballot-box, and by all other means in their power, even while under the protection of our government, to destroy that government. I say those men are more to be despised than the men who will manfully stand up and take the chances of receiving a bullet while they are fighting for that rebellious government. Now, how do gentlemen propose to prevent those men from voting, although their sentiments may be more disloyal and injurious to this government than those of the very men who have held civil or military office under what they call the Confederate Government? Gentlemen say we should leave it to the Legislature, but I deny the right of the Legislature to establish any test, other than the tests prescribed in this Constitution, when that instrument has once attempted to define who shall, or shall not, possess the right of suffrage. You may say that it is inexpedient and impracticable to challenge these men at the polls. Very well; then I say, let us challenge them before the Registrar. Allow us some opportunity to keep them from rendering nugatory the votes of good and loyal men at the polls. What right has the Legislature to prescribe any oath like this, when the Constitution has prescribed none? How can they make any test, other than that which the Constitution makes? I do not see where they get any such right. Any man who comes within the qualifications prescribed by this Constitution, is entitled to go to the ballot-box and vote, and no law can be passed to prevent him. Now, I ask the members of this Committee, if they are unwilling to have a provision of this kind placed in our Constitution, under the plea that it is impracticable? I deny that it is impracticable. Although gentlemen have said that under such a provision, men may block up the polls and only allow perhaps a hundred men to vote during a whole day, yet I think the Legislature may provide against any evil of that kind, by having a larger number of inspectors and judges of elections. If that oath is impracticable, why is not the oath impracticable which we have, under our existing laws? A minority can, under our present laws, go to the polls, challenge each and every voter, compel them to answer questions, and take the oath prescribed by the Legislature. Why do they not do the same thing now, as they would do if this oath were required? The gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) suggested this morning, that this oath would have to be added to the one already prescribed. I admit that, but how long does the gentleman suppose it would take to go through that entire oath? Probably not more than two minutes.

Mr. CHAPIN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him, in order to say that I will most cheerfully vote with him to add that amendment to Section 8.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not care to what it is added, if it is only in the Constitution somewhere, so that we may have the privilege of challenging every man whose loyalty we suspect, and making him take the oath. I care not at what time he takes it, but I say, give us an opportunity to challenge him at some time, before he shall be permitted to offset our votes.

Tuesday.]

JOHNSON—FITCH—DUNNE—LOCKWOOD—WARWICK—BANKS—TOZER.

[July 12.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I made a few remarks this morning, while this matter was under consideration, in which I coincided with the views expressed by some of the gentlemen from Storey County as to the impracticability, or the probable impracticability, of enforcing a provision requiring voters to take this oath.

Mr. FITCH [interrupting.] I rise to a point of order. I very much dislike to do so, but I think it is a duty. I make the point that we must obey the instructions of the Convention. This article has been recommitted to us with definite instructions to make specific amendments, and we cannot vary from those instructions. We must comply with the instructions of the Convention, and can do no more, and no less.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose gentlemen may be permitted to give their views upon that subject.

Mr. FITCH. I do not desire to stop the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman makes any point of order, I suppose it must be that no debate is now in order.

Mr. FITCH. I do not make it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman had better either make his point of order or not make it.

Mr. DUNNE. I will make the point of order, that no debate is in order, and I would like to know what it is that gentlemen who insist upon debating this question propose to accomplish by it. I hold that we are in Committee of the Whole instructed to make certain amendments, and to do nothing else. We have no right to amend further than we are instructed. The Convention has resolved to adopt these amendments, and we are instructed to insert them; that is the resolution which we came into Committee of the Whole to obey. Do gentlemen propose to disobey the instructions of the Convention? If so, let them state their reasons, and let us see whether it is competent or not for us to disobey. I do not believe it is competent. I believe we should immediately rise and report the amendments back according to instructions, and then if the sense of the Convention has changed, let the Convention rescind the vote by which we were instructed to insert the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is the duty of the committee to make the amendments in accordance with the instructions of the Convention, which are absolute and definite in terms, and the Chair is inclined to the opinion that it is not in order to debate the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move that the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) be allowed to proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh no; I do not desire it; I want the rules enforced.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not think the motion is in order.

Mr. WARWICK. With the permission of the gentleman from Humboldt, I wish to say a word. If it is our imperative duty to obey the instructions of the Convention now, when the article goes back to the Convention cannot the Convention amend it?

Mr. BANKS. The only duty we have to do is merely a clerical one, and I understand the Secretary has already been directed to make the amendments in accordance with the instructions.

Mr. McCLINTON. If in order, I would like to offer an amendment to Section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments are in order beyond the instructions of the Convention.

The SECRETARY stated that the amendments had been made in the article, in accordance with the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Committee rise and report the article back to the Convention, and also report that the Committee have obeyed the instructions of the Convention.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION—VOTERS' OATH.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, and had made certain amendments therein, in obedience to the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the article be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with special instructions to insert an amendment which shall require that oath to be administered before the Registrar, at the time of the registration of voters.

Mr. FITCH. It is not necessary to refer it to the Committee of the Whole. It would be better to refer it to a special committee, with instructions to report immediately.

Mr. DUNNE. I accept the suggestion as a modification of my motion.

Mr. BANKS. I would inquire if the gentleman has the amendment he proposes, in form, so that we may know what his instructions are.

Mr. DUNNE. I have not prepared them specifically, but I think they may as well be prepared before the question is taken.

Mr. TOZER. The provision I believe was to the effect that every person who shall be challenged, shall take and subscribe this oath. Now I wish to know whether the oath is to be administered to every man, whether he is challenged or not? It seems to me to be almost a farce to require every voter in the Territory to take that oath. What is the use of requiring the oath of a well known Union man, like yourself, Mr. President, and I might perhaps say, every other member of this Convention?

Mr. DUNNE. No Union man will object to the little trouble it would be to take the oath, in order to preserve the purity of the ballot-box.

The PRESIDENT. It will be necessary for

Tuesday,]

COLLINS—DUNNE—MASON.

[July 12.

these instructions to be drawn up in a specific form.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope, in reducing the amendment to writing, the gentleman will not make it obligatory upon every man to take this oath.

Mr. DUNNE. Unless you make it obligatory upon all, how are you going to make it effective? Who is going to make a discrimination, unless it is obligatory upon the Registrar to demand the oath from each and every man before recording his name? Twenty disloyal men might go and get registered, and no oath be required of them, and yet when a well known Union man came up, he might be challenged, and required to take the oath.

Mr. COLLINS. I think that difficulty can be easily obviated. I have no objection to taking the oath three times an hour, if it will do any good, but I do object to imposing any duty upon citizens unless there is shown to be an absolute necessity for it. It is presumed that the Registrar, in every precinct, will be selected for his strong Union sentiments, that Union men in every ward, and in every section of the State will see to it that certain voters, who may be suspected, are challenged, either by the Registrar himself or whoever it may be who has the authority of excluding votes; or if that is not practicable, then some plan may be devised by which the challenging can be done by some other party. I would like to inquire how often this registration is proposed to be made?

Mr. DUNNE. Once a year, I suppose; every time a man pays his poll-tax.

Mr. COLLINS. Now this is a matter of considerable consequence. It devolves a great amount of labor upon the Registrar himself, and upon those who are registered, also. What is the necessity of making this requirement? If I can be made to see that there is any necessity for it, I shall vote most heartily for the oath, but I do object to imposing any unnecessary duty upon the electors, and especially upon men whose unionism never was doubted.

Mr. DUNNE. Does the gentleman from Storey consider that any such action at all is necessary?

Mr. COLLINS. He does.

Mr. DUNNE. Then is not the Registrar the most proper person to leave it to? As to the amount of labor imposed upon him, many persons may come in at the same time, and he can administer the oath to all at once; and again, he will very soon acquire the habit of administering it quickly. It is not a very long oath after all, and will take but a moment's time. The gentleman suggests that before the election, men will see that some person is at the Registrar's office constantly, ready to challenge every man whose loyalty is suspected, but he should remember the old adage, that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." A good deal of the time there may be nobody at the Registrar's office to challenge, except perhaps, by chance.

Mr. COLLINS. I see no objection to allowing every voter in the district to lodge the names of A, B, and C, with the registering officer, as suspected persons. A man might say in writing, "I regard A or B as tainted with secession and opposed to the Government, and I require his vote to be challenged." And I think, under such circumstances, the Registrar should be required to challenge the voter. But unless that is done, I do not see the necessity for that labor. I am as strongly as anybody in favor of preserving the purity of the elective franchise, and I would go as far as the farthest to secure that object, but I think it may be done without the necessity of challenging every voter. I think if, in my district, I lodge with the Registrar the names of ten men whom I regard as suspected, or whose loyalty I doubt, and who I think ought not to be allowed to exercise the elective franchise, unless they purge themselves, if I desire it the Registrar should be required to compel them to take the oath. But further than that I do not think it is necessary to go.

Mr. DUNNE. I must regard with the utmost abhorrence the last proposition of the gentleman from Storey. It savors too much of the denunciations of a secret police. It is a proposition to allow any man to inscribe on a bit of paper, which he deposits with the Registrar, "I denounce A, B, C, as traitors!" I say it savors of the mouchard system of certain European countries. I desire rather to adopt one simple, broad, sweeping requirement, to which no man can take exception—a law which applies to all with equal force—and not a provision under which any man may be able to fasten upon another the brand of disloyalty. Let it be broad, and general, so that no man can complain that injustice is done to him.

Mr. MASON. I believe I have not, heretofore, obtruded my views upon the Convention, but upon a subject of this character, affecting the right of the elective franchise which belongs to every citizen, I desire to say that I do not think any safeguard would be too strong which can be thrown around that right. I do not think that any traitor should be allowed to exercise that birthright of freemen, under that government which he has raised his impious hands to destroy. I do not think that men, after having banded themselves together as assassins, after having perpetrated every crime—for treason involves the commission of all crimes—should be allowed to come forward and insult the majesty of the Deity by calling upon his name, and taking an oath denouncing the very crimes which they have committed. No man of that character, I say, should be allowed to exercise the right of suffrage upon any terms, unless an amnesty be granted, and unless he also takes a solemn oath, abjuring his treason thenceforth. I hope a registry law will be required to be passed, framed as strong as the English language can make it. There is no man who has the love of his country sincerely at heart, but is willing, if necessary, to come up and take that oath once a year; and if a man is a traitor, he should be compelled to take it. We have thousands of that class in our midst. I never had any fear in regard to conquering this rebellion. I have no fear of the traitors who are openly in arms against the Government; but the fear I have entertained, has been of those black-hearted, concealed traitors who are skulking among us. Here is where our danger lies.

I have been for many years a pro-slavery democrat. I was a newspaper editor, and a worker in the ranks of that party in Illinois, and I have made democratic stump speeches throughout every corner of that State. But when slavery itself became a traitor, and fired upon the flag of freedom: when armed treason raised its red right hand against the Government, then I, in common with other freemen of the North, "cried havoc, and let slip the dogs of war." We set wide open the doors of democracy, and let the day-light in. Why, sir, they said that poor, crazy, old John Brown must be hung; but this day old John Brown stands far higher in my estimation, than that vile old Iscariot, James Buchanan. [Applause.]

Sir, I look upon this right of suffrage as my birthright. It is a right as sacred to the American citizen as circumcision to the Jew or baptism to the Christian, and even more so, because it is that which protects the rights and privileges of both Jew and Christian. I look upon this question, sir, allow me to say, as by far the most important one which has yet been brought before our Convention for its consideration, and that is the reason why I have attempted to take a part in the discussion, although I had not previously participated in the debates which have been going on. I was pleased, sir, with the young gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) when he introduced this amendment. The force of his arguments, and the patriotic feeling which I could see beaming from his eye, aroused my admiration, and I said to myself, "that fellow will do to tie to." [Laughter.] This is the principle which we ought to establish, and I was really astonished to hear from the aged and distinguished gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) any words of opposition to it. And, sir, I hope that if he should ever occupy a position in the United States Senate, he will not be in favor of giving the least show to a traitor. [Merriment.] For my part, before I would ever take those vile copperhead snakes to my bosom, I would hurl them from the battlements of bliss, and sink them into hell so deep that the devils themselves would tremble to explore the fathomless abyss. [Applause and laughter.] That is the mercy I would show them. I have no disposition to grant them any favors. Let them thoroughly purge themselves before they are admitted to the exercise of the right of suffrage under that government which they have treacherously sought to destroy.

As I said before, I never have had any fear but this rebellion would be crushed, and I believe that before another year you will see the glittering ploughshare turning up the soil of the South, re-consecrated to freedom, where no despairing bondsman shall clank his chains. You will see the country redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled from that curse that has ever been the great blight of the United States of America.—the blackest blot upon humanity. [Applause.] While I look upon this elective franchise as my birthright, and as the birthright of every American citizen, yet I say that, under existing circumstances, these men who have sympathized with the rebellion should be excluded from its exercise. You can find conclaves of these demons of treason all around us. There is scarcely a town in this Territory, nor, I believe, in California, but has its secret organization of them; and although they pretend to be Union men, you can see them chuckling over every temporary defeat of the Union arms, and every petty success of the rebels, the news of which comes flashing to us over the wires. Are we to allow such as these to come up and exercise the right of suffrage, and control the elections, against my vote, and the votes of other Union men? No, sir; it is impossible for me to consent to it. I look upon the United States Government as the most sublime edifice ever erected by the ingenuity of man, elevated and sanctified, too, by the sacrifices of patriotism, and by the choicest blood that ever besprinkled the temple of liberty. [Applause.] Before I shall be willing to grant mercy to these men who have rebelled against that Government, I want them to give back my dead. I want them to return my brother who fell at Pittsburg, or Shiloh. I want them to restore to health my son, who was wounded while upholding the flag of his country. I want them to do all that, before I can consent to render them my equals in the Government under which I live, and which, in my opinion, is the best Government in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HOVEY. My object in introducing the amendment which I proposed was, to strike out the oath in the place where it is now incorporated, and to incorporate it in another place. I hardly think that any man can impugn my motives, on the score of loyalty, even to the extent of charging me with shrinking from any responsibility. I feel the smart which has been inflicted by this rebellion perhaps as much as any other member of this Convention, for the last news from the East brought me intelligence of the death of one whom I raised from boyhood. I think if gentlemen had listened to the suggestions of the honorable gentleman now in the Chair, (the President,) this matter would probably have been settled long before this.

Mr. DUNNE. I will make my motion in this form: I move to recommit Section 7, of Article II, with instructions to frame an amendment, which shall require every person seeking to have his name registered as an elector, to take and subscribe an oath of allegiance to the State and General Governments, the committee to draft an oath and present it to the Convention to-morrow.

BANKS—FRIZELL.

[July 12.]

Mr. BANKS. I am in favor of that course, because I think it will save time.

Mr. FRIZELL. I do not know but I am "in the brush" in regard to this question, and I do not know that the few remarks I propose to make will be properly applicable, but if I should happen to get astray I hope I may be corrected and set right again. I need not say to you, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Convention, that I came here solely to make a Constitution, or organic law. I did not come here to exert passions engendered by this terrible civil war; I came here only to make a straight-forward, honest, efficient Constitution for the proposed State of Nevada. In what few remarks I shall make, before I take my seat, I shall endeavor to keep that one object in view, and I would respectfully ask every member present, although I am myself but a humble individual, to consider carefully the capacity in which we are acting. The great fault which was found with the Constitution submitted to the people last year was the amount of legislation incorporated in its several articles and sections, all of which the people, the intelligent people of this Territory of Nevada, objected to and voted down indignantly.

Now, sir, so far as the influence upon us of this civil war is concerned, a very wise statesman once said, "I have no lamp by which my feet are guided except the lamp of experience;" and I reiterate that sentiment. I have nothing by which my course is guided but the lamp of experience. This is a civil war raging within our own limits, and we must deal with the exigencies as they arise from time to time. I have said, on another occasion, that anything pertaining to the allegiance or loyalty of the citizens of this vast republic who may be resident within our State, hereafter, I am disposed to leave, wherever it can be done, to the Legislatures that are to assemble in the future. But the fault I find, (although really I find fault with none of the members of this Convention, God bless them all, as citizens and brother Americans,) is, that I cannot help thinking that we are acting here too much upon the belief, or with the idea that we are the people—that we, assembled in this little contracted hall, in this city of Carson, are the people of the great State of Nevada, and that wisdom is going to die with us. I think that whatever we may suffer in this civil war, or however much we may feel it, we should still be guided somewhat by the examples of history. I profess to be conversant to some extent with modern history, and with that of the Middle Ages, and I think we might also find pertinent illustrations in ancient history. I will speak now, while it is fresh in my mind, of what are called the refugees of the American Revolution. That was a war waged for seven long years. Gentlemen may refer to the sufferings and sacrifices of this war in which we are engaged, but a stronger picture could scarcely be drawn than that of the sufferings and sacrifices of the patriots of the Revolution, who fought for seven years to establish in our land the principles of freedom and republicanism. It will surely be recollected by you, Mr. President, and no doubt by many others within the sound of my voice, that at the time when, as the poet says—

"Wild war's deadly blasts were blown,
And gentle peace returning,"

our forefathers were seeking to build up a nation, gathering together the component parts, that which constitutes a nation as a whole, in all the branches of industry, commerce, art and science. George Washington and Patrick Henry, and all the other great, good, and god-like statesmen of those days, were engaged in that work. And, sir, what did they say and do in regard to those who were refugees at the close of that civil war? You will recollect that when the war was over the nation was laid waste in all her broad domains, that towns and villages had been sacked and committed to the flames, and that there was ruin and desolation on every hand. Then the patriot and statesman foresaw that the great need of the nation would be population; and what did those great and revered men say in regard to the tory refugees? They permitted those men, and every man who had taken up arms on the side of George III. to return to the country, under liberal and easy provisions.

I will not refer to the past any farther. I dislike to speak of my personal affairs, or of my own patriotism, but this I will say, that I yield to no man in my love of country. I have two brothers in this war, and very many kinsmen, who have poured out their hearts' blood, and whose bones are now lying on southern soil. I yield to no man in my devotion to this Government—this united nation, every inch of it, from the lakes to the gulf, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Painter never limned, and poet never sung a greater or more glorious land than ours; nor has the human imagination ever conceived a nobler Government, devoted as it is to the glory, and greatness, and permanent good of the whole country. I abhor as much as any man the folly and treason of those who, in this war, have attempted the destruction of that Government. But, Mr. President, I pass that by, and I say to these men: "If you are willing to repent of your folly, I will take you by the hand. You have heretofore been my brothers; in this matter you have been wrong, but if you repent you may be my brothers still." If I could, by this means, lead such men back into the paths of political rectitude, I would look upon it as the noblest act and greatest privilege of my life.

Tuesday.]

FRIZELL—WARWICK.

[July 12.]

The gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) makes an eloquent appeal, which I know comes from the bottom of his heart, and I impute to him none but the purest and most patriotic of motives; but I say when he makes that appeal it is more passion, engendered by his coming in contact with the class of men to which he has referred. Men of that class really are not rebels, for they have not taken up arms against the Government of the United States, and in favor of the usurpation of Jeff. Davis, but they are men whom I find it difficult to describe. I have not at command language which would be appropriate to delineate their character. They do not possess that high, generous, chivalric spirit which leads men to take up arms to carry out what they conceive to be a principle, that principle which has been inculcated in the political primary schools by their fathers, and since fostered and encouraged by demagogues. Those men who are in rebellion in the South are fighting for what they believe to be a principle—the principle of State Rights, or, as they term it, self-government. There are some tender points upon which I do not wish to speak, but I will say that that principle is one which strikes at the very root of our liberties, and the foundations of our Government. I hope to God that this war, when it is fought out, will put an end to that principle—a principle for which, by the way, I have contended for years, in consequence of the prejudices of early education. I had always heard my father and my grandfather speak in contemptuous terms of Alexander Hamilton, Chief Justice Marshall, John Adams, and others of those statesmen who were endeavoring to make the Federal Government strong; and I had heard them advocating what they called the principle of democracy, or States Rights. They held the great leaders of the old Federal party—as it was called in former times, when it was led by such men as Marshall, Hamilton, and other eminent Federalists—in the profoundest contempt, and to a great extent, my own mind was swayed and biased by their teachings. But in the past three or four years of my life I have seen my error. I find that I have been mistaken in allowing the passions of my breast to turn against men who held principles which I conceived to be opposed to true democratic principles. Those principles were dear to my heart, and in their defense, at that time, so help me God, I would have shed the last drop in my veins. But I now see that what I have been cherishing was a heresy, and I wish to leave the door open to others, so that when they, too, shall see the error of their ways, they may not charge us with having hid our light under a bushel and left them in the dark.

But now it is proposed that we shall prescribe an oath, and say to all such men, that although tears of penitence may run down their cheeks—aye, bearing, melting tears—there is still no door open by which they can return to the path of political rectitude. I do not wish to proscribe men for political reasons. I tell you that the history of the world shows no example of the kind, and if there ever was a nation on God's earth that could afford to be generous and magnanimous, it is the great and mighty people of the United States of America. We have invited the people of the whole world to come among us, and men have accepted that invitation, and come here, who could not pronounce our language, bringing with them their own customs and prejudices, often directly opposed to republican institutions, and yet we have received them as brothers. Now, are our own brothers to be excluded—the men who, in the Mexican war, aided in acquiring this very territory; the men who by that war gave us this very soil on which we are now standing; the men who stood shoulder to shoulder with us throughout that war—shall we deny to those men the right-hand of fellowship which we freely extend to the foreign born, ignorant of the very tongue we speak?

Now, while I stand up here and speak in favor of those men, I am not excusing their wrong deeds. But, admitting as much as I do against them, still I say I want to get them back. I want hereafter, if need be, to fight side by side with those men in battle; I want them to be my brothers. Let us leave this matter, therefore, so far as it is possible, to the Legislature which is to come after us.

This is a theme on which I might dwell for hours, but I will not occupy the time of the Convention. There are many subjects on which I would like to have spoken at length, but I knew that we came here to work, and I would not consume the valuable time. I will only say that these appeals to passion and prejudice may be very good for a political platform, but they are not good in the formation of a Constitution for the State of Nevada. Look at the Constitutions of other States. Look at Illinois, from which I am proud to hail—a State that has sent out her heroic sons in this war like Thebes of old, which poured forth a thousand warriors from each of its hundred gates. That State has already turned out a hundred and fifty thousand men. But look at the Constitutions of the most loyal States in the East. Have they not left these matters to the Legislature to determine who shall and who shall not vote? And shall we, away here on the frontiers, attempt to proscribe classes of men for all time to come? Shall we undertake to do what the State of New York, the Empire State, or the old Bay State of Massachusetts, or the Keystone State, Pennsylvania, from which the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) hails, or my own native State of Ohio, or yours, Mr. President, of Indiana, or Illinois, my adopted State, have none of them attempted to do? Let us, rather, follow their examples, and leave our Legislature to shape some law, and prescribe some oath, in regard to the elective franchise, which will admit these men to fellowship with us, as American citizens.

Mr. WARWICK. Will the gentleman allow

FRIZELL.—MCCLENTON.—MASON.

[July 12.]

me ask him a question? Is he aware, or cognizant of the fact, that in the loyal States no Tory was allowed to vote during the pendency of the revolutionary war? I mean, during the revolution—not afterwards. Was there any State in which they were allowed to vote during the war of the revolution?

Mr. FRIZELL. I cannot answer the question, but I am willing to admit that there were none.

Mr. McCLENTON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I would ask if the gentleman understands that this oath proscribes the hordes of rebels which may be poured into this Territory or State, after the rebellion is crushed? Does he understand that this oath proscribes those men forever from the exercise of the elective franchise among us?

Mr. FRIZELL. I think it is an undue assumption of power on our part, in making a Constitution, to so frame it as to hold out a menace against a class. That is an undue assumption in making or framing our Constitution, because any man can say then, when he enters the lines of the State of Nevada, "I find in your Constitution a provision which I find in that of no other State." I propose to leave this matter to the Legislature, that they may prescribe any oath they see fit. The gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) in his remarks, dove deep into the classics, and into the human heart. He was not willing to give the traitors, as he calls them, any chance of returning.

Mr. MASON. Not until an amnesty is granted.

Mr. FRIZELL. Now, Mr. President and gentlemen, when I pray to Almighty God—which I do sometimes—I generally wind up my petition to Deity by using language something like this—

"That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me."

And, sir, as regards proscription or persecution, I abhor it, whether in a religious or a political sense. It does not enter into the principle or theory of our Government. I prefer to say with that noble poet, Alexander Pope—

"Let not this weak unknowing hand
Presume thy bolts to throw,
And deal damnation round the land
On each I judge thy foe."

That is the action which some gentlemen here propose to take—to hurl the bolts of condemnation irreverently on others' heads. I propose rather to leave the door open for repentance, so that at some time they may come back—to leave the matter in such a shape that the Legislature to come after us may take that action which they may deem proper when the occasion arises. This rebellion will, undoubtedly, as I said on a former occasion, take different shades. I was reported in the Virginia Union as saying that it would take different shapes, but I did not mean that. I was also reported as speaking of a war of races in England, when I said the

"The War of the Roses." But the Reporter of that paper, probably in the hurry of the moment, inadvertently made a mistake, and I can forgive it. I say again that this rebellion will probably take different shades as time rolls on, and the successive Legislatures should be left each year to "temper the wind to the shorn lamb," if it is in their natures to do so. I do not desire, at all events, to fix anything here irrevocably.

Now a few words more, and I have done. Section 2 of this Article provides as follows:—

"No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector."

That is, no person shall be entitled to the right of suffrage who has done any of these things. Now how are you going to arrive at it? Does it not belong to the Legislature, under the Constitution, to prescribe the form and manner of arriving at the fact? It certainly does not belong to us. I repeat that this rebellion which the nation is now engaged in putting down, will take different shades, as to its intensity, from year to year, and it does not belong to a Constitution necessarily framed in a time of excitement, to fix that which is irrevocable in respect to these matters. It plainly and naturally belongs to the Constitution to establish that only which is not to be changed. And the same remarks will apply to the provisions of this section immediately under consideration. We should not legislate too much in that respect.

I started out, Mr. President, by saying that I did not know but I was "in the brush" in regard to this matter. I do not know, under the parliamentary rules which govern us, exactly what the vote is to be, but I think I have spoken within proper bounds. I hope this oath will be left out entirely, and that it will be left to the Legislature to form and prescribe such an oath as may at that time be deemed fit. I have given what I believe to be good reasons for my position, and I think any gentleman who will read the sections to which I have referred, and consider them carefully, will see that they cover all the ground necessary to be covered.

Mr. MASON. By way of an explanation, I desire to say, that in the remarks I made, my object was, not to favor the idea of forever excluding American citizens from the right of suffrage, but it was rather to throw a safeguard around the elective franchise here—and I stated it, I believe, in language sufficiently emphatic—until an amnesty be granted by the General Government. Now, I am willing to indorse the gentleman's prayer—

"That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me."

Tuesday.]

JOHNSON.

[July 12.]

The same mercy which the rebels showed at Fort Pillow, the same mercy they have shown in dooming to starvation those unfortunate brave men who have fallen into their hands, full of life and vigor, I am willing to show to them. That is their kind of mercy—the tender mercies of the wicked, which are cruel. I am willing, also, that the Legislature should “temper the winds to the shorn lambs,” by and by; but just now I want to use a somewhat greater force against these rebel rams. We do not want them to pull their wool over our eyes, that is all. [Laughter.]

[Mr. CROSMAN in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. At a previous stage in the progress of this article, it will be remembered, I favored the striking out of the word “disloyal,” where it occurred in Section 2, and I think I succeeded in making my reasons plainly understood for assuming that position. I will state again, in brief, the motives which prompted me to vote in favor of striking out that word. It was not that I was in favor of allowing a disloyal man to vote, or of allowing the vote of any disloyal man to neutralize or destroy my vote, or that of any other loyal citizen, but I regarded it then, and I regard it now, as improper to clothe the judges and inspectors of election with too much authority—to clothe them with power which might be exercised in such manner as to destroy the right of voting of the most loyal man in the land. At no stage have I objected to incorporating in the Constitution, in what I would regard as being its appropriate place, a test oath similar to that which has been proposed in this section. But, sir, I foreshadowed, in the remarks I made this morning on this question, what were my objections to the incorporation of that test oath in the particular section in which it was placed. The principal objection which occurs to my mind is this: that it would be in the power of a few persons to deprive altogether, of the right of suffrage, a large number of loyal, legal voters. There are now precincts in this Territory—and testimony has been borne to that fact by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey)—where there are twelve or fifteen hundred voters, and the administration of that oath, if they were challenged, would necessarily occupy so much time, as to effectually exclude the ballots of a very large proportion of such voters. But while I objected to allowing the oath to remain in this section, I did not object to its incorporation in another place, where I conceived it would more effectually subserve its purpose; and it was for the purpose of explaining my views on that subject that I desired to address the Convention at the time I was decided to be out of order—though I believe the point was properly raised, and for that reason I did not avail myself of the courtesy offered by the Convention at that time of allowing me to continue my remarks. I conceived that the section which provides for a registry law, was the proper place in which to incorporate this test oath. Now, sir, I disagree with my friend from Humboldt (Mr. Danne) in relation to the extent to which this provision would go. As I understand the resolution of instructions, as prepared by him, it provides that all men, when they make application for registration, shall take this test oath. If that would be attended with any corresponding benefit, I should have no objection, for, as other gentlemen have said, I am perfectly willing to take and subscribe that oath as often as it becomes necessary to administer it. But is it necessary for this to be done? Is there any corresponding benefit to be obtained? On the contrary, is it not advisable that the oath should only be administered in case a person is challenged for disloyalty? I think all the practical benefit to be derived from a test oath can in that manner be secured. And, in accordance with this view, I have prepared an amendment, which I know meets with the approbation of several members of the Convention. I propose to amend the instructions, as offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, so as to read as follows:—

Amend Section 7, so as to incorporate the following, to wit:—

“Provided, That any person when making application to be registered as a voter, shall, upon being challenged on account of disloyalty, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation in the following form:—‘I — do solemnly swear [or affirm] that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. So help me God.’”

I have no serious objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, but I think all the real benefits derivable from a test oath may be obtained by this provision, and then we can leave it within the province of the Legislature to prescribe the manner of making the challenge. They may, if they please, even make it the duty of the registering officers to challenge every man, and require him to take the test oath.

My friend from Storey (Mr. Frizzell) has inveighed against the action of the Convention, in adopting a test oath, as being something unusual. I think the gentleman is mistaken in some of his objections. He is correct in this, however, that no oath of loyalty, in form or substance as now proposed, is found in the Constitution of any other State. But the reason of this is apparent. We are forming a Constitution under circumstances unlike those which have attended similar action in any other State of the Union, but I do not doubt that each and all of the loyal States would to-day, if it were in their power, incorporate in their Constitutions provisions of the like character, and they would do it, too, readily and cheerfully.

Tuesday,]

FRIZELL—JOHNSON—DUNNE.

[July 12.]

We find that in the Constitutions of other States, a form of oath is prescribed—a form which, under the circumstances attending the framing of their respective State Governments, was deemed to be sufficient—but this unholy rebellion has taught us an additional and instructive lesson on the subject of the sanctity and inviolability of oaths.

Mr. FRIZELL [interrupting.] Does the gentleman hold that the Legislature would not have the right, under our Constitution, without this provision, to pass a law prescribing the same oath which is here proposed?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not attempt to say that they would not have the power to do it, but I want this matter unmistakably expressed. I do not want it to be a question in every Legislature in succeeding years, but let it be fixed and established in the Constitution, so that it cannot be revoked except by an amendment of that instrument. My sympathies and my judgment alike prompt me to favor the incorporation of that oath in the Constitution, and I think it is not transcending legitimate bounds to do so. If you refer to the Constitutions of other States you will find, almost invariably, a particular form of oath prescribed in each of those Constitutions. We are acting here, in this matter, only from the light of experience—the same rule which the gentleman from Storey himself lays down for his guidance. By this rebellion we have had demonstrated the necessity of prescribing something additional to that form of oath which has been found sufficient in the Constitutions of other States. I repeat, that I do not think it is necessary that every man who comes up to register his vote shall be compelled to take and subscribe that oath, but it is quite sufficient that he should be compelled to do so when challenged. That will guard most effectually the rights of loyal men, and will operate to the exclusion of the disloyal. With this exposition of my views, I submit my amendment of the instructions to the action of the Convention.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. DUNNE. I hope my position will not be misunderstood on this subject. After the remarks which have been made since this question was first raised in this Convention, unless some explanations were made by me, the inference might be a fair one that my amendment was prompted by a desire to legislate against a particular class. Now as the principle which governs me, upon this subject, is directly in opposition to anything of that kind, I am necessarily opposed to the last amendment which has been offered. If there is any one rule of action or principle which, more than another, I would like to see prevail in this Convention, it is that of calm, consistent reason and judgment. It was for that reason that I offered the resolution which I had the honor of presenting on my first arrival in this body, believing that it would be impossible at this time to obtain a vote upon the Constitution proposed to be submitted, which would be entirely free from party prejudices, or appeals to the passions of men. It was acting upon that principle that I felt it my duty to make the motion to strike out the word "disloyal" from the second section, as it stood in the Constitution framed by the last Convention, because I desired to see no invidious distinction made against a particular class. It was also upon that principle that I voted for the proposition that no person should be convicted of treason unless upon the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act. In all my action in this Convention I have been prompted by the desire of maintaining that one important principle, of cool, sober judgment. And I conceive that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) to these instructions, is in opposition to that principle. The resolution of instructions, without the amendment proposed, makes no invidious distinction against a class. It attempts to brand no one as an outlaw; it raises no suspicions as to the loyalty or disloyalty of any man; it only proposes a simple, broad principle of law, and it is directly opposed to the establishment of any particular distinction against any class. Its adoption will forever prevent the opponents of the State Government, or any person in the opposition, from charging upon this Convention, almost unanimously composed, as it is, of members of the dominant party in the country, that when it had the power of a giant it used that power like a giant. It would prevent any one from being able to say: "When you were in power, you attempted to brand us as outlaws, and to deprive us of one of the most glorious privileges of American freemen. You attempted to sink us down to the level of the negroes and Chinamen and the aboriginal inhabitants of the country. You attempted, by an odious act engrafted into the organic law of the State, to draw a distinction which should set us, as men, apart from our fellow-citizens here." For that reason it was that I asked one gentleman who has spoken on this subject, if he believed such action necessary at all, for securing the purity of the ballot-box. If it is necessary at all, then let it be generally applied to all, and let no one be able to say that it was directed against him particularly. Remember, that there are changes which all must expect in political life, and that the dominant party of to-day may be in a hopeless minority to-morrow. Remember, that as members of this Constitutional Convention, a body supposed to be composed of men possessed of calm reason and acting upon deliberate judgment, we are laying down only the broad, fundamental principles of law—a chart which is to endure for all time, and that we are expected to legislate for all men without distinction of party, or class, or creed. Remember, that it is your duty here, as I certainly conceive it to be my own, to make whatever laws we do make, entirely general in their application.

And now, to come to the principal point in

McCLINTON—HAINES.

[July 12.]

this matter: if gentlemen consider it necessary that this oath shall be inserted at all, then I say let it be effective, and let it be administered not only to those whose loyalty shall be questioned, but to every one else. Then, again, if you contemplate the appointment of a Registrar, there is, as I before stated, no fixed time at which men may apply for registration. No time is established, except that it must be before the election, and therefore men would have the right to make their applications at any time, perhaps three months before the election, and could take and subscribe their oaths if they were challenged. Now the only question is, is it necessary for any one to take this oath? Because, if it is, it is necessary for all; otherwise, gentlemen must see that many persons whose loyalty is undoubted, would be obliged to take the oath, while perhaps the very men for whom the provision is most required would escape. They would go to the office of the Registrar, and if they saw nobody there to challenge them they would give their names; but if they found some one ready to challenge them they would say they would drop in at another time, and in that way they would manage to avoid the necessity of taking the oath. Therefore I say if it is necessary at all, and I think it is, it should be made to apply to all, and consequently I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. McCLINTON. I agree with the remarks of my friend from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and hope that this oath will be adopted. I do not desire that, before our institutions shall have become settled on a firm basis, a flood of voters shall be permitted to pour into this Territory, or State, from the States which are now in rebellion against the Government of the United States, to vote me down, and to vote you down, sir, and to vote down every other loyal man. I do not wish that the assassins of those men who are now bravely upholding the flag and the Government of the United States should be, by my vote at least, elevated to a political equality with myself.

I do not propose to make any lengthy remarks on this subject. It has been already too much discussed, and I desire to facilitate the business of the Convention as much as possible. I appreciate the merciful, forgiving spirit manifested by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Frizzell,) and I will say to him that I, too, sometimes pray, but in this case, my prayer would happen to be one written by Robert Burns, and not by Alexander Pope. If I were to make a prayer in behalf of the rebels, I would say:—

"Thy strong right hand, Lord, mak' it bear
Upo' their heads:
Lord, weigh it down, and dimma spare,
For their misdeeds."

I hope that the oath proposed by the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) will be adopted; and I cannot, for my part, see the disadvantages to result from the adoption of that oath which some gentlemen on this floor appear to apprehend. I cannot see that it will proscribe any person who is willing to do what we have unequivocally a right to demand that he shall do, before enjoying the rights of citizenship in this State. All he is required to do, in order to register his name as a voter, is to subscribe to this oath; and it is a bad argument to say that it will work a hardship upon a man who is disloyal, and not upon a loyal man. If there are rebels among us who would object to taking the oath, I, for one, am in favor of compelling them to take it.

Mr. HAINES. This discussion has taken a very wide range, and I would like to know how the question now stands before the Convention. It appears to me that all the members are anxious to arrive at about the same end, only they differ widely as to the mode and manner of reaching that end.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion to recommit the article to a special committee, with instructions to add to the section providing for a registry law, the matters contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne).

Mr. HAINES. The only difference I see between members is, as to whether or not all voters shall be obliged to take this oath; and although the motives of some gentlemen are directly impugned because they do not desire that all shall be compelled to take it, I cannot see that they are deserving of any censure on that score. For one, I should be in favor of having the Registrar compelled to administer the oath to all, and then there can be no possible misunderstanding; but a man who would fail or refuse to take it, would at once be known as disloyal, and, as a matter of course, he would be prevented from voting. Otherwise, some men would inevitably avoid being challenged, and the only advantage we should derive from the provision would be, that we might catch some disloyal men, by virtue of their being known, and challenge them. A disloyal man who came to the registry office might not be known to the Registrar, and it is very true, as has been remarked by some gentleman, that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." In many instances, persons will not wish to make known their views, and sometimes men might hesitate, through fear or other motives, to challenge men of known disloyalty. I see no great inconvenience to result from the amendment, except to the Registrar himself; and the amount of extra work he would be called upon to perform on this account I do not think would be very great. What he would have to do would then be definite and certain, and he could do it very rapidly. I think that every loyal man would be, like my friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) willing, if necessary, to take the oath four times a day, in order to make it certain that no disloyal man should be registered without having taken it, and he would not mind the slight inconveni-

COLLINS—BROSNAN.

[July 12.]

ence and trouble. I would like to see this matter settled in such a way that all who come to be registered, shall take and subscribe the oath, and pay their poll taxes; and I believe every loyal man would feel, in doing so, that he had strengthened the bond which attaches him to the National Government.

Mr. COLLINS. I agree with the eloquent gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) that if I knew a man who was rabidly disloyal, or disloyal in the least, who would not take the oath, I should feel as if I wanted to make him take it; but the difference between the gentleman and myself is this: I regard this rebellion as ephemeral in its character and consequences. It is a thing of a day, while our Constitution is for all time in the future. I do not want to incorporate in the Constitution anything which is soon to be exhausted and die out of itself, leaving the constitutional provision wholly inoperative, and a dead letter.

Now, I have no objection at all to instructing the Legislature to prescribe such an oath with regard to loyalty to the Federal, or State Government, or both, as in its wisdom it may deem desirable. That may be a very proper thing for the Legislature to do, but it may be very improper for us to do. I would like it very well if, in every section of this State, a provision of law were enforced, requiring every challenged man, and, if necessary, every elector, to take this oath, so as to prevent, in accordance with the idea of the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Haines,) one single individual from escaping. But in one, two, three, or possibly four years, all this matter of disloyalty, I trust, will have subsided, and the necessity of any such action will have ceased to exist; and then I want the provision to cease also. Therefore, I say, give the Legislature instructions to pass such laws as are required, and let the Legislature require an oath to be taken when, where, and how it may be deemed best for the time being. I have no fear but that the Legislature, coming warm and fresh from the people from year to year, will be inspired with sentiments of loyalty and patriotism.

I am happy to find that I am in a body of men so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of loyalty, so devoted to their country, so generous to the government that they are unwilling that any man, unless fully purged from any taint of disloyalty, shall be allowed to exercise the elective franchise. That pleases me, I say; and I like, also, to be inspired by speeches, such as have been made here, so eloquent, and ardent and determined, in regard to loyalty. But we should bear in mind that we are legislating as unimpassioned men—that our judgment should be cool, calm, and clear, and that we should establish a Constitution under the influence alone of that calm and clear judgment. If gentlemen yield to, and allow themselves to be guided by, the influences around them which inspire them with enthusiasm and zeal, they will be incapacitated from exercising clear judgment. I do not want to be placed in that position. I say, let us cast aside all surroundings which inspire our hearts, influence our passions, or excite our feelings; let us be calm, and cool, and deliberate in the performance of our duties, and incorporate only that which ought to be permanent in our organic act.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have but a few words to say upon this section, and I need not say anything upon the matter, merely for the purpose of having my loyalty vouched for, or understood. I am not opposed to the spirit of the amendment, by any means, but I look upon this constitutional provision as being an instrument that will cut both ways. I perceive by the remarks of gentlemen who have preceded me, that they do not appear to agree among themselves, even with regard to the objects of the mover of the resolution. It seems that the learned gentlemen from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne,) who originally moved the resolution, desires that there shall be no discrimination, but that the provision shall be general in its application to every elector in the State, while most of those who have spoken in its favor seem to advocate it because it is calculated to exclude the very class which he says is obnoxious. For myself, Mr. President, in a body composed of such intelligent men as this is, when there seems to be so great a discrepancy between the idea of the mover and the idea of those in favor of the adoption of the motion, I have to say that "I fear the Greeks even bringing presents." It cannot be a sound proposition when we cannot all agree even upon the reasons of the mover, or when we approve of it for different reasons. That does not seem to me to afford a very flattering prospect. I would rather for myself prefer that this subject were entirely left to the Legislature; and if I vote against this resolution, it will be entirely and solely upon that ground.

We do not even derive a practical advantage from this provision, because it only applies to voters after we shall have become a State; and yet the most important and vital election which we are about to hold is the election which is to decide the question of the adoption of this Constitution, or its rejection; and then the first State election is to be held immediately succeeding its adoption, in the event that it is adopted. Yet at this time, when men's passions are excited, as we have seen they are, when we all feel a thrill of horror at the damnable insurrection which has deluged this land in blood, at this very period we are unable to give practical effect to this clause. And still we are seeking to make it operative at a time when the passions of men will have subsided, when the tumultuous waves of rebellion shall have recoiled and rolled back, when the Angel of Peace shall, with her trumpet, have sounded the notes of reconciliation and harmony. It is proposed, Mr. President, that when perhaps the deep and bloody traces that have been left upon the heart of the nation by this damnable war shall have disappeared, when in future times those scars will seem perhaps but as the hieroglyphics which the boy in his play traces upon a barren beach, to be swept away by the first wave, or the first reflux of the tide, we should still have in our fundamental law, adopted for the government of this State, this trace and mark of a passionate spirit of revenge. I do not want to see it there.

Not only do I look upon it in that light, Mr. President, but I also object to the provision because you might with as much propriety, in my judgment—though in this I may be in error—prescribe all the duties of the registering officer, or the clerk who has to take the names, or the fees to be received for administering the oath, and all those other little matters of detail which you ought to leave to the Legislature of your State, if you ever have one. And with those minor duties and matters of detail to be prescribed by the Legislature, I would also leave the prescribing of this oath. Gentlemen will perceive by looking at Section 27 of Article IV, that laws are required to be made to exclude certain persons from serving on juries and from the right of suffrage. If this provision were proposed to be incorporated in that section, I should like it better than where you are placing it here, in connection with the general declaration of the privilege of the exercise of the elective franchise. It would be better to leave it so that the Legislature, when passing laws to exclude certain persons from serving on juries and prescribing the qualifications of electors, may, at the same time, establish this oath.

But, sir, I do not wish to detain the Convention with any extended remarks. My only object is to have my objection fairly understood, namely, that this is a proper subject for legislative action, and not at all proper, in my judgment, to be placed in this Constitution.

Mr. DELONG. I disagree with my respected colleague (Mr. Brosnan) on the main ground of his argument in opposition to this measure. He speaks of it as being wrong to be placed in our Constitution, and as a monument of revenge against that which will be remembered in history only as a hieroglyphic which a boy has written in the sand. I do not think that this rebellion, or its memory, or its wrongs, or the injuries it has inflicted, will be wiped out by the first wave of peace and reconciliation, or even by the waves of peace that may flow over it for a century of time to come. I believe as confidently as my colleague may or can believe, that the strong arm of the Government will put down the rebellion which is now seeking to overthrow it. I believe that rebellion to be as accursed as he thinks it to be. I believe in all those things as strenuously as he does; but I do believe that when this rebellion shall have been crushed, ranking in the hearts of those who have been its aiders and abettors will long continue to exist that feeling of disaffection which will require the strongest guards and restraints for a long time to come, to be placed around those men, to protect the country against renewed treason and perjury. I do not think that this proposed section will stand as a monument of revenge or of folly, but rather as a monument of caution, which we have a right to exercise, in the future, inasmuch as we have learned the bitter lesson which men refused at first to believe, that in the best Government the world ever saw, millions of men could be found, who, without any cause, would enter into a conspiracy and bloody revolution to overthrow that Government and destroy the brightest hopes and happiness of their fellow-men. I believe that within a few years we shall see constitutional provisions framed and adopted in every State in the Union, and by the Federal Government itself, also, providing that every man who shall have raised an arm against our Government shall be regarded, beyond the possibility of a doubt, not only as a traitor, but as a double-dyed, damnable villain and perjurer. [Applause.] I want every man who proposes to exercise the right of suffrage among us not only to record his name, but, in the presence of Almighty God, to swear that oath, and so to seal his everlasting and eternal damnation if he ever again raises his hand in rebellion. I want to see this done, and I think this rebellion has justified it. If, heretofore, in the best regulated and most enlightened Government that has ever been founded in the world, malcontents can be found who would rather reign in hell than serve in heaven, men who at any time when they find that their prospects of elevation to power are impaired, would be glad to see the Republic dashed to ruin, if only they could stand paramount above that ruin, the highest of the high, then we may expect that such men will continue to be found in the future. Such men do live; they live now, and ever have lived in the history of the past, and such men will continue to live as long as Governments continue to exist on earth. I say, we cannot exercise too much caution against that class of men; and whilst I do not impugn or question the motives of gentlemen who differ in their views on this subject from those views which I entertain, I say that the man who refuses to subscribe to that oath, or does not desire to take it, is in my opinion tender-footed on the question of loyalty. I believe that no man who truly loves his Government, in whose heart is maintained the firm, fixed resolve that he will live with it and die with it, has any objection in the world to coming before a Registrar, and there, while recording himself a voter, subscribing to that oath of allegiance which binds him in his soul and in his actions for all time to come. I want it to stand there, hieroglyphic though it may be, not written in the sand, but written on parchment, in our State Constitution, a document which we ourselves subscribe and establish, that all men must and shall subscribe to, before they become our peers and equals in the prerogatives which belong to freemen. And, sir, I hope that this Convention will adopt this oath and add it to that section, as a guarantee that we will not hereafter be met at the polls, and in the exercise of our sacred right of suffrage, be counterbalanced and stultified by those in whose veins runs no blood save that which is black as hell with the taint of treason. I hope the proposed amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. It would seem like presumption to add anything to the eloquent argument to which we have just listened. I presume that if there is any man on the floor, who, from his early associations, and from the ties which generally bind a man to the home of his youth, might be pardoned for a desire to extend a mistaken sympathy to those men who have sought to plunge the country into the ruin which now gapes and yawns at her feet, I am that man. Sir, I would rather perish by slow fire, or now, before that sun sets behind the western hills, be laid in a nameless grave, unknown to the dearest friend I have on earth, or even be forgotten by the mother who gave me birth, than I would again undergo the tempest of emotions through which I have arrived at those principles which are now the pole star of my existence. Born and reared amidst the influences of the accursed institution which is now being defended at the cost of the life-blood of the men who have established and built up that institution, it required years of absence from its unhallowed presence to teach me those lessons which, at length, I have learned. But when, at last, passion had died away—when early prejudices had been weeded out—I became convinced that I had been cherishing erroneous principles; and now I know that I am right. But this struggle has been going on in my breast from the time I first became old enough to think.

Now, sir, it does not become us, as men engaged in organizing a great State, to indulge in a spirit of revenge or passion, but rather, to look this matter calmly and dispassionately in the face. The question simply resolves itself into this: Shall we place in our organic law our emphatic, and, as long as this instrument shall remain, our enduring condemnation of the principle which gave birth to this rebellion? Shall it be said that we, meeting here to represent a loyal constituency, faltered in our duty, and pandered to that spirit of disaffection which exists in our midst, and which, for aught I know, may have its representatives—not, certainly, upon the floor of this Convention—but within the walls of the very building in which I am now speaking? Sir, I heartily indorse, and without mental reservation or purpose of evasion, the amendment which is now offered. I insist upon it, that it is the duty of this Convention to place in the organic law of the new State, a vow of loyalty, to which every man who may hereafter be called upon to exercise the functions of a freeman at the ballot-box, shall be required to subscribe. There is no middle ground. If we hesitate or delay, I believe, sir, we are lost. Facts have come to my knowledge since I came to this city as a member of this Convention, at the relation of which I have shuddered not less than when, for the first time, I learned that the hand of treason and rebellion had applied the spark to the cannon which sent the first ball against the walls of Sumter. I believe to-day, that not only in this Territory, but in the adjacent State of California—and not only in California, but in many a spot between here and the Missouri River—armed bands of rebels exist, who, upon the first occasion of a reverse—and such a thing may happen—are ready to apply the torch which shall lay in ashes our dwellings and our homes; to bring upon this land the unnumbered and unimaginable horrors which have reigned in that State from which more immediately I came.

Now, sir, this oath, if incorporated into our Constitution, we are told, will have no practical effect. These men now think they can plot in secret until the hour comes when they can work openly, and that if they must meet death, they may die with feet to the foe; but when they come to know that not death upon the battle-field, fighting for a mistaken idea, is to be their lot—but that instead, the felon's doom awaits them; that they are to drag out a ruined existence in chains, or in everlasting contempt—they will hesitate long before incurring such a punishment. More than that, they will learn that by persisting in a treasonable course, they are ostracising themselves; that they are placing a brand of suspicion upon themselves which will render them powerless for evil. Now, if we leave this matter open in our Constitution, prescribing no oath, but "taking the chances," to use a vulgarism, of the Legislature prescribing an oath which will be sufficiently binding, we may suddenly find ourselves bound hand and foot, or, at least, if not so bound, compelled to meet as foes upon the battle-field a class of men, every one of whom, for my part, I despise, as I do the filthy garbage of the gutter.

Sir, I do not see how an American citizen, even though born in the South, in a State which has declared itself separated from the United States, living in that section which has thrown thousands into the "imminent deadly breach," and sacrificed so many gallant lives—for a braver or more generous people than the Southern never lived, till they were tainted with this accursed heresy of treason—I can not see, I say, how an American citizen, although living in such a State, and amidst such associations, can so cling to the prejudices of the past as to even silently sympathise with that arch rebel who is now leading the hordes of treason against the Government, and to whom the language of the poet may well be applied:—

Tuesday.]

WARWICK—DUNNE.

[July 12.]

"Derision shall strike him forlorn,
A mockery that never shall die;
The curses of hate, and the hisses of scorn
Shall barthen the winds of his sky;
And proud o'er his ruin, forever be hurled
The laughter of triumph, the jeers of the world."

Sir, if we are to render such men powerless for evil, we must circumscribe their actions, and subject them to scorn and contempt. It becomes us as men, in establishing the muniment of a new State, to inscribe upon that muniment our condemnation of the causes which have led to the present unhappy condition of our country. It becomes us as men, met here with an avowed purpose, to distinctly understand that it is within our province to strengthen the hands of the Federal Government, and not to leave our work half done, but, before we leave this hall, to place a capstone upon the edifice which we shall have erected, and place it there so firmly, too, that nothing but the sound of time's last trumpet shall cause its foundations to crumble, or its pillars to fall.

Mr. WARWICK. I confess that I have listened to the debate which has occupied the last two hours, with a very great degree of interest, nor can I conceive that the time has been wasted which has been devoted to the consideration of this, possibly the most important question which this Convention will have before it. And I certainly have been astonished, exceedingly astonished, at the ground taken by some gentlemen in their arguments, in asserting that the measure which we are proposing to incorporate into the organic law of the State of Nevada partakes of the character of an act of revenge, which shall stand as a monument of our imbecility, instead of a lasting and enduring monument of our wisdom. The amendment proposed is itself so worded, so amply guarded, that no individual, no Southern man, however tenacious he may be with regard to his rights, can find any fault with that particular section which we are here attempting to incorporate into our organic law.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I would like to inquire if the gentleman, when he speaks of an amendment, understands that there is an amendment to an amendment proposed, and that the amendment now immediately before the Convention, contemplates making the distinction that only those who are challenged before the Registrar shall be required to take the oath?

Mr. WARWICK. Exactly; I understand the proposition perfectly, and I am opposed to that amendment, and in favor of the proposition that the oath shall be administered to every individual who shall come before the Registrar. I am in favor of that, for the reasons so ably given to the Convention by the gentleman from Humboldt himself (Mr. Dunne,) and so ably advocated, too, by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong,) and others who have spoken on this point. I am in favor of it for the reasons which the gentleman himself stated, that the time must come when the mantle of charity will be cast over the sins of the past, and when the scars of this rebellion shall be obliterated. I have no doubt that after a general amnesty shall have gone into effect, at the end of the rebellion, we shall forget that we have ever been aught but brothers. That day, however distant, must come, for the idea has never yet crossed my mind that there can exist two distinct and separate sections of the great American confederacy, living as neighbors, each under a different system of government, and with a different name from the other. I can only look forward to the day when we shall stand again as one great, united people; when we shall exist and be known as the United States of America, and when the accursed name of "Confederacy" shall be heard no more in the land. For that reason, sir, when this war shall have passed away, when this rebellion shall be no more heard of, I would have it said that this Convention, assembled while the clouds of war were still hovering over the land, to rear a young State, to add a new star to the glorious star-gemmed flag, was not forgetful of the coming peace, but placed those over whom the amnesty should throw its protecting ægis on an equality with other citizens, exacting no more from those who had been pardoned than those who had been loyal citizens from the first hour of the rebellion. If the respected gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins,) can show me where there is any vengeance in this proposition, when I say that the man who has perhaps stricken down in this war a brother, a son, or a father, may be allowed to vote upon taking the same oath which I myself have to take—when I say to him, "Sir, I ask no more of you in registering your name as a voter than I myself concede to that Government which has protected me from childhood to manhood, and which will continue to protect me till I find rest in the grave,"—then I shall be ready to vote against this amendment. Where is the vengeance in that?

One gentleman has spoken as if those men who are in rebellion were committing the unpardonable sin, over which we never can throw the mantle of charity. He spoke as if we never would be willing to forgive them, and the cry went up of "Blood! blood! blood!" He seems to think that the blood they have shed in this war never can be washed out, no matter what the character of the sacrifice. Such is not, in my judgment, the proper view of the case. I have seen a disposition manifested here by other gentlemen—by the young gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) more especially, and all who have advocated this proposition have referred to it—to look forward to the time when an amnesty will be in force, and when thereby this sin will be blotted out and no more known in the land. Now, sir, I hope the idea of requiring this test to be applied only to such as may be challenged, will not prevail, but that the amendment requiring every man to take the oath when his name is registered, will be adopted. I hope that amendment, having due regard to the Amnesty Proclamation, will be incorporated in our organic act, even if it does carry with it the condemnation of treason forever and forever, as long as the Republic shall stand. Is the gentleman from Storey afraid that we should place the seal of our condemnation upon treason? Is it not enough, when the whole land has been made one vast scene of sacrifice, when the scars are still open, the blood flowing from a million of wounds, and the life of the Nation trembling in the balance, to justify us now, while we are on the point of rising into National existence, in stamping upon the charter of our coming liberty the fact that we do abhor and abominate treason? We propose to let the seal of our curse and condemnation stand upon it as long as these mountains around us shall continue to rear their heads towards heaven, and for one, I am not afraid to raise my voice, and to have my vote go upon the record of the proceedings of this Convention, in condemnation of treason. Though we may forgive the traitors, we never shall forgive nor cease to abhor their treason. Though the Amnesty may cover their sins, and they be blotted out and forgotten, still the treason is as accursed as ever. And future statesmen shall arise and point to the time in which we live, when that treason endangered the life of the Nation, when the Government itself was threatened by it to be blotted out, and the hope of coming millions quenched forever. Then, I ask, shall we not now place our seal of condemnation upon that treason? I am at a loss to perceive where the argument of revenge can be made to apply, when we ask no more of the vilest traitor that ever shot down and murdered a patriot in cold blood, than we ourselves concede to the Government.

I can see a very serious objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) leaving the section so as to apply only to those who may be challenged. In the first place, that would impose a most disagreeable duty upon the challenger, or if you make it the Registrar's duty, it imposes a disagreeable duty upon him, and a most weighty responsibility, also. I venture to say, sir, that there is no loyal man in this Convention, nor yet within the borders of this Territory, but will be willing to sacrifice so much as is required by this provision, if sacrifice it be, to require him once a year to pledge anew his fealty to the American Union. Now, suppose a case like this—and it is one likely to occur every day: Two men go before the Registrar a few days preceding the election to have their names recorded as voters. Both are equally known to the Registrar, and he is on friendly terms with both. He takes the name of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) if you please, without any question, because he knows him to be thoroughly loyal. I then present myself, but he says, "No, sir; you cannot have your name registered unless you take this oath, because I believe you to be a traitor." It would be no more than his duty, I admit, if he believed that to be the case, but when you consider the manifold relations which we all occupy more or less, and necessarily so, with people who are of doubtful fidelity to the Government, with whom we are brought in contact in our daily affairs, I submit that this would impose upon a Registrar a most disagreeable duty, and an onerous task; whereas it would be no task at all if every man were required to take the oath. I, or my friend from Storey, can take the oath then, on equal terms, and any man who does not want to take it, can go away; and the man who may be unjustly accused of disloyalty, if he has no sympathy with treason, will thus have an opportunity to manifest that fact. But, sir, we know the tenacity with which all men cling to supposed rights. The Registrars would be overwhelmed with applications to challenge this, that, or the other man, and they would be abused frequently if they did not require certain men to take the oath.

I repeat that it is no hardship to any loyal man to take this oath. I do not believe that there is a member of this Convention here who would object to taking it if he were called upon at this time. Why, then, should we place upon any officer this onerous burden, this disagreeable task which would be likely to subject him to abuse a hundred times a day, when we can just as easily put this matter in such a shape that he need give offense to no man, and at the same time the provision will positively debar those who are not in sympathy with the Government from counterbalancing the votes of loyal men? I believe the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) is actuated by as patriotic motives as any gentleman in this Convention, although I certainly do think it is an error of judgment on his part to suppose that a law can be made under the amendment to the amendment, which will be as efficient as it would be under the original instructions, which have been supported by nearly every gentleman in this body.

Mr. FITCH. The gentleman from Lander will pardon me for the interruption, but it is now only ten minutes before five o'clock, and we must have a vote soon, or not at all to-day. The gentleman has already exceeded the limit of fifteen minutes, I believe.

Mr. WARWICK. Oh, very well; I do not desire to trespass beyond my time, and I have said all I wished to say.

Mr. NOURSE. I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment, because I like the original proposition better.

The question was taken on the amendment to the instructions proposed by Mr. Johnson, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the instructions proposed by Mr. Dunne.

Wednesday.] FITCH—MURDOCK—BROSNAN—WARWICK—KENNEDY—BANKS—DUNNE. [July 13.

Mr. FITCH. If we carry this matter over till to-morrow, we shall be likely to fritter away another day before it is finally adjusted. I hope we shall instruct the committee to report something immediately.

Mr. MURDOCK. If a further amendment is in order now, I think that one should be made. I think I can see that instances might arise where this section, as proposed to be amended, would work a hardship, at least in certain communities. In Virginia City, probably there would be no trouble about registering the names; but I would like to have the section so amended that the Tax Collectors or their deputies might be provided with the form of oath, and the papers necessary, so that men might have their names registered at the same time they pay their taxes.

The PRESIDENT. This proposition would not inhibit the Legislature from providing for that course; it only requires that the oath shall be taken, and leaves the mode and manner to be regulated by the Legislature.

Mr. MURDOCK. Very well; I most heartily concur.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to recommit with the instructions proposed by him, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the special committee, under the motion, Messrs. Kennedy, Dunne, and Brosnan.

Mr. BROSNAN. It is not the usual parliamentary course, I believe, to place upon the committee to which a measure is referred, a member who is opposed to that measure. But I wish to say, however, that I am not opposed to this proposition, and I will therefore serve on the committee.

Mr. CHAPIN gave notice that the Committee on the Great Seal of Nevada would meet this evening.

The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the President, under the rule, declared the Convention adjourned.

NINTH DAY.

CARSON, July 13, 1864.

MORNING SESSION.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Crawford, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Jones, Morse, Sturtevant, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 28; absent, 11.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. Haines.

On motion of Mr. HOVEY, leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. Frizell.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. RILEY.

The journal of Saturday was read, corrected, and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SECRETARY stated (by leave of the Convention) that on Monday some member of the Convention had given notice of an amendment to Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, and that in consequence of that proposed amendment he had directed the assistant Secretary to suspend the engrossing of the article. The amendment referred to was in Section 9, in relation to the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. DELONG. That is the old bone.

Mr. WARWICK. I think I was the one who gave notice at that time that I should make a motion to amend so as to raise the rate of interest on these bonds from seven to ten per cent.; but I thought that matter had been disposed of and decided by the Convention. The question was very ably argued, I remember, by the President, and I was under the impression that the Convention took action immediately, retaining the lower rate of interest. If, however, the subject is still open, I should be very happy to have the clause amended, and at the proper time I shall be glad of an opportunity to say a few words in regard to the propriety of raising that rate of interest.

The PRESIDENT. It would not be in order at the present time. Reports of committees are the present order of business.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE — THE VOTER'S OATH.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the special committee to whom was referred Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, with instructions to amend Section 7, reported as follows:—

Your committee to which was recommended Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, with instructions to amend Section 7, by inserting the oath stricken out of Section 2, or to draft an oath proper for that purpose and report the same to the Convention, respectfully submit the following proviso as an addition to Section 7:—

"Provided, That no person shall have his name registered as an elector until he shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation before an officer authorized by law:—'I ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever, so help me God.'"

All of which is respectfully submitted.

F. H. KENNEDY, Chairman.

Mr. BANKS. I move the adoption of that report.

Mr. DUNNE. In the ordinary course of business, I believe, this report would go to the general file, but I should like to suspend the rules and take it up now.

The PRESIDENT. I suppose it is competent for the Convention to consider the report now, under the rules.

Mr. BANKS. I hope any question of order in regard to it will be waived, and let us de-

LOCKWOOD—McCLINTON—DELONG—DUNNE.

[July 13.

file the matter now, as it has already been fully debated.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I listened to a long debate on this question yesterday, and I should, myself, like to make a very few remarks upon it at this time, merely for the sake of gaining some information, because I wish to vote intelligently. Sir, if I understand the object of a registration of voters, it is to provide the means of preventing men who are not qualified electors, under the laws, from exercising the right of the elective franchise. Now, by referring to Section 2 of this article, gentlemen will find that we have this provision:—

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot or insane person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Already we have provided that no such person as is here described shall be allowed to exercise this right of suffrage. I start out, sir, with the assumption that one duty, and, I presume, about the only duty, of the Registrar, will be to find out, by some proper means, who are, and who are not, qualified electors.

Mr. McCLINTON. I want to correct the gentleman, with his permission, in one respect. I think that section which he has read, and which has met with general approval by the Convention, says that such men shall not vote "unless a general amnesty be granted by the United States," or words to that effect.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I understand all that; but this article goes further, in another part. It says in Section 8, as we have it before us in the printed basis:—

"Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the county of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment, by proper proofs, of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage, as hereby established."

Now, who is to ascertain this, by proper proofs? Why, the Registrar. I submit to the Convention, that if a man comes before that officer to have his name registered, and the officer says to him—"Sir, hold up your hand and swear whether or not you have ever borne arms against the Federal Government, or held office under the so-called Confederate States,"—if the man refuses to take that oath, the Registrar must, in the exercise of the functions of his office, even in accordance with the sections I have read, refuse to receive his name. He would have no right to register the name of such a man as a qualified elector. Therefore, I say, while I would be willing, if necessary, to prescribe the very strictest form of oath—because I start out with the presumption that we are in favor of allowing no man to exercise the elective franchise, who feels that it is his bounden duty to do all he can to overthrow the Government, whether of the State or Nation, for that would be a suicidal policy—yet it seems to me that we are not called upon to prescribe any oath at all, in this instrument. It is, of course, the province of the Legislature to prescribe the duties of the Registrar; and it does seem to me—although I am not a lawyer, and do not wish to set up my opinions in opposition to those of abler men in this Convention—that if the Registrar has any legitimate duty at all to perform, that duty is marked out, or, at least, intimated, in this Section 2. I submit this suggestion to the consideration of the Convention, and would be glad to hear the opinions of gentlemen who know more about matters of this sort than I do.

Mr. DELONG. Does the gentleman from Ormsby think that this Section 2, which he has read, authorizes the Registrar to require any man to take the oath?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I submit that the language of the section is plain. It says that no person who has been guilty of any of these things which are specified, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector; and the very object of having a registry of votes is, to find out, before the day of election, who are electors, in order that the proceedings, on election day, may not be interrupted and delayed, by any questions involving the right to exercise the elective franchise.

Mr. DELONG. But there is nothing in the section to authorize the Registrar to require the oath to be taken by any man. There is nothing in it about the Registrar; and it would be looked upon as a usurpation of power on his part to require it. But, by requiring every man to take the oath, we relieve the officer from the responsibility, and at the same time we shut out disloyal men from the exercise of the elective franchise.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Neither is there anything in the Constitution to make it the duty of the Governor to veto a bill. It seems clear to me, that as the Registrar has certain duties to perform, and as the only object in having a Registrar at all is, that he shall ascertain, by proper proofs, who are legal voters, this power and duty may be inferred. I consider that it would be as much his duty, when a person applies to be registered, to find out, by proper proofs, whether he has been in the service, military or otherwise, of the so-called Confederate States, as it would be to find out, by proper proofs, whether or not he is a resident, and has been six months in the State, and thirty days in the district. It is left for the Legislature to prescribe the duties of the Registrar, and therefore I consider this oath out of place in the Constitution. I am willing to leave it entirely to the Legislature to say by what means the Registrar shall ascertain whether a man is, or is not, a properly qualified elector, before registering his name.

Mr. DUNNE. I understand the matter in this light: Section 2 specifies certain classes of persons who shall not be allowed the privilege of voting, and it is the business of the Legislature, under the restriction laid down here in the Constitution, to put that provision into operation. Then, after the classes of persons who are allowed to vote have been defined, the subsequent section goes still further, as amended, and says that, before those persons shall vote, they must be required to take this additional oath.

Mr. STURTEVANT. As I understand it, the great reason, or one of the principal reasons for registering the names of the voters, is for the purpose of gathering the poll-tax. It is a financial scheme. It may be provided that a man shall not be registered except upon the payment of his poll-tax.

The PRESIDENT. No provision of that kind has been incorporated into the Constitution, but there is a provision making it discretionary with the Legislature to pass a law providing that the payment of a poll-tax shall be a condition precedent to the right of voting. The Legislature, however, may pass such a law, or it may not.

Mr. STURTEVANT. If that is not the object, so far as I am concerned, I would as soon as see for this oath stricken out.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Now I still persist in my proposition.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman state it again, briefly?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will state it as briefly as I can, but I did not take a part in the discussion of yesterday, and I think I might be allowed to occupy a few moments, if necessary.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not mean to ask him to be brief on account of time; what I want is a clear understanding. I think the gentleman sees a difficulty, which can be briefly stated, and perhaps explained away.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I say that the object of having a registry, I think, is to ascertain who are the electors.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. And to ascertain that, previous to the day of election.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARWICK. I hope the gentleman from Humboldt will not interrupt with his interjections. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I hold that it must be the duty of the Registrar to examine any applicant, before registering his name, relative to his qualifications as a voter; and among those qualifications, the applicant must show, by some means or other, the satisfaction of the Registrar, that he has never borne arms against the Government, or held office, either civil or military, under the so-called Confederate States. Now, sir, my proposition is this: that if you are going to prescribe any oath, you should insert in it the other disqualifications, also. It is as much the duty of the Registrar to require a man to swear that he has not so borne arms, or held office under the so-called Confederate States, as it is to ascertain by absolute proof that he is a resident of the State, and has been a resident of the district or county long enough to make him a qualified elector.

Mr. BANKS. I think I sufficiently understand the proposition of the gentleman, and my answer to it is this. Section 2, of Article II, provides that persons guilty of treason against the United States, unless restored to civil rights, shall not have the privilege of voting. That is the declaration of the Constitution; but we do not propose to prescribe any oath in regard to that. We propose that the Legislature may pass such laws as will enable the officers to determine whether a man has been guilty of treason or not, or whether he has been pardoned under the Amnesty Proclamation or not. So far as the past is concerned, we propose to leave it, with the machinery, oaths and all, to the Legislature—to the statutes to be passed by the Legislature. Then, coming to the section which we are considering now, we provide that, so far as future acts are concerned, we will require every man who comes forward to be registered, to take the oath which has been read. That, I understand, is the whole scheme. As it regards the past, we leave it to the Legislature; and as regards the future, we prescribe an oath, to be taken by all. And I wish to say here, in reply to the long and able arguments against this provision, to which we listened yesterday, only this: that we do not propose to do anything in the nature of revenge; we simply provide for protection against treason in the future.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I wish to ask one question: Suppose a man comes before the Registrar and asks to have his name registered, does not the gentleman from Humboldt think that it would be the duty of the Registrar, under Section 2, to ask him if he ever held office under the so-called Confederate States; I mean if there were no provision made on the subject by the Legislature?

Mr. BANKS. I will endeavor to answer that question. It involves a point which was very ably considered by Justice Sanderson, of the Supreme Court of California, in a decision which most of the gentlemen present have probably read. This is one of those sections of the Constitution which, like the other section to which I have referred, is not self-enforcing. It requires legislative action to provide the machinery by which the matter shall be determined. That is, the questions in regard to a party coming up to vote—Is he entitled to vote or not? Has he been guilty of treason or not? &c.—must be determined by the agency created by the Legislature. This section is not self-enforcing.

Mr. HOVEY. I think I see some difficulty in the way, myself. I will offer an amendment to meet it.

Mr. DUNNE. I think an amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOVEY. Perhaps it may not be in order, and I will only suggest it, and ask to have it read for information.

Wednesday.] BROSAN—PRESIDENT—DUNNE—McCLINTON—CROSMAN—PROCTOR. [July 13.

The SECRETARY read, as follows :

Add after the oath, the words, "Provided, that the Legislature may, by law, prescribe such further oath as they may deem proper."

The question was taken on adopting the report of the special committee, amending Article II, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suggest the propriety of reading the whole article, as amended, so that we can all understand it.

The article was read by the Secretary.

THE SOLDIERS' VOTE.

Mr. BROSAN. I think there is some little ambiguity in the reading of Section 4, as it has been amended.

The PRESIDENT. There seems to be another objection to the language here employed, if the Convention will permit a suggestion from the Chair. Under the operation of this Constitution, it is proposed that the votes of soldiers shall be made to apply to the counties in which such soldiers were recruited ; but men who are severally residents of three or four different counties may all be enlisted in one county ; and according to the language of this section, their votes might be made to apply to that county, although some of them would be legally residents, and might claim the right to vote in other counties. They are declared to be voters in the counties in which they were enlisted, although they do not lose residence in the counties in which they had been living before they were so enlisted.

Mr. DUNNE. I think it is eminently proper that the votes should be applied to the counties in which the soldiers are recruited, for the reason that the only difficulty would be to know where the soldier was from. It would lead to endless disputes if it were necessary to determine where the residences of all the men were at the time of their enlistment, while the records would be available, and would be competent evidence to show where each man was enlisted. Another point is this : that if one county offers superior bounties to lead men to come from other counties and enlist, I think, in the way of reward to such a county for displaying greater liberality than is shown by other counties, it should have the advantage of the votes of the soldiers recruited within its limits.

Mr. McCLINTON. There would be a difficulty in the way of allowing soldiers to vote in the counties in which they are recruited, and I think there should be a constitutional provision to prohibit them from voting except where they are residents. A person might go from this county to Storey County and enlist, who had never been in Storey County before the day of his enlistment, or but a day or two before. Under the provisions of the Constitution, as found in Section 1 of this Article, if he had not enlisted, he could not vote there, because he would not have acquired a residence by having lived there thirty days. Now, as there have been some objections made to the words here used, providing that the soldiers' vote shall apply to the county in which he was recruited, I think I can obviate such objection by this amendment which I now offer. I move to amend Section 4 by striking out all after the word "county," and inserting instead the words, "and townships of which said voters are bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment."

The PRESIDENT. The amendment can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCLINTON. I hope there will be no objection. My object in inserting the word "township," is this : the office of Justice of the Peace is one of the most important of all the county offices in any county, and it is just as important that we should have the votes of our enlisted soldiers in the election of Justices of the Peace, as it is in filling the office of the Sheriff of the county, the County Clerk, or any other county officer. In reality it is an office of greater interest and importance to the people, the security of their rights often depending more upon the election of a good Justice of the Peace than upon a good Sheriff ; and unless the soldier is allowed to vote in the township in which at the time of his enlistment he resided, of which he was then a bona fide resident, he could not vote at all for a Justice of the Peace.

Mr. CROSMAN. It looks to me as if there would be a difficulty in the way of making this part of the section practically operative, if you make any material change in the language as it has been read. As has already been remarked, the only means of knowing where the soldiers came from is, by referring to the records made by their superior officers, at the place of rendezvous. If we attempt to change the language so as to apply the votes of the soldiers to their several places of residence, rather than to the places where they were recruited, very frequently there will be no such evidence to produce, and the provision would, therefore, be inoperative. Although there might be a few cases in which men would be allowed to vote in Storey County, for instance, who had gone there from this, or some other county, to enlist, yet I see no other way of making this provision operative.

Mr. PROCTOR. I desire to make one remark, and I speak from experience. In regard to this matter of enlistments, I presume that the practice is about the same now, as it used to be when I was in Uncle Sam's service. When a recruit is enlisted, the first questions asked him are as to his name, age, and residence, and those matters are recorded on the enlistment-roll. That is the case with every soldier in the army of the United States. The recruit gives his name, age, height, complexion, residence, &c., and it is all placed on record. I have seen, in the city of Mexico, men discharged from the army, who were residents of Kentucky at the time of their enlistment, and who, after their discharge, received mileage to their places of residence. You will find no more difficulty in learning the residence of a soldier from the records, than you will in finding there the place where he was enlisted, and, possibly, not so much.

Mr. DUNNE. If that is so, let us make this amendment. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. CROSMAN. I certainly would desire to have the vote of each man apply where it really belongs.

Mr. McCLINTON. The amendment provides that the soldier may vote in the county and township of which he is a bona fide voter at the time of the election.

The amendment offered by Mr. McClinton was adopted by unanimous consent.

POLL TAX.

Mr. BROSNAN. I notice that in Section 8— or Section 9, as it is numbered in this printed copy—the language is: “The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax, of not less than two, nor exceeding four dollars, from each male person resident,” etc. I think it should read, “by each male person.”

Mr. STURTEVANT. It really looks to me rather like crowding the mourners, to make a man who is sixty years old, pay a poll-tax. I should think there would be no objection to making that fifty years, instead of sixty years.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I suggest that we should insert the words “able-bodied” before the word “male.” I think if a man is sick, he should not be required to pay a poll-tax.

Mr. CHAPIN. Then we should have an awful set of sick people in the country.

Mr. DELONG. It would certainly prevent immigration, on account of the great number of people among us who would be in ill health. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the gentlemen from Storey (Mr. Brosman) to move a verbal alteration.

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir; I will move to substitute the word “by,” for the word “from,” so as to read, “by each male person,” etc.

Mr. TOZER. I object. “From” is just as good a word as “by.”

Mr. DELONG. We had better leave that whole matter to the Committee on Phraseology.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I merely threw out a suggestion that it would be well to exempt sick persons, because I knew I could not get the amendment in without unanimous consent. If any member objects, I will not offer an amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. I object.

The article as amended was again read, as follows:—

ARTICLE II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have actually resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

Sec. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person, who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot, or insane person, shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

Sec. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States; nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum, at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

Sec. 4. The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same, who may be absent from this State in the military or naval service of the United States; provided, the votes so cast for officers shall be made to apply to the county and township of which said voters were bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment; and provided, that the payment of a poll-tax, or a registration of such a voter, shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections, wherein other provisions are not contained in this Constitution.

Sec. 5. During the day on which any general election shall be held in this State, no qualified elector shall be arrested by virtue of any civil process.

Sec. 6. All elections by the people, shall be by ballot; and all elections by the Legislature, or by either branch thereof, shall be viva voce.

Sec. 7. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment, by proper proofs, of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage, as hereby established; to preserve the purity of elections, and to regulate the manner of holding, and making returns of the same; provided, that no person shall have his name registered as an elector until he shall take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation, before an officer authorized by law:—

I ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever, so help me God.

Sec. 8. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll-tax of not less than two nor exceeding four dollars, from each male person resident in the State, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, (uncivilized American Indians excepted); one-half to be applied for State, and one-half for county purposes; and the Legislature may, in its discretion, make such payment a condition of the right of voting.

Sec. 9. All persons qualified by law to vote for Representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada, on the 21st day of March, 1864, and all other persons who may be lawful voters in said Territory on the first Wednesday of September next following, shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution.

There being no further amendment, the question was taken by yeas and nays, on the final passage of the article, and the vote resulted—yeas, 29; nays, 1—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Frazell, Folsom, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Parker, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—29.

Nay—Mr. Proctor—1.

So the article was passed.

Mr. HOVEY. With the consent of the Convention, I should like to explain my vote. I have voted in the affirmative, but I still see the same difficulty which the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood) has predicted to arise from prescribing this oath in the Constitution.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION.

Mr. DUNNE offered the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the officers of this Convention be allowed an additional one half day's salary for each evening session of this Convention attended by them.

Mr. DELONG. I think they will have good luck to get one day's salary.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. DUNNE. I think I have the floor.

Mr. FITCH. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. DUNNE. I think that resolution ought to pass. If there was any reason for allowing these officers a salary in the first place, then, after having required them to perform additional labors, the same reasons must apply in favor of the passage of this resolution to pay them for such additional labors. They should certainly be paid for their labor, and if we resolve that they shall perform extraordinary labors, we should at least give them a chance of obtaining additional compensation.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "officers," the words, "and private." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The amendment of the gentleman from Lander is out of order.

Mr. WARWICK. So I supposed.

Mr. FITCH. I renew my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and upon a division, it was not agreed to—yeas, 8; noes, 19.

Mr. FITCH. I trust gentlemen will consider that the people, and particularly the press of this Territory, are watching us with very sharp eyes, and any little matter of this kind that tends to increase the possible expenses of a State Government, even if it does not amount to more than twenty-five dollars, will be met with an outcry. It amounts to but little, I know, but I think that the question whether or not our officers will get any salary at all is extremely problematical. If the members of the Convention are patriotic enough to come here and work for nothing, it seems to me the officers might afford to work evenings upon a full salary.

Mr. DUNNE. As to the amount of work, it makes no difference whether we do our work up in a fortnight by working nights, or take a longer time for it without any night sessions. The same amount of labor is to be gone through with in either case, and the same amount of work is to be done by the officers of the Convention.

Mr. FITCH. That is true; but if we create any extra expense, the advocates of the State Government will be attacked for it.

Mr. DUNNE. I dislike to see everything made to turn upon the question of how it is going to affect the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. FITCH. Well, that is just the point where the gentleman and I differ.

Mr. DELONG. I do not think there is more than one newspaper in the Territory that is disposed to pick up such little matters, and that is the Washoe Herald.

Mr. FITCH. The Washoe Herald is the only paper in Storey County that has as yet taken ground in favor of a State Government. I say that these little things will be picked up by our opponents and used against the adoption of the Constitution. Now, I entirely agree with the views of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne,) in regard to this matter, but the difference, and the only difference between us is, that he is not disposed to favor the adoption of the Constitution, while I am decidedly in favor of its adoption.

Mr. DUNNE. Now I rise to a question of privilege. I call upon any gentleman of the Convention to point to a single amendment I have offered to the basis which we have adopted here, that can in any sense whatever be construed as calculated to render the Constitution odious to the people. Every amendment I have made or offered in this Convention, if examined, I am satisfied will show for itself that it was intended to render the Constitution as little objectionable as possible, in case it should be adopted by the people. That is one reason why I came here. I feared that the Constitution would be adopted, and I came here for the purpose, if possible, of preventing its being framed in such a way as to be a great burden upon the people. If it is to be adopted, I want it as little burdensome as possible. Now, if the gentleman will allow me, jocosely, to offer an amendment, it will be thus: Inasmuch as he admits the justice of the resolution, and that those officers should be paid for their extra labor—

Mr. FITCH (interrupting.) I do not admit that.

Mr. DUNNE. I was going to say, that as he is afraid if we pass this resolution it will make votes against the Constitution. I would suggest that these earnest friends of the Constitution, themselves, pay the officers for their extra services.

Mr. WARWICK. That would be a rather serious joke, I should say.

The PRESIDENT. If the gentleman offers

Wednesday.] STURTEVANT—BROSNAN—CRAWFORD—FITCH—DUNNE—DELONG—BANKS. [July 13.]

that as an amendment, the Chair rules it out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am in favor of this resolution, and I think the objection to it of the gentleman from Storey is mere humbug. Whatever we recommend the Legislature to appropriate for the pay of our officers, will undoubtedly be appropriated, whether the Constitution shall be adopted or not. That will make no sort of difference. Let the people vote "Constitution—Yes," or "Constitution—No"; the attachés will get their pay all the same. Now, I do not like to compel men to labor without paying them for it, but there is one other thing which I do not like, and that is the enormous amount of these extra bills. I had the pleasure, last winter, of examining bills to the amount of some twenty-seven thousand dollars, consisting of charges made against the other Convention, all of which were passed upon.

Mr. BROSNAN. Twenty-seven thousand? You mean twenty-seven hundred dollars, do you not?

Mr. STURTEVANT. No, sir; twenty-seven thousand dollars, and a little over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hope this resolution will pass. I see no reason why we should employ men here without paying them. If gentlemen are willing to spend their own nights here gratuitously, very well; but that is no reason why we should not render to Caesar the things which are Caesar's—no reason why we should not secure a fair payment for the services of those gentlemen who are employed by us. If gentlemen here from the mining districts should secure the services of miners to work in their mines during the night time, they would find it a very poor plea indeed, that because they themselves worked voluntarily during the night, therefore they should not pay their employees for their services.

Mr. FITCH. Did the gentleman ever know a legislative body that paid its clerks and employees extra pay beyond the regular salaries, for night sessions? I do not know of such an instance, and I know the Legislature of California never did it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Have they never given their clerks and employees extra pay?

Mr. FITCH. Never for working at night. The question was taken upon the adoption of the resolution, and upon a division, it was adopted—yeas, 19; noes, 5.

Mr. FITCH. I change my vote from no to aye, and give notice of a motion to reconsider.

THE RESOLUTION TO ADJOURN WITHOUT DAY.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the resolution relating to the adjournment of this Convention sine die, offered on the sixth instant, be taken from the table and made the special order for Saturday next, at half-past seven o'clock, P. M.

Mr. DELONG. I call for the reading of the resolution.

The SECRETARY read the preamble and resolution.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move that the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt be laid on the table.

Mr. DUNNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a point of order. The motion is to take a subject from the table, and a motion cannot be made to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT, after some discussion, overruled the point of order, and stated the question on Mr. Brosnan's motion to lay Mr. Dunne's motion on the table.

Mr. BANKS. I do not make any appeal.

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to have the yeas and nays.

Messrs. HOVEY and TOZER seconded the call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote resulted—yeas, 21; nays, 7—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, Earl, Frizell, Folsom, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, and Wetherill—21.

Nays—Messrs. DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Kinkead, Sturtevant, Warwick, and Mr. President—7.

So the motion was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

On motion of Mr. TOZER, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) for the further consideration of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, which had been recommended to the Committee of the Whole, with special instructions.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. BANKS. I ask for the reading of the instructions of the Convention.

The SECRETARY. The article was recommended to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend Section 3, by striking out the words "Tuesday next after the first Monday in November," and inserting instead, the words "first Wednesday in September;" also, by adding the words "except as hereinafter provided;" so that the section would read—

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the first Wednesday in September, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Secretary make the amendments, in conformity with the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I understand that the Committee is acting under special instructions, but I wish to call attention to the time fixed for the election in this section. I think we ought to fix our election on the same day as the election in California, in order to prevent "colonizing" or "strikes," from there here, or vice versa.

Mr. DUNNE. We can bring that matter up in the Convention, if we please, but not here.

Wednesday,] STURTEVANT—DELONG—CROSMAN—HOVEY—BANKS—WARWICK—DUNNE. [July 13.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Then what was the use of referring it to the Committee of the Whole?

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to instruct the Secretary to make the amendments, and it was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would inquire if that section covers the first election?

The PRESIDENT. I understood that it was expected to be necessary to frame another section to cover the year of the Presidential election, and that that was the reason for incorporating the words, "except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Committee rise, and report the article back to the Convention, with the amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration article IV, entitled Legislative Department, and had amended the same in accordance with the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. Under the rules, the article now goes, I believe, to the general file, unless by a suspension of the rules we take it up, and pass it now. I would have no objection to the further consideration of the article at this time, but I have an objection to passing it as it stands, and I want an opportunity to refer it to the Committee of the Whole, with other special instructions. We now have it in our possession, but under the rules it must go to the general file. I do not wish to take advantage of that circumstance, in order to make the motion which I wish to make, and I dislike to object to suspending the rules; but if the Convention will be generous enough to allow the motion to be made now, to recommit with other instructions, I will make the motion to suspend the rules. I move that the rules be suspended in order to consider the article at this time.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CROSMAN. I do not know that I understand the position the matter has assumed, but I, for one, am opposed to the section as it has been amended.

The PRESIDENT. The question is first on the adoption of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOVEY. I am entirely unable to see what benefit will arise from the change. Why should we be an exception to the rule of our neighbors, and to the rule of almost every State? For nearly all the States are changing their time of election to November, the day which was mentioned in the original section, so as to conform to the day of the Presidential election. I am, for my part, opposed to this change, and I shall vote against the adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDENT. Upon further reflection, the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the only mode of reaching this question is, by a reconsideration of the vote which was had yesterday, instructing the Committee of the Whole to make this change. Those instructions required the committee to make these amendments, and the committee has merely complied with the instructions of the Convention. The only way to reach the matter, therefore, is to reconsider the vote instructing the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. I think the Chair is in error. It seems to me that the question, after the amendment comes back from the committee, is on the adoption of the section as amended. It is true that the Committee of the Whole have merely a clerical duty to perform—to make the amendments as they were instructed to do—but when the report comes back, it is subject to further amendment. It may be again referred, with other instructions, or it may even be defeated, at the will of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to adhere to the opinion that the matter can only be reached by a reconsideration.

Mr. BANKS. As a matter of parliamentary practice, I perfectly agree with the Chair, and I make the motion, in accordance with his suggestion, that the vote by which the committee were instructed to make this amendment, changing the time of election, be reconsidered.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a single point, and that is, the question whether we are to regard the action of the committee, under the instructions, as a finality, or not. If we are, there is no necessity for a reconsideration.

Some further discussion took place upon the question of order involved in the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT. There is no question of order pending, an appeal not having been taken; and the only question now before the Convention, is upon the motion to reconsider, made by the gentleman from Humboldt.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Banks, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now recurs upon the motion to recommit the article to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend Section 3.

Mr. DELONG. I ask leave to add to that motion other instructions; which additional instructions are, to strike out Section 32.

Mr. DUNNE. I will ask leave to amend my motion to recommit, so as to refer the article to a select committee of three, to be appointed by the Chair.

No objection being made, Mr. Dunne had leave to modify his motion, according to his request.

SOLE TRADERS.

Mr. DELONG. Now I move to add other special instructions, namely: to give to that committee of three, instructions to strike out Section 32 of this article. I wish to say only a word on this subject. I was in the chair when that section was amended, in Committee of the Whole, and I keenly felt the importance of the subject involved. I wish now merely to express my views, and to record my vote upon that subject, before we take final action on this article. Section 32 reads as follows:—

[July 13.

SEC. 32. No law shall be passed, authorizing married women to carry on business as sole traders.

I have listened to the arguments which have been advanced here against striking out that section, and I have heard the same arguments used in the California Legislature, against laws of that character. I am prepared to admit that I have seen abuses practiced under the sole-trader law, in a great many cases, and who has not seen almost every law, human and divine, abused? But shall we say that any law is not a good law, merely because it has been abused? I think not. I know that under such a law, husbands have taken their property and placed it in the hands of their wives, and by means of perjury, have carried on business with it, in defiance of the just claims of their creditors, and I know that under such a law, business has been carried on ostensibly by women, which was totally unsuited to the character of females. But while I have seen these things, in my private capacity as a citizen, and in my business as a lawyer, yet I have also seen hundreds of instances, where the profligate husband not only refused to pay anything for the support of his family, but even wrung from the wife and mother her hard earnings, and prostituted them to the gratification of his own base appetite, leaving her and her children to suffer and starve. I have even seen the whiskey-seller bring suit to recover the wife's wages, and take the fruits of her toil, to pay the debts which her dissolute husband had incurred for bad liquor, in his vile hell. I have seen these things until it has made my blood almost curdle, and my soul rebel against the thought of this sort of thing being tolerated—against any law which will allow such things to be done. I say, it is true that the system of sole-traders may have been abused, but where it has been abused in one case, there are hundreds of other cases, in which it has proved the salvation of the wife and mother, struggling to save herself and her children from want and infamy, by her labor. For God's sake, let us extend so much charity to those poor women who may be struggling in the same way, in our Territory! I ask it on behalf of justice; I ask it on behalf of weak and defenceless women and children; I ask it on behalf of those who, though sometimes called upon to bear an equal share of the burdens in the support of the government, are, nevertheless, refused a complete recognition by law as individuals.

I say I ask it on behalf of justice. Under that constitutional provision, so long abused in California, they have succeeded, at last, in passing the sole-trader statute, which to-day exists in that State, and which is not liable to be so much abused. And if the law is abused in California, we can reenact the statute of that State on the subject, and improve upon it, by making such provisions as will cut off, entirely, all those frauds. Gentlemen have spoken of the abuses which were experienced in California, three or four years ago; but at that time they had a different law from the present one. Now they have so far improved upon the old law, that they have got a system which satisfies all. I appeal to gentlemen, while we are engaged in framing our fundamental law, and incorporating into it provisions which are to stand for all time; do not, for God's sake, directly cripple and tie the hands of the Legislature, so that, no matter how crying the aggravation may be, no matter how great the necessity which may present itself, the Legislature cannot act in this matter to protect those poor and powerless human beings who appeal to us in the strongest manner in which one human heart can appeal to another, for redress, or for relief. My amendment is, to strike out this blot upon the honor of our State, for it will be a grievous stain upon the Constitution, if it shall be adopted.

Mr. BANKS. What is the order, I ask, in which these questions are to be taken? I understand that the first motion is, to recommit the article to a special committee, with certain special instructions, and now a motion is made to amend those instructions. It seems to me, therefore, that we have under consideration, two distinct propositions.

Mr. DELONG. Oh, no sir; an amendment to the instructions is in order.

The PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that several other gentlemen desire to offer amendments.

The PRESIDENT. The vote will be in this order, if there are no further amendments:—first, upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) and then upon the motion to recommit.

Mr. DELONG. My motion is in the shape of an amendment, or additional instructions.

The PRESIDENT. If it is offered in the shape of additional instructions, it is not in order, and nothing is before the Convention but the original motion to recommit, because you cannot have two propositions under consideration at once. If the gentleman offers it as an amendment, it is in order, but if he offers it as a distinct proposition, it is not in order.

Mr. DELONG. I offer it as an additional amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Then the Chair decides that it is not in order; we cannot have two distinct propositions before the Convention at the same time.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think if we were to consider it as an amendment, we might get into a muddle. I want to vote against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, and in favor of that offered by the gentleman from Storey.

Wednesday,]

BANKS—PRESIDENT—DELONG—STURTEVANT—CHAPIN—WARWICK.

[July 13.

Further discussion occurred upon the question of order.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the instructions proposed by my colleague from Humboldt be amended by adding to them the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Storey.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman make that as his own motion?

Mr. BANKS. I will move it, if the gentleman from Storey will accept it.

Mr. DELONG. Under the ruling of the Chair, I will accept it, but I desire to have an understanding with the Convention that my motion is not to be put in such a way that the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) will defeat my amendment. All I want is to have a fair expression on the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. STURTEVANT. There are several amendments which gentlemen wish to offer, and I desire to ask if a motion to recommit the article to the Committee of the Whole, would be in order?

The PRESIDENT. A motion is not in order to recommit, except with special instructions, but the Chair will state to the gentleman from Washoe that there is no difficulty in reaching any amendment. For instance, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) may be adopted, or rejected; then a further amendment would be in order, and so on through the whole series, so that a test vote can be had on each amendment.

Mr. BANKS. That places the matter in a clear light. Now, I do most seriously hope that gentlemen who left California two, three, or four years ago, will not take it for granted that the law concerning matters of this kind, regulating the carrying on of business by women in their own names, which was then in force, is the same law which now exists in that State. I have frequently seen frauds committed in that State under that law, and they became so common as to lead men at last to favor the entire wiping out of that statute, on account of its unjust operation in so many instances. I have found that men sometimes act unphilosophically and are apt to judge hastily. But I do not remember that any attempts at repeal have been made at recent sessions of the Legislature of that State, or that at any time, after discussion, any considerable number of members of that Legislature have been in favor of the absolute repeal of the law, although all concurred in the opinion that it should be amended; and now they have a law enacted there which seems to be perfectly satisfactory. I hope that we shall leave our Legislature to pursue the same course which has been adopted in that State, and then they can secure whatever of advantage is derivable from the legislative enactments of California upon this subject, and perhaps avoid such faults as experience may point out.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope this Section 32 will be stricken out of our Constitution, and therefore

I am in favor of referring it to the committee, with instructions to strike it out. I beg to call the attention of gentlemen to this fact, that while we advocate this amendment, we are not asking for a section which shall compel the Legislature to pass a law authorizing women to become sole traders, but we merely ask that this prohibition may be stricken out, so that it may be possible for the Legislature to pass such a law, if in their wisdom they shall think it is best. Now, are gentlemen unwilling to leave this matter to the Legislature, for the experience and wisdom which is to be found hereafter in our State, to decide? I am surprised that gentlemen should object to such a proposition as that. For myself, I am decidedly in favor of the adoption of such a provision of law by the Legislature. My colleague (Mr. DeLong) says, in the name of justice he demands it; and I would go further than that and say, in the name of humanity I ask that such a provision shall be made by our Legislature. It would prevent a great number of divorcees, and attempts to obtain divorcees from miserable husbands, who are only a nuisance in the family relation. There are noble, struggling wives, who are willing to maintain such worthless husbands, if they can only themselves have the control of affairs, in such a manner that their husbands cannot get hold of and spend all their earnings in the manner which has been pointed out by my colleague. They are willing to bear the burden of worthless husbands, and struggle on in that way, if they can only have the privilege which should justly belong to them, of protecting their own property, in their own right.

Mr. WARWICK. As the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) has said, I too am in favor of striking out this prohibition from the Organic Act. I find a very general complaint, and with some considerable ground of justice, I believe, in the journals of the day, that there is an apparent design on the part of this Convention to supersede all further legislative action. Now, sir, the object of an organic law is simple and plain. It is not required in its provisions to supply every possible want that may arise in the future, but only to lay down simple and plain rules for the guidance and direction of future legislators, so that they may know exactly where to act, and where not to transgress. The subject under consideration is clearly not a proper one to be incorporated into an organic act, but it is directly and properly a subject of legislation, and therefore should have no place in the Constitution of the State. Neither do I consider this the proper place to advance arguments for or against the policy of such an enactment. If it were an act that might with propriety be passed by this body, then I would say that I am in favor of the provision allowing women to occupy the position of sole traders. Such a law, notwithstanding the hardships that some may encounter, notwithstanding the swindling that some may have perpetrated

BROSNAN—DUNNE—JOHNSON.

[July 13

under its cloak—I think ought to be placed upon our statute-book, because these evils are by no means commensurate with the benefits thereby conferred on that class of the community which has no means of self-protection, except the very law which is inhibited by the section we are now proposing to strike from the organic act of the State of Nevada. I have no desire to trench upon the time of the Convention, but I sincerely hope that this section may be stricken out, and the subject left for future legislative action.

Mr. BROSNAN. It affords me a great deal of pleasure to agree with the gentlemen who have preceded me, in their views, in regard to this subject. I do not propose to discuss the question now, for I have heretofore said all I desired to say in regard to it, but I am very much struck with the remarkable inconsistency of the arguments which have been presented by some gentlemen. In speaking upon other subjects properly belonging to the sphere of legislation just as much as this does, they were extremely strenuous that in such matters the Legislature should not be left free to act upon its own judgment and discretion, and yet they now complain that we are inserting here in this section a subject-matter which would be more appropriate to the halls of legislation. I would like to have gentlemen consistent in their votes upon these various subjects, and should accord more sincerity to their arguments if they had always been so.

Messrs. BANKS, FITCH, and WARWICK called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment proposed by Mr. DeLong.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote resulted—yeas, 24; nays, 6—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Frizell, Hawley, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, McLinton, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, and Warwick—24.

Nays—Messrs. Brosnan, Hovey, Kinkead, Mason, Wetherill, and Mr. President—6.

So the amendment was adopted.

The question was stated on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to refer the article, with instructions, as amended.

COUNTY AUDITORS.

Mr. DUNNE. I move, as a further instruction, to amend Section 33, by striking out after the words, "County Recorder," the words, "who shall be ex officio County Auditors," and inserting the same words after the words, "County Clerks," so as to read—

"The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people, of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, who shall be ex officio County Auditors, County Recorders, District Attorneys," etc.

I believe that the reason why this section reads as it now stands is, that it is copied from the California law, but the office of County Recorder in California is a very different one from what it is here. They have very little business there for a County Recorder to do, and that business regards principally the conveyance of ranches, etc.; but in this Territory the County Recorder has an immense amount of business. All the conveyances of mining ground are recorded in his office, and he often has all he can possibly do to attend to that matter. Then he is every day receiving requisitions for abstracts of title, which involve a great deal of labor. His office is therefore one of the most important offices in a county, and one which requires the greatest amount of labor. Now, the County Clerk, it strikes me, is the proper person for that position; at least that is the opinion in our county. He is more in communication with the Board of Supervisors, generally being the clerk of that Board, and it strikes me it would be better, at least in all the counties except Storey, perhaps, that the County Clerk should be ex officio County Auditor. If objection be made to having that rule established in Storey County, it can be provided, perhaps, in the Schedule, or Miscellaneous Provisions, that an exception shall be made in respect to that county, leaving the County Recorder to occupy the position there, if deemed necessary.

[Mr. DeLong in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I regret to be compelled to disagree with the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne,) but I do not think that he has considered the effect that this arrangement would have, in respect to some of the alterations proposed to be made in an important feature of this Constitution. Gentlemen are aware that we propose to establish a judicial system, which will be somewhat peculiar. Under this system, radical changes must necessarily be made in respect to the judicial districts. The County Clerk is, under existing laws, the Clerk of the County, or Probate Court, but under the system proposed, he will be ex officio Clerk of all the Courts which are created, except the Supreme Court.

Mr. DUNNE. Is not the gentleman aware that the County Clerk performs those duties by deputy?

Mr. JOHNSON. In some cases he does, it is true, but this change which is in contemplation, will largely increase the business of his office, in connection with the courts. As we increase the jurisdiction, we necessarily enhance the business of the courts, and we make the County Clerk ex officio clerk of a court embracing the jurisdiction of that which is now the District and the Probate Courts, thus multiplying his duties very considerably. And, judging from the intimations we have had from several members, the gentleman from Humboldt himself included, I conceive that the amount of business in the courts of the various counties is likely to be considerable. In Humboldt County the business of the Courts, as the gentleman himself informs us, is very great, and under the system we propose, it will certainly be very materially increased; and so will it be in other counties, although, possibly,

Wednesday.]

TOZER—CHAPIN—JOHNSON—STURTEVANT—DUNNE—BANKS.

[July 13.

there may be exceptions. In the county which I in part represent, we have now a County Clerk, and a Clerk of the District Court, separate and distinct from each other, each performing the legitimate duties of his own office. We have also a County Recorder, but the duties of that officer are comparatively trifling, as they are in most of the other counties of the Territory. As a general rule, the amount of the business of the Recorder is less, perhaps, than of any other county officer. Now, we propose in this judicial system, to devolve upon the County Clerks these increased duties, and the gentleman's amendment proposes, in addition to these duties, to require them to perform the duties, and to allow them to receive the emoluments of the County Auditors. I think it would be infinitely better to leave these duties to the County Recorders. What will be the effect of this amendment? Why, sir, the office of County Clerk will prove to be by far the most lucrative office provided for under this Constitution. I cannot now call to mind any other office which would be so lucrative, considering the nature of the duties to be performed, and the expenses incidental to the office, since we have decided to abolish the system of salaries and return to the old system of compensation by fees. I say, I know of no office, and I think there is no office, that will be so lucrative as that of the County Clerk, under the system which we are proposing. Now, sir, I am in favor of a fair division, not only of the duties and responsibilities, but of the emoluments of office, so far as we can make such a division; and I think it would be much better to leave this section as it is, than to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. TOZER. I do not see that we are adding to the emoluments of either the one or the other office, by adding to the duties of the County Clerk, the duties of the Auditor; because, under the provisions of the section, the office cannot be worth, in any event, over four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. CHAPIN. That has all been stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is another thing which has been suggested to me by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy,) namely: that the County Clerk, acting as County Auditor under that provision, would necessarily have to audit and pass upon his own accounts, and these would amount to a very considerable sum, as the experience and observation of all teaches us. As to the amount of business, we know that the Recorder has little or nothing to do involving accounts, other than those of which anybody can easily judge. I think that is of itself a very forcible reason why this amendment should not be made.

The question was taken on Mr. Dunne's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

SEPARATE PROPERTY OF THE WIFE.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend the instructions, by adding, that the committee be instructed to amend Section 31, by striking out the following language:—

"All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, demise, or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed, more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property, as to that held in common with her husband."

Also, to strike out the word "also," in the next line, so as to leave the section to read as follows:—

SEC. 31. Laws shall be passed, providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

Mr. DUNNE. Why not, just as well, strike out all the section? If you amend it in that way, you strike out the separate property of the wife altogether, and leave nothing for registration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then there is nothing left to be protected. By striking out the first part of the section, the wife has nothing which requires registration.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It would be left for the Legislature, supposing the wife did have property before her marriage, to provide for the registration of such property. My particular objection to the section as it stands is, that it makes it obligatory on the Legislature to provide for her separate property, in every case. For instance, if a rich widow marries some good fellow, according to this section, there must be a law setting her property apart separately, even if she does not desire it to be done. The law must declare that it shall be her separate property; and whether she is willing or not, or whether he is willing or not, makes no difference.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. BANKS. I propose the following amendment, which I have previously offered in Committee of the Whole. It was then lost by one vote, and I now submit it for consideration, in a fuller house. I move to instruct the committee to amend Section 20, by inserting after the words "public squares," the words, "granting franchises for toll-roads, toll-bridges, and street railroads."

I have not heretofore, in this Convention, offered any amendment which had once been rejected, and I do so now, simply for the reason that when this amendment was submitted before, it was voted down in a very thin house, by only one majority. I do not propose to repeat what I said on the former occasion, but I will add just this: that upon an examination of the statutes, and considering the proceedings of the last Legislature of this Territory, and the preceding ones, I am fully satisfied that this fact cannot be controverted, that if provision had been made by general laws, for doing what the numerous special laws which have been passed were designed to accomplish, we would have been saved more than one-half of the expenses of the Legislature. The same remark applies to the legislation of the State of California. I am desirous of guarding the future of this State against the enormous legislative expenses arising from the consideration of matters which can be much better provided for by general laws.

Mr. HOVEY. I wish to propose an amendment to the amendment, which will make it include all railroads. I move to insert the words "or other," between the words "street," and "railroad," so that the amendment will read—"granting franchises for toll-roads, toll-bridges, and street and other railroads."

The question was taken on Mr. Hovey's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks.

Mr. FITCH. I am opposed to this amendment. I do not want to detain the Convention by any argument upon it, but I will say it seems to me, that when propositions have been introduced into the Committee of the Whole, and after a fair, and even a protracted discussion, have been decided upon there, we should let them rest, and not afterwards bring the same propositions before the Convention, in order to fight our battles over again.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will occupy the attention of the Convention on this subject but a few moments, as I have heretofore expressed my views. I recognize the right of the Convention, by a subsequent vote, when a greater number of members may be present, to reverse the action it may have taken upon any question; and I do not deny the right of any member to make a motion for such purpose. Therefore, my objection to this amendment is not for reasons which the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) has just now submitted—that we have once had a vote upon the proposition, and therefore ought to regard it as settled—but I think, for reasons which I have already presented, that the amendment itself would be impolitic. Instances have arisen in the State of California, where it was found impossible for a general law to be practically useful in respect to public works or improvements, which extended through more than one county. Now, I would acquiesce in the support of this provision, if it were in its character inhibitory only of grants or charters, when the improvements contemplated were to be confined to one county; but it is impossible, and experience has demonstrated the impracticability of it, to incorporate a feature of that kind, in such a manner as to apply where those works of improvement are proposed to be extended through more than one county. For that reason, I hope that we shall not adopt this amendment. If it were proposed to embrace only works of that kind extending through a single county, then I should recognize the fact that the local authorities would be more capable of judging of the propriety of granting the franchises, and deciding to whom they should be granted, than the Legislature of the State could be; but the amendment does not take from the operation of the rule, those works of improvement that are important to the public welfare, where the interests to be subserved are not confined merely to the limits, or within the jurisdiction, of the local Legislatures, or Boards of Supervisors, or County Commissioners. Therefore, I say, such a provision might, and very often would, result in defeating the efforts of men to construct works of very great importance.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and the vote resulted—yeas, 12; nays, 18—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, Dumme, Earl, Hovey, Mason, Sturtevant, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—12.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, DeLong, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Hawley, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, McClinton, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, and Mr. President—18.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

COUNTY AUDITORS—AGAIN.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to instruct the committee to amend Section 3.

Mr. DUNNE moved to amend, so as also to instruct the committee to amend Section 33, by striking out the words, "who shall be ex-officio County Auditors," where they occur after the words "County Recorders," and inserting the same after the words "Public Administrators."

The Secretary read the section as it would stand if amended, as follows:—

"SEC. 33. The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people, of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, County Recorders, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, County Surveyors, and Public Administrators, who shall be ex-officio County Auditors, and other necessary officers," etc.

Mr. DUNNE. I make that modification for the purpose of relieving County Recorders from the duty of being also County Auditors. I wish to try it in another manner, because I think this is a matter of great importance. The Recorders have very laborious duties to perform, in the mining counties, and I insist that if the duties of the Auditors be left to them, they will be neglected, or, at least, not properly attended to. But the office of Public Administrator which is here provided for, is one with which but few duties are connected, and by adding to them the duties of the County Auditor, perhaps compensation enough can be given to enable that officer to perform the duties of both offices properly.

Mr. FRIZELL. I profess to be somewhat familiar with the county governments and the offices of the several counties. Heretofore, before so many of our mining claims were incorporated, the County Recorders did have a great deal to do. Probably that office in Storey County, a year and a half ago, was worth not less than fifty thousand dollars. I am told by good authority, that it was worth at least eighty thousand dollars a year, while at the present time, it scarcely requires the attention of one man to perform all the duties of the Recorder's office of Storey County, during the year. I know of no officer who is more responsible, or to whom the duties of this office of Auditor more properly belong, than to the County Recorder. It naturally falls to him, I think, under present circumstances, to perform those duties.

The question was taken on Mr. Dunne's amendment to the motion, and it was not agreed to.

PAY OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to propose an amendment, to strike out Section 34.

Mr. CROSMAN. Has not that section already been stricken out, or a portion of it?

The SECRETARY read Section 34, as heretofore amended.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will, with the leave of the Convention, withdraw my amendment, as that matter appears to have been already passed upon.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that that portion of Section 34, which provided that members of the Legislature shall receive eight dollars per day, etc., has been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT. It is contemplated to provide in the Schedule, for the compensation of the first Legislature, and thereafter the rate of compensation can be established by law. I understand it was not thought advisable to make that provision for the first Legislature, in the general frame-work of the Constitution, as it is merely a temporary matter.

THE HOMESTEAD.

Mr. CROSMAN. If amendments are still in order, I will move to instruct the committee to amend Section 30, by reinstating the language in the beginning of that section which has heretofore been stricken out, so that it will read as in the printed section. The amendment was, to strike out the words specifying the extent of the homestead to be exempted—"Not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land, outside of the limits of a town or city, or not exceeding one acre within the limits of any town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, of the aggregate value of five thousand dollars,"—and to insert instead the words "as provided by law." My motion now is, to instruct the committee to strike out the words which were inserted, and to reinstate the language in the original section.

The question was stated on Mr. Crosman's motion.

Mr. WARWICK. Now, Mr. President, when the motion was made the other day, by the honorable gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy,) to strike out that language, no opportunity was offered for argument. I then considered that there had been no action taken by this Convention, from the first moment we assembled here up to that time, that was so utterly ill-advised, or calculated to be so lamentable in its effects. That gentleman, sir, has yet to feel what it is to have children growing up around him—what it is to rest beneath the family roof-tree, or to rear that sacred structure, whether it be great or humble, to which we all look as a shelter and a home. It may be, sir, that not in the present, but only in the past, that gentleman realizes what "home" means. It may be that he has never heard the voices of his own little ones, or of his wife, and therefore he fails to understand that feeling which we who have reared our family roof-trees in this distant land do all experience, when we have our wives and little ones around us.

This provision, as it was originally incorporated in our organic law, I regard as being one of the most wise and beneficent features of modern legislation. It is a feature which has been incorporated into the organic law of every State of the Union which has framed or remodelled its Constitution during the last ten years; and it is one which, by legislative action, has been incorporated into the laws of every State and Territory, in the loyal portion, at least, of the American Union. Sir, I never was more astonished in my life, than when I witnessed the action of this Convention the other day—action taken on the spur of the moment, without thought—by which this provision, which I consider, as I have said, one of the wisest features of modern legislation, was stricken out from the organic law of our future State. What was the occasion of that action, sir? Gentlemen may tell you that the amount of the exemption here proposed may prove in the future to be too large, or that it may not be enough, and that therefore it is a proper subject for legislation. That may be, or it may not be so. But still I say, whether it be too much, or whether it be too little, is not a question here. We propose to fix a bond, and say that here the wife and the children shall be secure, in every contingency; that if the husband, by his industry, has accumulated enough for a home, to the value of five thousand dollars, or less, that home shall be sacred to the wife and the children. Can the gentleman estimate the amount of hardship that would ensue, if the Legislature, acting as ill-advisedly as this Convention did, on the spur of the moment the other day, should strike out this provision altogether, from our laws, and should thus throw the wife and children of every debtor upon the mercy of heartless creditors, or leave them at the mercy, if you please, of a dissipated husband?

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman from Lander allow me to ask him a question? I am misinformed if the fact is, as the gentleman states, that the Convention struck this provision out. I am informed that the action of the Convention was merely to strike out the value of the homestead, leaving it to the Legislature to fix that value.

Wednesday.]

WARWICK—BANKS—JOHNSON.

[July 13.]

Mr. WARWICK. That is the point I am arguing, that the false step taken was the striking out of the value of the homestead.

Mr. BANKS. The proposition now is to reinstate that limit.

Mr. WARWICK. That is the very point; I am in favor of reinstating it. The other day, when action was taken on this subject, there was no opportunity for argument, and nothing was said as to why it should, or why it should not be stricken out. I am in favor of the reinstatement of this limitation of the value of the homestead. I want this provision as a protection to the wives and children in this Territory. If the industry of the husband has accumulated sufficient for a home, and he has afterwards become dissipated, I still wish to say that the wife and children shall retain a rallying place, which shall be entitled to the sacred name of home, and of which no action of the husband and father can deprive them. If there could be any good reason shown why this provision should be left out, or why the subject should be left to the uncertain action of future legislatures, then I might be in favor of the proposition to strike it out, which was carried the other day, with little or no argument upon it, one way or the other. The moment the motion was made, if I recollect rightly, the question was taken, debate being cut off, and I think there was no argument whatever upon the question. I hope, therefore, that this section will be left precisely as it was adopted by the former Convention.

Mr. JOHNSON. When this subject was under consideration before, I gave notice that I would, at a proper time, move to reinstate the matter which was then stricken out. As the gentleman from Lander states, the matter was then presented to the Convention, in the shape of a motion to strike out, and very hasty action was had upon that motion. As far as I was concerned, I had no opportunity of even examining the section, to see what would be the effect of striking out that portion of it; and it was in consideration of the fact that I did not understand the effect of that hasty action of the Convention that I gave the notice I did. At a subsequent time I examined the section, with this portion stricken out, and I became satisfied, as I am now, that this section is in an infinitely better position for the protection of those wives and children to whom the gentleman from Lander refers, than it would be if we were to incorporate the words which have been stricken out. And, entertaining that opinion, I have said to the gentleman who was the mover of the amendment that I did not intend to make the motion to reinstate, of which I had given notice.

Now, I do not object to the premises advanced in the argument of the gentleman from Lander, because I agree with him in every word; but it is the conclusion at which he arrives wherein we differ. I can foresee none of the evils of which he speaks as likely to arise from the amendment which has been made, but I do believe that very injurious results would follow from the restoration of those words which have been stricken out of the section. Gentlemen full well understand that the matter of currency is fluctuating—that the price of “greenbacks,” to use a familiar and well-understood term, varies from time to time. How much is a homestead, worth five thousand dollars in “currency,” going to benefit that family, or the wife and children, of which the gentleman so eloquently discourses? Why, sir, when this section was incorporated into the old Constitution, greenbacks were worth probably ninety, and certainly not less than eighty-five cents on the dollar, and a homestead amounting in value then to five thousand dollars, was worth nearly five thousand dollars; while to-day, a homestead valued only at that amount in currency, would scarcely be worth more than two thousand dollars in gold. As I understand it, it was the desire to obviate the evils which are likely to flow from these changes of value in the currency, that prompted the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) to make the motion to strike out that portion of the section. At any rate, whether that was or was not the motive which prompted the motion to strike out, it is the motive which now determines me to keep that language out, and to oppose the motion to restore it.

And here is another point: we have now a homestead law in our territorial statutes, which fixes the value of the homestead at five thousand dollars, and we propose to provide in this Constitution that the laws in force in the Territory shall be continued, except so far as they may conflict with the Constitution, until they shall be repealed or altered by the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. (Mr. DeLong in the Chair.) Will the gentleman pause a moment? I observe that Ex-Governor Stanford of California is in the lobby, and I invite him to walk inside the bar, and take a seat.

The Honorable LELAND STANFORD came within the bar, and was provided with a seat.

Mr. JOHNSON (continuing.) We have protection, therefore, for the wife and children, so far as the laws apply, until such time as the Legislature may deem it proper to specify a greater sum as the limit of the value of the homestead, which they would probably do in the event of the continued depreciation of the value of the currency. I think ample protection is afforded—that all that is essential is retained in the section, to effectively protect such rights as ought to be protected. For these reasons, I hope the amendment will not prevail, and that the section will be left as it is now, giving the Legislature power to make laws carrying out this intent in such manner as they may deem just and proper.

Wednesday,] KENNEDY—FITCH—WARWICK—PRESIDENT—DELONG—TOZER—CROSMAN. [July 13.

Mr. KENNEDY. I did not desire to make any argument upon this question, but since the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) has attributed rather reprehensible motives to me, on account of my action in this matter, I wish briefly to explain my views. I do not want to legislate against any man's wife or children, but my objection is to stating in the Constitution the size and value of the homestead, so that it cannot be altered, under any circumstances that may arise. I am entirely willing that the Legislature shall provide a homestead of some kind, and I would leave it to the representatives of the people to alter or change the extent and value of such homestead, from time to time. Now, the gentleman contends, as I understand him, that by hasty action, the Legislature may repeal the homestead law; but most certainly they cannot do it under this provision. They must provide a homestead law which can be made available by every family.

Mr. FITCH. I am somewhat amused at the erratic course of my friend from Lander (Mr. Warwick) in regard to this subject of legislation. He favors the striking out of a provision which does not please him, because he says he is not in favor of legislation in the Constitution, and he appeals to members not to legislate; but when another provision comes up, which does please him, then he is in favor of legislation, and opposed to trusting the important matter to the future uncertain action of the Legislature. I suggest that for the sake of consistency, the gentleman had better confine himself to one side or the other exclusively, and either be for or against legislating in the Constitution, all the time.

Mr. WARWICK. With all due deference to the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) I would say, Mr. President, that undoubtedly, of all the members of the Convention, he is the last one who ought to speak of consistency. It is a word with which he is not at all acquainted, the meaning of which he has never studied, and he is not qualified to judge in regard to it. Therefore I submit to the Chair that he is entirely out of order in rising to any question upon the word "consistency."

Mr. FITCH. I accept the gentleman's apology. [Merriment.]

The hour for recess having arrived,

The PRESIDENT pro tem. declared the Convention at recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT—THE HOMESTEAD.

The PRESIDENT. The question before the Convention is the motion by the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman,) to instruct the special committee to amend Section 30, of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, by inserting the language heretofore stricken out, limiting the extent and value of the homestead.

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a question of order. Under Jefferson's Manual, this amendment is not in order, because, although it is proper to commit the article to amend a part of it, yet, this amendment is not an amendment to the original motion to recommit, but relates to a different section. I think we had better consider this article, one section at a time, and not compel any member to vote for an amendment which he does not like, in order to carry an amendment which he does like.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the point of order. A motion to recommit the article, with instructions, was made by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and following that, the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) offered, as an independent proposition, a motion to recommit another section, with instructions. That, the Chair decided was not in order, unless it was to be regarded as an amendment. So far, the Chair doubtless was correct; but I am now satisfied that I was wrong in not ruling out the amendment on the further ground that it did not amend the same section as that to which the gentleman from Humboldt had offered his amendment. It should not have been held in order until action had been taken on the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt. Hereafter, the Chair will hold that no amendment is in order upon a motion to recommit, unless it amends the same section to which the original motion applies. The effect of the course we have been pursuing might, as the gentleman from Storey has suggested, be this: that by the adoption of numerous amendments to different sections, the minority on the distinct question of recommitting for any specific amendment, might become the majority. The only proper method is, I think, to take the vote separately upon each proposition. The amendment to Section 30 is therefore not before the Convention.

Mr. TOZER. Then I move to recommit Section 30, with special instructions to make the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order, for the reasons already stated.

Mr. CROSMAN. Certain motions were made to amend other sections, some of which were adopted. Among them, I remember an amendment was offered to Section 32, which prevailed. Now, I ask, under the ruling of the Chair, what is the position of that section?

The PRESIDENT. It is of course somewhat irregular, the question having been improperly taken, but the Chair will hold that that section has been recommitment to the special committee, with instructions to strike it out, such having, in fact, been the action of the Convention.

Wednesday.]

PRESIDENT—KENNEDY—DUNNE—BANKS—BROSNAN—TOZER.

[July 13.]

DAY OF ELECTION.

The question was stated to be upon the motion of Mr. Dunne, to recommit article IV to a special committee, with instructions to amend Section 3, by striking out the words, "Tuesday next after the first Monday in November," and inserting the words "first Wednesday in September"; and also, by adding to the section the words, "except as hereinafter provided"; so that the section would read:—

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the first Wednesday in September, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election, except as hereinafter provided.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that no motion to amend this motion is in order, unless it proposes to amend the same section.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will ask for a division of the question, because I would like to vote for one part of the amendment, and against another part.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman has an undoubted right to call for a division of the question. The question will first be on striking out the words "Tuesday next after the first Monday in November," and inserting "first Wednesday in September"; and next, upon adding the words "except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask to have the vote taken first on the motion to strike out and insert, and in fact I have that portion now marked as adopted, in my copy.

The PRESIDENT. It was once stricken out, but afterwards, the vote was reconsidered.

Mr. DUNNE. The Convention yesterday adopted that amendment, and now, if it is proposed to change that action, I, for one, want to know some reason for it. Why should we now undo what we did yesterday?

Ms. BANKS. If the gentleman desires reasons for allowing the section to remain as we find it in the old Constitution, I can very briefly express my reasons for voting against his amendment. One reason is, that as it stands now, the election will come on the day of the Presidential election. Those who desire to have the section remain as it is in this printed copy, want the election to come every year on the day corresponding with the day of the Presidential election, and undoubtedly, if there are not good reasons for selecting some other day, the gentleman will concede that that is the proper day. At all events, he will concede that it is the proper day, in the year of the Presidential election; and if it is right once in four years, I insist, as a matter of regularity, that it should come on the same day in other years.

Now what reason does my colleague assign for making this change? He says that on account of climate, and some other reasons which I forget, that it is not so convenient to conduct an election canvass in the month of November, as in September. And another reason which he urged, I remember now, was, that at the earlier period, our population was likely to be larger than in the month of November. But I think, for all practical purposes, November will be the better time, because, during September, a large proportion of our population, as our society is now constituted, are roaming over the hills, engaged in prospecting, and consequently are not where they would be allowed to vote. More of them will be at home, I venture to say, in November, than in September. The argument, therefore, is not a valid one, that our vote will not be as large in November, as in September. Again, the gentleman's argument in regard to the time of making the canvass has no weight, because men will be more busy in September, and there will be less time for conducting the canvass, than if the election be in November. I hope we shall have the vote every year in November, and hence, I shall vote against any change.

Mr. DUNNE [in his seat.] I guess the Convention generally thinks the same way, and I will not make a speech.

The question was taken on the motion to instruct the committee to strike out and insert, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the latter part of the motion, instructing the committee to amend by adding the words, "except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. BROSNAN. It seems to me, at the present time, that that is not necessary, because it was only put in in view of a special provision to be made in the Schedule.

Mr. DUNNE. There is no necessity for it, and I will withdraw it.

THE HOMESTEAD.

Mr. TOZER. Now I move to recommit Section 30, of Article IV, to a special committee of three, with instructions to amend, by striking out the section as printed, and inserting the following:—

SEC. 30. The Legislature shall provide by law for exempting from forced sale, under any process of law, a homestead for families, which shall not be alienated without the joint consent of both husband and wife, when the relationship exists, and which, when acquired, shall not be of a value exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars; and which, to become thus exempt from sale as a homestead, shall be specifically described and set forth in a written declaration, by the claimant, acknowledged by him or her, and recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the county in which the same is situated; but no property shall be exempt by law from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife.

The PRESIDENT. It will be remembered, I suppose, that the previous action of the Convention will be regarded as in order, so far as relates to the amendment which was adopted by the Convention in reference to the sole-trader act.

Wednesday.]

DELONG.

[July 13.

Mr. DELONG. That is understood.

The question was stated on Mr. Tozer's amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I sincerely trust that the substitute offered by my colleague for this section, will be adopted. If the Convention will bear with me a moment or two, I will give the reasons why I am in favor of its adoption. They are not reasons born of a moment, or which have been conceived at the present time, merely in consequence of conversation with other men on this subject; but I have thought of this matter for years. I remember that once, in a conversation which I had with Judge Field, of California, the question arose as to the nature of the homestead law of that State, and Judge Field then advanced some ideas, which struck me as being extremely forcible, in relation to that law as it existed in California; and they apply, with peculiar appropriateness, to our own case, because, by this printed section here, we are following, almost exactly, in the track of the California Constitution; and our own courts would construe the provision in the same way as the courts of California have construed the Constitution of that State. In California, a man is allowed to hold property, not to exceed five thousand dollars, as a homestead; but if that property becomes worth more than five thousand dollars, it is subject to levy and sale, as a whole; it may not be divided. In that case, the whole is sold, and five thousand dollars of the proceeds is paid over to the judgment debtor; and thus is presented the extraordinary phenomenon of a man having a homestead of five thousand dollars, all in twenty dollar pieces, in his pocket. Then, perhaps, he goes and buys five thousand dollars worth of goods, or, if he prefers, he lays it out in flour, and then he has a homestead consisting of five thousand dollars worth of flour. How ridiculous that appears, and how contrary it undoubtedly is to the intention of those who framed that Constitution! The man may expend his money, if he pleases, in the purchase of a drove of hogs, and then he will have a homestead consisting of five thousand dollars worth of hogs. [Laughter.] That is the view which Judge Field presented of the matter. It is entirely contrary to the plain intention of those who framed that organic act; but in what respect does our action differ from that, at the present time?

The idea of a homestead law is, not merely to exempt so much property by law from execution and forced sale—if that were the case, we need not exempt a homestead at all; we might say directly, five thousand dollars worth of property should be exempt, no matter what it is—but the idea is one which is founded upon the old English maxim, that every man's house is his castle—that it is his sanctuary and retreat from all the cares of life, and all the persecutions which the world can bring against him. That is what is intended, and we ought to frame our Constitution in such a manner as to carry out that view; allowing the homestead law merely to protect that asylum against the execution of creditors. Now, sir, if we adopt the section as it stands in this printed Constitution, what is the result? No matter whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) prevails, or the original section stands, it makes no difference in that regard, for whether you do the one thing or the other, you still leave the Legislature to prescribe the value of the homestead. Suppose the Legislature to fix the maximum value at five thousand dollars, or a thousand dollars, or any other sum you please to mention; then the head of the family, having recorded his homestead, enters upon the enlargement and improvement of his house and home. It is then worth the sum specified by the Legislature in the statute, and as a consequence, it is exempt by law from execution. But mark you the results that may follow. Perhaps the man, having a family, and being thus situated, happens to be a man of culture and taste, and a man of industry. In that case, he employs his leisure time in beautifying that home, which is the retreat of his family, and the spot above all others dear to his heart; and as he finds time from day to day, he plants a shrub here, and a flower there. To-day a tree is planted, and to-morrow an ornamental paling is put up, and so on, until finally his home becomes full of attractions. He makes it an object to be coveted by his rich neighbors, or by some malicious enemy, and, sir, the very moment that that neighbor of his, or that enemy, may be willing to give a single dollar for that homestead more than the sum specified by the statute as its value, that moment the man is turned out of doors, with the money in his pocket, it is true, but with no home to go to.

That is the result of the homestead law under the present Constitution of the State of California. It is entirely erroneous in policy, and wrong in principle. I say we should fix the limit in the start. We should say that when a man takes his homestead, it shall be worth no more than five thousand dollars. Then we do not give a man a chance to make a big fortune, and swindle his creditors, by placing all his property in his homestead. If he commences at that figure, and files his declaration, he will not obtain credit upon that property which he has set apart as his homestead. He gives notice to the world by the act of recording his homestead, that that property cannot be touched to pay his debts, and then nobody is defrauded. Nobody can lose a dollar by it, because every business man will understand that that homestead is no basis upon which he can give the man credit, and if he owns nothing aside from that, he has no basis upon which to obtain credit except his honor. Then, too, such a man can go on with that feeling of security and pride which the head of a family likes to enjoy in his domestic affairs, to beautify and adorn his home. He can do so with a full consciousness that no trick of the law, no covetousness of his neighbor, can take from him that household altar, after he has prepared it as the place where he expects to live and die, and where his wife and children are to reside when he has gone from them.

I would like to see the idea of the homestead carried out in that way, and the amendment offered by my colleague meets that point precisely. It does not afford any opportunity for swindling, but after the man has fixed upon the spot of earth where he intends to dwell, and where he proposes to rear his family, it secures that place to him for all time to come. Is not that the true construction, the intention and meaning of the homestead act? Not to give a man five thousand dollars in money, or five thousand dollars in hogs, or five thousand dollars in flour; not to allow him, if you are his creditor, to walk by you in the street with five thousand dollars in his pocket, which you cannot touch; but to make sacred and secure the household and roof-tree. The moment he converts that homestead into coin, by the joint consent of husband and wife, that moment the property becomes liable for his debts, but so long as it remains a home, the asylum of the family, let it be inviolable forever.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask a question or two in regard to this amendment. Does it contain a restriction equal to this—that one hundred and sixty acres of land outside of a town or city, or one acre of land within the limits of a town or city, shall be exempt?

Mr. DELONG. Nothing of the sort. It starts in, not by saying how much land in town, or city, or county, shall be exempt, but it says that when it is claimed as a homestead originally, it shall not exceed in value five thousand dollars. That is the limit in the start, and after that, after it is properly secured and recorded, no matter how much it becomes worth, it is still his homestead, and cannot be taken from him.

Mr. BANKS. I fully agree with the gentleman in regard to the nature of the homestead, and the manner in which it should be regarded in legislation. I believe it should be regarded as a place sacred for the home. But my objection to this proposed proviso is this, that it does not limit the amount of land which may be contained in the homestead, and hence I desire to see incorporated in it these words:—

"Said homestead, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land outside of the limits of a town or city, or not exceeding one acre within the limits of any town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same."

These words will be found in Section 30, as here printed, and I offer them as an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer.)

The object of this amendment, I think, will be apparent to gentlemen. It is proposed to prevent a man who is about to fail, from speculating in lands which he presumes will rise in value. A man might buy, in a flourishing town, or in an agricultural district, a large amount of land, and set it apart as a homestead so as to be beyond the reach of his creditors, and in a few years he might thus become a millionaire, although still keeping his property out of the hands of his creditors. We do not desire to enable a man to acquire and hold any more than will suffice for a legitimate homestead.

Mr. DELONG. Inasmuch as the gentleman's proposed amendment does not conflict with my theory of what a homestead should be, I have not much objection to it. But then I fail to perceive much of logic in the argument. It strikes me that when the limit is fixed at five thousand dollars at the time when the homestead is entered—when we consent to incorporate that saving clause—it ought to satisfy every man. It may be that I might claim a lot in a village worth not more than a thousand dollars. Then I file my declaration, claiming it as a homestead, yet from the growth of the city, the necessity of laying out new streets, or something of the kind, or a change perhaps of the locality of the principal business of that village or city, my property, which was only worth when I bought it one, two, or three thousand dollars, might suddenly become very valuable, like lots in the city of New York which have been known to rise in value to fifty or a hundred thousand dollars. There might be cases where such a thing would occur, I admit, but when it does occur, who is injured by it? I cannot see that any one is. Nobody has given that man credit on the strength of that property because they knew they could not levy upon it and sell it to pay his debts, even if it went up to a hundred thousand dollars. I shall not object, however, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, although I think that a man should have as much right to enter a thousand acres of land in the country at a dollar an acre as another man has to enter an acre in a village worth a thousand dollars—just as much right to set it apart as a homestead. It seems to me that all men should be put on an equality in that respect, whether in town or country. And suppose the land set apart as a homestead does rise in value, who is injured by it? I do not see that any one is. But still, I say, it does not interfere with my general theory in regard to the home. It certainly would be an injury to a man, if the moment his homestead comes to be worth above five thousand dollars, it is liable to be sold, and he turned out homeless into the world, and it would be a much great hardship if the widow and children were liable to be turned out in the same manner.

Mr. COLLINS. Do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt is designed to exempt as a homestead one hundred and sixty acres of land in the country, or one acre in a city, irrespective of the value of the land?

Mr. DELONG. No sir. That is qualified by the balance of the section. It can only be worth five thousand dollars when it is recorded, whatever may be the extent.

Mr. COLLINS. If that is the construction of the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, I do not know that I have any opposition to make to it, but I would like to say a few words in relation to the amendment of my colleague from Storey, (Mr. Tozer.) With all that my other colleague (Mr. DeLong) has said in reference to the sacredness of the homestead, I cordially agree. I do think that this idea of the homestead is one of the sublimest ideas of our age. It is a principle which has sought form and shape, and come like an angel of mercy to hover over and bless the families of our nation. And I do think that, while we are engaged in framing an organic law for the government of this State, it becomes us to look well to every amendment or change we make, and therefore we ought carefully to consider whether or not this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey is preferable to the original section, as contained in the printed Constitution adopted by the Convention of last year.

Now, sir, every law is good just in proportion as it conspires in its operation to awaken and develop sentiments of truth and justice, and to inspire fair dealing between man and man; and every law is bad just in proportion as it promotes or awakens a spirit of avarice and dishonesty, or in its operation tends to produce distrust, deceit, unfair dealing and dishonesty. When the amount proposed to be exempted under the homestead law is defined and fixed, whether it be one thousand, five thousand, or ten thousand dollars, when there is a declaration of a fixed amount, as the extent to which an individual may invest, then he knows that beyond that amount it is dangerous for him to invest. If, on the other hand, the individual may be allowed, under the operation of this homestead provision, to invest a thousand dollars, or five, ten, twenty, thirty, or a hundred thousand dollars, if he pleases, if there is no fixed limit to the amount of his investments, it appears to me that there will be an influence calculated to arouse in his bosom a spirit of avarice and cupidity. It will be an intimation to the man who is on the verge of failure, when his prospects look dull and gloomy, when a cloud hangs over his future, which will lead him to say to himself—"I will put an additional investment here, and an additional investment there, and I will add to my homestead so as to better my condition at the expense of my creditors, and I will bury my money here, so that my creditors cannot reach it."

Mr. DELONG. I think the gentleman misunderstands the amendment. It says distinctly that the homestead shall not be worth, at the time of its acquisition, more than five thousand dollars.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand that. But when the shadow hangs over a man, when there is darkness, and danger of disaster and destruction, then the time comes when he is seized with the desire to save something from the prospective wreck; and instead of paying his creditors, will he not be greatly tempted, under such a provision, to make improvements in his homestead, and to expend whatever money he can in that way? His homestead may be worth but a thousand dollars when he sets it apart as a homestead, yet by the exercise of genius, taste and skill, and the expenditure of money, he may be able to throw improvements around the home of his family which may increase its value perhaps from a thousand to a hundred thousand dollars. I think five thousand dollars is a large enough amount to secure to a man whose creditors are honestly entitled to their pay. I am well aware that, as my colleague says, there is an advertisement to all the world that whatever improvements he makes are for the benefit of the family home alone; but, nevertheless, I fear that there would be a lurking temptation which would conspire to induce a man to take dishonest action, and to divert that money which should be applied sacredly to the payment of his creditors, to the embellishment of his own household arrangements. If this view is not a well founded one, if the provision will not really operate in that way, I should be most happy to support the amendment of my colleague, for I do maintain that if one thing should be made more sacred than another, it should be a man's home, where his family is congregated.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him. In the State of Wisconsin a law has been passed enabling a man to set apart a homestead of an acre of ground in a city, and the result of it was seen at the time of the crash in 1848, when men who were on the point of failing claimed homesteads worth fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, and built themselves elegant houses, in which they lived in spite of their creditors.

Mr. Mr. DELONG. They could do that under this original section.

Mr. FITCH. They could under this amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I think not.

Mr. COLLINS. It occurs to me that there is, under this proposed amendment, a temptation to dishonesty, because there is no limit to the exercise of a man's taste and skill in the way of improvements and adornment. I may be mistaken in regard to my construction of the amendment, but if so, I think I must be very stupid.

The PRESIDENT. Will the gentleman let the Secretary read the amendment again; it may save time.

The SECRETARY again read Mr. Tozer's amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. I think I am correct, and I have listened twice to the reading of that amendment, and with great attention.

Wednesday.]

PRESIDENT—DELONG—COLLINS—CHAPIN—TOZER.

[July 13.]

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Storey will pardon the interruption. He has a right to draw his own conclusions, but as he came to a different conclusion from my own, I thought he might have misunderstood the amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Does the President still think I am wrong?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot say that, though I may say it as a member of the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. Is that fishing for an opinion?

Mr. COLLINS. I certainly think that, according to the reading of the amendment, the quantity of land which may be set apart for a homestead is unlimited. It may be one acre, or twenty acres, or one hundred and sixty acres. And I see nothing that forbids a man's making any embellishments in his homestead he chooses to make. I ask, therefore, if the tendency will not naturally be that when a man finds himself on the verge of bankruptcy, whether as a merchant, a banker, a stock-broker, or in any other business, he will be induced to invest in his homestead, and put embellishments and improvements upon it, to the value, perhaps, of thousands, or even of tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars? That action would not conflict in the least, that I can perceive, with either the letter or the spirit of the homestead provision. Men, having the ordinary frailties and weaknesses of human nature, will yield to such temptations, and I ask if we shall adopt provisions which in their operation must conspire to make honest men dishonest? I would prefer to double the amount. Fix the maximum value of the homestead, if you please at ten thousand dollars, giving a man an opportunity to make expenditures to that amount for all those matters which gratify his taste or his genius, but do not offer him, while he owes honest debts, and while his creditors are suffering, an opportunity to defraud them by investing his money in that manner. A man's creditors might be suffering, and their wives and children in want, while the debtor, availing himself of this provision, might be rolling in wealth and luxury. If gentlemen can answer these objections, and make it clear to my mind that there is nothing lurking in that amendment which will tend to make men dishonest, and to rob their creditors of that to which they are justly entitled, I shall be most happy to support the amendment.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have two objections to this amendment, the first of which has not yet been alluded to, although the second has been very ably discussed by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) who has just taken his seat. The first objection I have is, that the amendment does not make ample provision for the family. It says that the homestead—their castle, their refuge—shall not exceed five thousand dollars in value, and at the present time, in our national currency, that would be equal in coin to only about two thousand dollars, and in two months from this time it may be it would not amount to a thousand dollars. I object to the amendment, therefore, on the ground that the amount is not sufficient. It seems to me that we ought to specify a much larger amount.

Mr. COLLINS. Does the amendment fix any amount at all?

The PRESIDENT. It specifies five thousand dollars as the maximum value at the time the homestead is set apart.

Mr. CHAPIN. Well, sir, that does not afford the protection which we ought to extend to the family in our State. I would not place the amount less than five thousand dollars in gold currency, and I would like to see an amendment made in that particular. On the other hand, the matter is left open by this amendment to great evils. As my colleague has stated, there is too much liability to fraud. There is no provision, as I understand, limiting the amount of improvements. Having once set apart the homestead, a man may put on improvements indefinitely, and in that way commit frauds to a great extent. Therefore, if that is the spirit of the amendment, I do not approve of it. In the first place, I am in favor of putting in a liberal amount, and then of establishing a limit in regard to improvements, so that frauds cannot be perpetrated.

Mr. TOZER. I rise to claim the privilege of replying to the objections offered by my colleague (Mr. Chapin) to the instructions proposed by me to be given to the committee. The first objection he urges is, that this amendment should specify the value of five thousand dollars, in gold coin. I most sincerely believe, hope and trust, that the time is not far distant when the legal tender notes of the National Government will be equal in value to gold coin, and I do not think it comes with good grace from us to provide in our Constitution for the present disparagement of our national currency or for a prospective difference between the value of gold coin and the value of the treasury notes of the Government. Let us set the value at five thousand dollars, and trust that that five thousand dollars, at a subsequent day, whether in legal tender notes or in gold coin, will be equal in value. I think that a careful reading of the amendment and substitute which I have offered, will do away with the other objection of my colleague. It expressly provides that the value of the homestead, when acquired, shall not exceed five thousand dollars.

I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks,) and will, at the suggestion of my colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) at this time, accept it. The amendment, as offered by myself, expressly provides that the improvements in the shape of fences, ornaments, and shrubbery, or anything else which goes to add value to the premises, shall not be exempted from execution, but the property itself, the land upon which the improvements may be put, shall be exempt.

Wednesday.]

PRESIDENT—TOZER—COLLINS—DELONG.

[July 13.

The PRESIDENT. If the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion, I think he is mistaken in his construction. I think the gentleman's amendment provides that those improvements shall not be exempt from execution for indebtedness contracted in making such improvements, but they are exempted so far as it relates to general indebtedness. The language is—"or for the erection of improvements thereon"; it provides only that the homestead may be liable for the indebtedness contracted for the improvements.

Mr. TOZER. It should be amended in that respect, then, and I hope it will be.

Mr. COLLINS. I should be in favor of it, then.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to say a word or two in reply to the remarks of my colleague (Mr. Collins). That gentleman states as an objection to the substitute proposed by my colleague (Mr. Tozer) what is to be said of any human law ever enacted on earth, and that is, that it is subject to abuse. The very law which the gentleman has suggested in the place of this, is also subject to abuse, and I will show him in what particular. It is very difficult to make a law by which, if you owe me a thousand dollars, and have a thousand dollars in your pocket, I shall be enabled to collect my due from you, and that is not done under the particular homestead law which these gentlemen desire to see established. They say if we limit the value of the homestead to ten thousand dollars, including all the improvements, they will vote for it. But what would be the consequence? My homestead will sell, say for eleven thousand dollars, and out of that amount, ten thousand dollars in gold comes to me, under a law of this kind, and I then walk through the streets of Carson with my ten thousand dollars. I have got my homestead in my breeches pocket, where you cannot touch it. I say, therefore, that that law can be abused, and every law on earth is liable to be abused by bad men. Under the operation of this amendment, some man, it is true, finding that he is about to fail in business, may wish to secure to himself an elegant home, if nothing else, and may invest his money in beautifying and adorning his homestead, prior to his failure, so that he may have something left when he does fail; but where there is one case of that kind, there will be a thousand cases where the home will be secured to the family, and they be made happy by retaining that little spot of earth which is always sacred to the human heart. The birth-place of the children would be left to them, and the family could still live in the home hallowed by the associations of the past.

Again, my colleague tells us that a man in good and prosperous circumstances, believing that he is about to fail, might, with the intention of defrauding his creditors, invest a large amount of money in his homestead; in other words, that he could put into the homestead the money which is due to his creditors, and that he could continue to do so until he should have reared a palace, and that palace would be exempted by law, under the operation of this proposed section, from the payment of his debts. But does the gentleman remember the old rule of the law, that fraud vitiates everything? Does not he know that the homestead exemption would be set aside when it should be shown that it had been acquired in fraud of the creditors? A man may make a deed of gift of all the property he owns in the world, conveying it to his wife and children, and the law rather encourages a proceeding of that character; but if he does it when he is in failing circumstances, with the purpose of securing his property from the grasp of his creditors, the law then steps in and vitiates and annuls the act, and says the property must be applied to the payment of the man's debts. And so it will be in the practical operation of this provision, and in this particular, under the rule of the law it is not alone.

I say again, that this idea of the practical operation of the present homestead law was impressed upon my mind by one of the ablest jurists on the Pacific coast—Judge Field, of California. We argued the matter over, and I raised the same objections which have been presented here, and the conclusions at which I arrived, and which I have now stated in this Convention, are in accordance with the views which Judge Field advanced to me on that occasion. I do not, therefore, claim any originality for this idea, but I do claim that this homestead law, proposed by my colleague's amendment, is not a bit more subject to abuse than would be the law which my other colleague (Mr. Collins) desires to see established. Then, again, the results practically, would not only be more humane, but decidedly more in consonance with the original object and design of a homestead law, which is to give to every man security for his castle—for his home—to assure him that the place where his children have been born, shall not, in any event, be taken away from him—to give him an opportunity to go on, without any fear that his little place will at last be stripped from him, to make all those little adornments which are so dear to his heart. If he plants a tree, and watches its growth and development, he is saved from the feeling that it may, after all, be taken from him, and that he is only doing it for the benefit of a stranger. If a man goes into business and fails, the law says that his homestead shall not be sold for his debts. This amendment says that the improvements may be sold, to pay for any expenses incurred in making such improvements, but the land which is improved, cannot be sold. A man cannot borrow money to improve his homestead, and expend it in that way, without the homestead itself becoming liable. The proposition is just the same as the homestead law of California, with the single exception that if the homestead increases in value beyond the price fixed by the statute

Wednesday.]

WARWICK—STANFORD.

[July 13.]

after a man has entered it, it shall not for that reason be snatched away from him. If it happens that a man's homestead increases to ten thousand dollars in price, then we say, not that it may be sold, as under the laws of California, and he may take his money and go into the mercantile business, or any other business, but that he must continue to hold it, if at all, as the asylum of his family; and if he does that, he shall retain his homestead still.

Now, sir, I do not say that our law is not going to be abused; but I will say this, that I do not believe that any man in the world, in his senses, would undertake, under such a provision, to improve his homestead at a time when he was on the eve of failure or bankruptcy. And no man would undertake it then, for the reason that the very act itself would be suspicious, and would be calculated to draw upon him, in hot haste, the suits of creditors, which would otherwise have been delayed. It is very rarely the case that any man fails, but what, to the last, he clings to the hope that the point where he is threatened with bankruptcy may be passed in safety, and he wishes to postpone the evil day as long as he can. And under this provision, when a man engaged in business should be seen at work improving his homestead to any extraordinary degree, it would at once attract attention, and lead to his financial destruction sooner than any other act which he could perform. The law may be abused to some extent, but if the money invested in business is taken for building and improving the homestead, the law would follow it there, and would compel the homestead to be responsible for the amount expended on such building or improvements.

I hope the substitute will pass, with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) and I am satisfied that we can, with such a provision, establish as beneficial a homestead system as that which has been in operation in other States for several years past. And I believe, where you will find one instance of its abuse, you will find at least a dozen instances of abuses under the homestead law of California.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WARWICK. I rise to move a suspension of the rules, and a postponement of the further consideration of the subject now before the Convention. My reason is, that Ex-Governor Leland Stanford, of California, President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, is present, and I know it is the desire of a great many members of the Convention to be enlightened in regard to that important enterprise. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and the further consideration of the subject be postponed for the present; and further, that Ex-Governor Stanford be invited to speak on the subject of the Pacific Railroad, and also to answer any questions which may be put to him upon that subject.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

REMARKS BY EX-GOVERNOR STANFORD.

The PRESIDENT introduced the Hon. Leland Stanford of California, President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention: I appreciate very highly the honor of the compliment which has been awarded me. I may say I am very grateful for it indeed. Devoting myself, as I have done for several years past, and as I am doing at the present time, to the construction of the Pacific Railroad, I do not desire merely to make a speech on this occasion; I desire rather that this interview shall partake more of the character of a free conference, because I am well aware that every gentleman present is earnestly desirous of securing the speedy construction of the Pacific Railroad; not only the construction of the road across the mountains, but also the construction of the road across the plains to some point that shall connect us on this coast with the Atlantic States. This is the great want not only of Nevada, but of the entire Pacific coast. It is not necessary, of course, that I should dilate at all upon the advantages to be derived by the people of this Territory from the construction of that road, either eastward or westward; it is better, I imagine, that I should confine myself to pointing out, as well as I am able, how these advantages may best be obtained. To do so, I will refer somewhat particularly, and as briefly as possible, to the position of the Central Pacific Railroad of California—its present condition, its prospects, its wants, and its means.

You are well aware, gentlemen, that Congress, by the Act of 1862, granted liberal donations in aid of the construction of the Pacific Railroad, limiting that aid only to the extent of one hundred millions of dollars. They also gave by that Act 6,400 acres of land to the mile for the construction of the road. Since that time, however, another Act has been passed by Congress, amending the first Act very materially, making it much more practical in its character. The first Act gave $16,000 per mile for building the road on the plains, and $48,000 per mile over the mountains, and also $32,000 per mile for passing through the Territories. That has been changed by giving double the amount of land per mile, which was first allowed the several companies. And further, by the former Act, the assistance of the Government was made to become a first lien on the road; but by the Act of last session the Government gives the same assistance in bonds per mile, but allows the railroad company to make a first mortgage upon the road to an equal amount; so that now when the Central Pacific Railroad Company receives $48,000 per mile in Government bonds, they are allowed to make a mortgage, which will be a first mortgage on the road, to the same amount, and they receive the Government bonds

Wednesday.]

STANFORD.

[July 13.]

in addition. And, as the base of the mountains has been determined by the President to be only about eight miles from Sacramento, it amounts practically to assuring $96,000 per mile towards the construction of the road, one-half in the bonds of the company, and the other half in bonds of the United States. This, of course, is a large assistance, but still it is not sufficient of itself to construct the road over the mountains, many miles of which will cost much more, and very little of it, from the present terminus, will cost much less. Therefore, you will observe, that the means of the company, so far as credit is concerned, to wit: the first mortgage bonds, of $48,000 per mile, of its own mortgage bonds, and the $48,000 per mile of the Government bonds, especially if in currency, is not sufficient to construct the road.

The question therefore arises, how shall the necessary means be obtained for building the road? After the first mortgage made on the road of $48,000 per mile, and then the Government assistance, becoming second mortgage bonds to the same amount, are expended, so far as borrowing is concerned, the means of the Company must necessarily be exhausted, because third mortgage bonds would be of very little value if they were issued. Its dependence after that, therefore, becomes merely the stock subscriptions and the earnings of the road. But in this country, where money is worth two per cent. per month, or about that on the average, it can hardly be expected that there will be any large amount of stock subscriptions, especially where an immediate return in money is not, and cannot be anticipated. Therefore, so far as stock is concerned, we must depend upon foreign assistance, or subscriptions. A great point is to give confidence abroad in the stock of the company, so that in time, as the road progresses, and is doing a fine business—as no doubt it will—the company may entertain strong hope that there will be such confidence abroad in the stock of this railroad that people in communities where money is not worth more than five, six, or seven per cent., at most, per annum, will be willing to come forward and invest in it. On this side we have for some time reached the conclusion that it is vain to seek for further subscriptions, at present, to the stock.

Now then, gentlemen, I hardly know how to address you in reference to this subject without appearing to interfere, perhaps too much, in your deliberations; but I will say this, that if you desire to aid the Pacific Railroad—and I am quite sure you do—the proper and most effectual mode of doing so is by assisting it over the mountains. This railroad is not a mere California project, as some have alleged, nor a project which interests only people outside of your own Territory; on the contrary, it is an enterprise in which the people of this Territory are as much interested as any people in the world, and even more, for without it you are isolated. The people of California do not need a railroad to Nevada so much as the people of Nevada need a railroad to California. Now, my idea is, that the true way for you is to aid the railroad while it is passing over the mountains; and, that you may make yourselves entirely secure that whatever aid you give shall not be thrown away, or be misapplied, you can say that your aid shall not come in until the road has reached a certain distance from navigable waters, or from the Sacramento river; for instance, when it has reached fifty, or sixty, or seventy miles into the mountains. It will then materially cheapen the means of transportation, both of freight and passengers, and having done that you can say that we will give you so much, and then as it progresses this way, so much more for every ten miles further, until the amount which you are willing to appropriate shall be exhausted. You may feel entirely sure that, after the road has reached the summit, it will come this way as far and as fast as the means of the company and the labor of men will permit. So far as the Government aid is concerned, the Government assistance, with a mortgage of $32,000 a mile, will afford means amply sufficient to construct the road through your territory. Whenever it reaches the line, how fast it shall progress eastwardly is only a question how fast the track can be laid, because the grading on the line selected can always be kept far in advance of the track.

The State of California last winter provided by law for the payment of the interest on a million and a half of the bonds of the company for twenty years. This is a very great and material assistance, not only because it pays the interest, and so far relieves the company, but also because it tends to strengthen the credit of the company, and to give confidence to those who might desire to invest in the stock of the company, which is a very great point in any assistance of a public nature which may be given to the road.

The present company has constructed thirty-one miles of road, and it has purchased the iron and rolling stock necessary for sixty miles, all of which is paid for, and most of which has been delivered. The freight money alone, on the material shipped from New York to San Francisco, which we have paid out, has amounted to over $250,000 up to the present time. The company owes no floating debt; all of its contractors are paid; every article for the road, all of its supplies and the iron and the rolling stock for the first sixty miles, are paid for; and the company owes nothing except the first mortgage bonds of the road, amounting to a million and a half of dollars, not all of which, however, have yet been negotiated.

So far, this work has been done by the subscriptions of the individual stockholders, and the assistance derived from the subscription of the county of Sacramento, amounting to $300,000, and the subscription of the county of Placer, to the amount of $250,000. Most of the county bonds are yet owned by the company.

Wednesday.]

FITCH—STANFORD—DELONG—WARWICK.

[July 13.]

None of the State or National aid has yet been received by the company, but nearly all that has yet been done has been done by the individual subscriptions of stockholders. Thirty-one miles of first-class road have been constructed, and we are supplied with all the rolling stock and iron necessary for sixty miles. This, in brief, is the present condition of the road.

So far as the route is concerned, we took a great deal of pains to ascertain which was the best route. I, myself, wrote a great many letters to different men who were acquainted with various passes through the mountains, and we made a reconnoissance of the different routes supposed to be practicable, and finally became entirely satisfied that the route selected is altogether the best; allowing the road to be constructed at much less expense, and in much less time than by any other route.

Now, allow me to say this—and I only know what the action of the Convention has been on this subject, by what I have seen in one of the papers—that you propose to give your aid to the road, only after it reaches the Territory, and then to the first road that shall reach it—allow me, very respectfully, to say, that in my opinion, that action, instead of aiding the road, is calculated to delay its construction, because you thereby raise a doubt as to whether or not this road—which Congress has aided, which the State of California has aided, which the counties of Placer and Sacramento have aided, and which the county of San Francisco will aid, either to the extent of $400,000, without taking stock, or by a subscription of $600,000—has a practicable route. And you also say to people abroad, when we go abroad to negotiate our securities, that there is a doubt whether we have the best route or not; and more than that, that there may possibly be a parallel and rival road constructed. To the extent to which you throw a doubt upon this being the only route, when we go into the market to negotiate our securities, or to sell our stock, to that extent you depreciate their value, and to that extent, of course, you prevent the construction of the road.

Now, gentleman, if ever a railroad is to be built over the mountains—and I trust it will be, inside of three years, because I know it is entirely practicable—it will be that one which has received the National aid. Congress, while it donates in aid of the Pacific Railroad over one hundred millions of dollars, and gives it thousands of acres of land to the mile, operates through the various companies already in existence, one of which is the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California; and whatever is done to assist those companies, to that extent co-operates with the efforts of the General Government, and whatever is done to antagonize the efforts of one of those companies, to that extent, of course, antagonizes the efforts of the General Government to build the railroad. This is, in brief, the view which I take of this subject. I do not desire to occupy your time by making a speech. It is a question of importance, it is true, but I think it better that we should have rather an individual and conversational meeting, than that I should endeavor to make any formal speech. I should be pleased to hear the views of members, and I will endeavor to answer any questions which gentlemen may see fit to put to me.

Mr. FITCH. I will ask Governor Stanford, what is the average estimated cost, per mile, of building the road from Sacramento to the State line?

Mr. STANFORD. The original estimate made by Mr. Judah, the chief engineer, who made the surveys, was, that it would cost between twelve and thirteen millions of dollars; that, however, was prior to any action of Congress giving assistance to the road, and it was not then contemplated to build so good a road as the act of Congress requires. That requires a first-class road, in every respect. A road might be built which would, to some extent, answer the purposes of a railroad, at some less expense. Since that time there never has been a complete estimate of cost for a first-class road, such as we are building.

Mr. DELONG. I will ask the Governor this question. What do you suppose the bonds of the State of Nevada for $3,000,000, at seven per cent. a year interest, could be negotiated for abroad, without a railroad running to our borders?

Mr. STANFORD. Really, Mr. DeLong, without a road at least contemplated, they would be very low in the market, in my opinion.

Mr. DELONG. Do you think they would sell, in the aggregate, for more than $750,000?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir, I think they would realize over that amount, and certainly with the prospect of a railroad; because, the moment it is certain that a railroad will be constructed, as it is well known that you have mines here which that road will supply and develop, the credit of the State would be enhanced. In view of the number of mines now undeveloped, or partially developed, the fact that the road is to be built would give your bonds a very good standing in the market.

Mr. DELONG. How far from the present terminus of the road, is the summit?

Mr. STANFORD. It is one hundred and four miles from Sacramento to the summit.

Mr. DELONG. Then it is forty-four miles from that point on the road to which you have the necessary supplies of iron and rolling stock to the summit. Is there only one summit on your route?

Mr. STANFORD. There is only one to pass over. Through the eastern summit the railroad follows the outlet of Lake Tahoe. It comes through the eastern summit with a descending grade of forty-two feet to the mile.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to ask a question. Do you not think that if the rate of interest on the negotiable paper of the State of Nevada

Wednesday,]

STANFORD—NOURSE—FITCH—COLLINS—TOZER.

[July 13.

were ten instead of seven per cent., it would be much more easily negotiated than at the rate proposed, which is seven per cent., and also that it would bring a better price?

Mr. STANFORD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose we could not pay—and it is well known that we could not—seven per cent. interest, would it make the bonds any more negotiable to fix the rate of interest at ten per cent.?

Mr. STANFORD. In that case, I should suppose not.

Mr. FITCH. Does not Congress restrict the rate of dividends on your stock to ten per cent.?

Mr. STANFORD. Whenever it is above ten per cent. Congress reserves the right to restrict and limit it.

Mr. FITCH. I suppose that is the difficulty in regard to the subscriptions in California.

Mr. STANFORD. Not altogether, Mr. Fitch. The difficulty is this: This company has the right to continue the building of this road until it meets the other road coming from the East, and of course, there will be no cash dividends until that time, as all the means of the company will be used in pushing the road toward the East.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand that California, by her enactments, agreed to pay the interest on the bonds of the company to the amount of a million and a half of dollars, for twenty years to come.

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; the interest being at seven per cent. per annum.

Mr. COLLINS. The State does not propose to pay the principal, then?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir; the company pays the principal. The payment of interest by the State, makes the bonds very desirable, and it is practically about as much assistance to the company, as if the State paid the principal. It not only makes the bonds good, but it strengthens the stock of the company.

Mr. COLLINS. What is the highest grade in crossing the summit, which the company will have to overcome? I mean the maximum grade; how many feet per mile?

Mr. STANFORD. The maximum grade is one hundred and five feet to the mile.

Mr. COLLINS. You now have thirty-one miles completed. What is the highest grade on that distance?

Mr. STANFORD. We have four miles of the maximum grade of one hundred and five feet, and there are three miles of between eighty and ninety feet grade to the mile.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe there is to be an extensive tunnel somewhere near the summit; is there not?

Mr. STANFORD. The longest tunnel on the route, according to our surveys, is one thousand and fifty feet, and that will take us more time than any other one mile of the road; but our engineers are confident that they can run it inside of fifteen months.

Mr. COLLINS. Is that at the summit?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir; it is about seventy-eight miles from Sacramento.

Mr. COLLINS. What is the number of tunnels that the company will have to make?

Mr. STANFORD. I do not know. The tunnels which we originally contemplated, we find on a more careful survey, are generally thrown out, and this tunnel of one thousand and fifty feet our present engineer thinks can be thrown out entirely, by a little more curve.

Mr. COLLINS. Without any more grade than one hundred and five feet to the mile?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes; we limit the grade to that; we are limited by the Act of Congress, to that of the Baltimore and Ohio road, the maximum grade of which is one hundred and sixteen feet to the mile; but we find that it is not necessary to have any grade of more than one hundred and five feet to the mile.

Mr. TOZER. I understand you to say that no part of the Government aid has thus far been used in the construction of the road?

Mr. STANFORD. Not a dollar.

Mr. TOZER. Then what are the contingencies? Can you depend upon the aid being granted to this road rather than to any other?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; because, in the Act of Congress, the companies to build the road and receive the donations are specified by name. The Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of the State of California, and was in existence anterior to the passage of the act of Congress; and if you will observe—I have the act here—that company is recognized in the act of Congress, and the five companies named are the only ones that, under the act, can derive any aid—three on the eastern end, including the branches there, and then the Union Company, and the Central Pacific Company, on this end. These are the only ones which can receive any of the aid. The donations are specifically made to them. The Central Pacific Railroad Company has the right to build eastwardly, until it meets the other companies.

Mr. TOZER. How soon, then, do you think the road on this side can demand and receive any portion of the aid of the Government?

Mr. STANFORD. Our company is in a condition to demand a portion of the aid immediately. Under the old law, which provided for the construction, after forty miles had been completed across the plains, it was provided that there should be an appointment of Commissioners, and until such Commissioners had been appointed, and had reported, we could receive no assistance from the Government; but it allowed the bonds to be issued for every twenty-five miles in the mountains. Now, our road commencing at Sacramento, runs into the mountains very soon, but there is no provision for granting us aid until we shall have forty miles constructed. But the act of last winter, I understand, provides for the appointment of this Commission at once, and then we shall get the aid immediately.

Wednesday.]

FITCH—STANFORD—DELONG.

[July 13.]

Mr. FITCH. I understand you to say that $48,000 per mile will be received from the Federal Government; that the company have permission to raise $48,000 per mile more on the road, in anticipation of the Government aid, besides the aid of a million and a half from California, and the aid of $400,000 or $600,000 from San Francisco, and the aid also of $250,000 from the County of Placer, and the $300,000 from Sacramento County. I understand that you have all this aid from the counties, as well as from the State, and that in the expenditure of this aid, you are restricted to the State line.

Mr. STANFORD. The Pacific Railroad Company, so far as its first organization is concerned, had only the right to build to the State line. It was only organized for that purpose, but by the act of last winter, we have the right, so far as the State could confer it, to build eastwardly, and the National Government has also conferred the right to do so.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that the money given by San Francisco, and by the State, and by these counties, can be expended either within or without the State of California, as the company pleases.

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; the entire subject is under our control.

Mr. FITCH. I believe you did not state the amount of the estimated cost per mile.

Mr. STANFORD. It will probably cost at least twelve or thirteen millions of dollars for the construction of a first-class road to the State line.

Mr. DELONG. Inasmuch as the appropriation heretofore proposed by the Convention is not agreeable to you in its present form, and inasmuch as, if we make a direct issue of three millions of dollars in bonds, it will not be worth much—taking either horn of the dilemma—what is it the wish of the company we should do? Let you alone?

Mr. STANFORD. I would prefer that you should let us alone rather than provide that the State shall grant assistance to the first road that comes to the State line, and thereby impair confidence in this route.

Mr. DELONG. We want to stimulate strife.

Mr. STANFORD. You can hardly expect to get two roads built across the mountains, Mr. DeLong.

Mr. DELONG. We do not want more than one, but we want that as soon as possible.

Mr. STANFORD. There is no doubt but what the road that comes across the mountains will be that one which the Government aids, and this is the only company now organized with a view to constructing a road over the mountains. There is no other company organized for that purpose, and nobody else has proposed to construct a road further towards the Territory than Placerville. So far as our present information goes, we do not know that any other road will ever attempt to cross the mountains.

Mr. DELONG. Then I understand you to say that you prefer that there should be no donation at all, rather than to limit it as this proposition is now limited?

Mr. STANFORD. I do not know exactly what you have done.

Mr. DELONG. We propose to give fifty thousand dollars a mile for every mile of railroad that shall be built within our Territory, to the company that shall first construct a road to this Territory, which shall connect us with navigable waters. That proposition is contained in our constitutional provision as it stands now. We have either got to make the appropriation outright, to leave it for the company to call for the first appropriation in bonds which shall first reach our borders, or else to make no appropriation at all. Which of the three measures would you advise?

Mr. STANFORD. With the exception of the implied doubt as to the company which has the ability to construct the road, there is no particular objection that I see. Of course, when we get our road over here, we should be very glad to receive this aid to construct the road along through the Territory, as our hope is not to be delayed too long in getting across the mountains. But, as I said before, the loan is not really necessary to get across the Territory. The Government aid being a second lien, makes the mortgage bonds of the company good, and that insures the completion of the road across the Territory as fast as the track can be laid, so soon as once the mountains are overcome.

Mr. DELONG. Then the proposition would suit you very well if that part were stricken out which provides for giving it to the first company, thus leaving out the doubt as to whether or not there can be another company or road which is likely to cross the mountains first.

Mr. STANFORD. That would suit us, so far as going through the Territory is concerned, but really that is no concern to the Pacific Railroad Company, because the company is confident of its ability to push the road after it once reaches the State line, as then the difficulty of crossing the mountains will be entirely surmounted.

Mr. DELONG. Then you ask that whatever appropriation is made shall be made so as to be available as soon as possible, and so as to allow you to use it on the mountains or elsewhere, as you please.

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. DELONG. Would it be any advantage to you to appropriate three millions in bonds that would not sell for over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. STANFORD. It would only aid the road to that amount, and that would be too great a sacrifice to make; but I think, nevertheless, that with the prospect of a railroad reaching the Territory at an early day, we may be quite confident that these bonds would stand well in the market, because not only yourselves here, Wednesday.] DE LONG—STANFORD—KINKEAD—FITCH—PARKER—HAWLEY—PRESIDENT. [July 13.

but the people in California, and in fact the whole world, have a very high estimate of the natural resources of your Territory; and the moment you have a reasonable means of communication for freight and passengers, you must have a population, and the bonds of the State of course will be valuable. But after all, while we are coming over the mountains is the time to give us effectual assistance. As to whether the bonds should be issued or not, is another question. You are as much interested in the bonds as the railroad company is, but if you prefer not to issue the bonds, I can only say that the people of the State of Nevada would be very welcome to take stock in the road, and they could assist us in that way.

Mr. DE LONG. We should object to this issuing of three millions of dollars in bonds, if it is not going to do considerable good.

Mr. STANFORD. You could give the aid in a very efficient and acceptable shape by providing for the payment of the interest on the bonds of the company, as California has done.

Mr. DE LONG. To what amount?

Mr. STANFORD. As much or as little as you choose.

Mr. KINKEAD. When will the road be finished as far as you have the material now on hand?

Mr. STANFORD. During the coming winter, we expect. Allow me to state why it has not gone forward faster this spring and summer. We have as yet received nothing from San Francisco, nor from the National or State aid; neither have we made a mortgage such as was contemplated by the California Legislature of last winter. There is a million and a half, of course, of very desirable securities which we could place in the market, but we have not done so because we did not know exactly how it should be done until Congress should take the action which it did take at the last session. Now, as soon as we receive the bill passed by Congress, and get all the details, we shall make that mortgage, and of course we shall push the work forward. It will take only about six months to complete that portion of it after we fairly set to work.

Mr. KINKEAD. That is, if you get the means.

Mr. STANFORD. With the State aid, and our assets, we are abundantly able to complete the sixty miles.

Mr. FITCH. Do you propose that these bonds which you are about to issue shall be first mortgage bonds?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITCH. Then the State guarantees only the bonds?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir. The State only pays the interest for twenty years. It actually pays that interest, so that, in addition to the credit of the company as a guarantee, we have for the interest the guarantee of the credit of the State.

Mr. KINKEAD. The State does not pay the principal?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir. That is to be paid by the company.

Mr. PARKER. Is there any company which has a charter from the eastern line of California, already granted by the Nevada Legislature through the Territory?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a question which I wished to ask. I do not quite understand whether any contingency could arise by which the aid granted by the United States could be received by any other company.

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir; except that Congress may repeal or modify the act, which is not very likely. Under the act of this winter, however, they have reserved the right to repeal or modify it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then no other company can receive it on the western slope?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. That question arose on the framing of the language of the section. The language employed was "some one company," and I opposed it because I thought it was leaving the matter open for the purpose of exciting a contest between the companies. So far as I am concerned, I was willing that the aid should be restricted to the company which you represent, provided there could be no such condition of affairs that the Government aid could go to some other company.

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. That question arose on the framing of the language of the section. The language employed was "some one company," and I opposed it because I thought it was leaving the matter open for the purpose of exciting a contest between the companies. So far as I am concerned, I was willing that the aid should be restricted to the company which you represent, provided there could be no such condition of affairs that the Government aid could go to some other company.

The PRESIDENT. I would like to ask Governor Stanford a question. How far has the line of the road been surveyed or located?

Mr. STANFORD. To the State line, or rather to the Big Bend of the Truckee.

The PRESIDENT. Do you regard the summit as the State line?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir. We strike the State line about four miles from where the Henness Pass road crosses the Truckee River.

The PRESIDENT. Do you recollect the distance in miles?

Mr. STANFORD. The distance, as we ran it originally, was one hundred and forty-four miles. To the summit the distance was one hundred and four miles.

The PRESIDENT. It has not been surveyed and located beyond that point to the east?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir, to the Big Bend of the Truckee.

The PRESIDENT. What is the capital stock of the company?

Mr. STANFORD. Eight millions of dollars.

The PRESIDENT. How much has been subscribed?

Mr. STANFORD. Between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars by the individual stockholders, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars by the county of Placer, and three hundred thousand dollars by the county of Sacramento.

The PRESIDENT. What amount of that capital has been actually paid in?

Wednesday.]

STANFORD—DELONG—PRESIDENT—EARL—CHAPIN—COLLINS.

[July 13.]

Mr. STANFORD. Between five and six hundred thousand dollars. The Government aid, you will see very readily can in no manner be diverted from the Central Pacific Railroad, except through its own laches. Under the recent Act of Congress, the time for construction has been extended so as to require twenty-five miles to be completed next year, and twenty-five miles the year thereafter; and it is for the interest of the company to push it forward as fast as they have the means to do so, and the earlier it is completed the better.

Mr. DELONG. Then I understand that the company would rather we should guarantee the interest on the bonds of the company, than to give the bonds of the State?

Mr. STANFORD. No; we would rather have the bonds.

Mr. DELONG. If we give you two hundred and ten thousand dollars annually, as a donation, which is the interest on three millions of bonds at seven per cent., that would be double the amount which California has given, or nearly so.

Mr. STANFORD. Allow me to say, that I have entire confidence that the stock of the company will eventually be very valuable, and I cannot ask for the assistance of any State, except so far as it may be necessary to secure its construction, and if the Territory of Nevada or the State of Nevada, when it becomes a State, agrees to pay the interest on the bonds, which would make them about as good in the market as if the State gave her own bonds—in other words, it would furnish about the same amount of means toward the construction of the road—that is really all the company can ask. We do not ask anything to save the stockholders—nothing except to inspire confidence: to make the credit of the company good abroad.

The PRESIDENT. The bonds of the company bear interest at seven per cent., and the Sacramento and Placer County bonds a like rate, do they not?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir; the bonds of Sacramento and Placer Counties bear eight per cent. interest.

Mr. EARL. Where is the western terminus of the road?

Mr. STANFORD. Under the organization of the company, it was the State line.

Mr. EARL. No, no! I mean the western terminus.

Mr. STANFORD. Oh, the western terminus; under the act of Congress, it is a point at or near San Francisco, or the navigable waters of the Sacramento river.

Mr. EARL. Is not the terminus to be at Goat Island?

Mr. STANFORD. I am not fully posted on that. I have not seen the amended bill, but I think it provides for an organization to run a road from Sacramento to Goat Island. The company has a right to construct a railroad to San Francisco, if it chooses to do so.

Mr. EARL. By this language, if it be construed that this is the road which is to get the land from the Government, will not the doubt arise as to whether you would get the aid from the counties, and also from San Francisco?

Mr. STANFORD. So far as relates to the construction of the road to San Francisco, there may be some doubt; but over the mountains, there is no doubt whatever, because the act of the Legislature provides specifically that six hundred thousand dollars shall go to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and four hundred thousand dollars to the Western Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. CHAPIN. What is the distance from the head of the Truckee Valley to the summit, or somewhere there?

Mr. STANFORD. I think it is some forty-two or forty-three miles.

Mr. CHAPIN. If that summit were the State line, all that forty miles would be in this Territory?

Mr. STANFORD. Certainly; the line of the railroad follows the Truckee, down a rather crooked course, for a great many miles. We found that some gentlemen were constructing a wagon road through there, and their original idea was to bring it down to the Truckee directly, but they found that the distance would be no less than by taking the Henness Pass route, and striking across Dog Mountain. All the difficulty is on the mountains. There is an opening in the mountain range there, and from there down to O'Neal's there is no trouble about the road. All the difficulty is in the mountains, and it is all passed, when you get to the State line.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand that the road would have been completed before this time, but for the want of funds?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand there has been some embarrassment in the operations of the company, or that the progress of the road has been delayed?

Mr. STANFORD. Only delayed; the company has not been embarrassed.

Mr. COLLINS. I hear it has not gone ahead as fast as it would have gone, if there had been funds enough?

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir. You see we are practically more than six months removed from the source of supplies. The ground was broken for the construction of the road a year ago last January, but we had to go East and purchase iron and rolling stock; and from the time we started, independent of the time we were necessarily delayed in negotiating, somewhat more than six months were consumed in the purchase and transportation of the materials. Indeed, some materials which we purchased a year ago, and paid for at the time, in the securities of the company, have not yet arrived. We were delayed some time in getting our locomotives. The Government was requiring the services of most of the effective force in building locomotives for its own use, and we could only get them at such times as they could be afforded by the Government.

Wednesday.]

COLLINS—STANFORD—KINKEAD—NOURSE—DELONG.

[July 13.]

Mr. COLLINS. Do you think, if this State shall give bonds for one, two, or three millions of dollars, or agree to pay the interest for an indefinite period of time on the bonds of the company, that that would really facilitate and hasten the completion of the road across the mountains?

Mr. STANFORD. It would, very much.

Mr. COLLINS. Probably how much time would it forward the completion of the road?

Mr. STANFORD. Well, I feel entirely confident that if the State shall pay the interest—not guarantee it, because I do not consider that that would be any very great assistance, for we never intend to have the bonds go to protest, and a guarantee therefore would be very little assistance—but if the State paid the interest it would be a very great assistance, and practically nearly to the same extent as though the State issued her own bonds. You will consider this, that we have thirty-one miles already constructed and paid for, and the rolling stock and iron for sixty miles already provided; and we owe nothing for all that, except a few of the first mortgage bonds, a million and a half of which we have issued, but only a portion of that amount has been negotiated, and everything else in the way of assistance is untouched. Besides, we have the interest on our bonds to the amount of one million and a half of dollars paid by the State of California.

Mr. KINKEAD. Is that a donation?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, practically, with the exception that we do some services for the State as a consideration. Things which are to go to the State Fair are to be carried free, and arms, and munitions of war, etc., are to be transported free. We issue our own bonds whenever we please, and we are able to put the bonds into the market at once, and then almost immediately we will be able to derive the benefit from the Congressional aid on the thirty-one miles which we have completed. We will have that aid to assist us in completing the work. We can make our first mortgage bonds equal to forty-eight thousand dollars per mile on the thirty-one miles completed. There are, besides, the four hundred thousand dollars which we are about to receive from San Francisco, if the compromise now proposed shall be carried out in good faith, as I think it will be; and if it is not carried out, then we shall receive six hundred thousand dollars in bonds from San Francisco, giving in return six hundred thousand dollars in stock; and these are the immediate assets of the company for the prosecution of the work. Now, if this Territory, on becoming a State, shall promise to pay the interest on the bonds of the company to any extent, to that extent the bonds would become very marketable. They would be good securities, and would bring a good price in the market at once; and, in addition, you will see the advantage of all these donations made directly to the company, by strengthening its standing abroad. The effect is, that you make the stock desirable. Our idea is to push forward the work as rapidly as possible, and when we get it completed for a distance of seventy or eighty miles, we shall have demonstrated not only the practicability of the enterprise, but also that it has a practical value as an investment, so that we shall have no difficulty in selling our stocks, and thereby realize a large amount of funds with which to finish up the road.

Mr. NOURSE. What effect upon any guarantee or agreement to pay interest on the bonds of the company, would the exemption of mines from taxation have?

Mr. STANFORD. I do not know what would be your means of raising a revenue in that event.

Mr. NOURSE. Are you much acquainted with the means of raising revenue which the Territory possesses?

Mr. STANFORD. I am somewhat.

Mr. NOURSE. Have you noticed the expenditures and the income for the last year, under the territorial organization?

Mr. STANFORD. Well, not particularly.

Mr. NOURSE. Are you aware of the fact that, with the Federal Government paying the federal officers, we have already run behindhand—that we are already two hundred and fifty thousand dollars behindhand, independent of city and county indebtedness?

Mr. STANFORD. I was not aware of it.

Mr. NOURSE. Are you aware that the expenses for fourteen months, which includes only sixteen hundred dollars of interest, amount to nearly six hundred thousand dollars, with an income of only forty-four thousand dollars?

Mr. STANFORD. I was not.

Mr. NOURSE. With these facts carried before Wall Street brokers, with this insight into our financial affairs, what do you think would be the probability of negotiating our bonds, at a figure to make it a paying operation?

Mr. STANFORD. I do not think that showing would materially affect the bonds.

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose you had the further fact that, notwithstanding the small amount of income, the people of Storey County—our most wealthy county—were taxed two dollars and seventy cents on every one hundred dollars worth of property for the past year, and that out of all that, we get only a small per centage for State purposes?

Mr. DELONG (in his seat). Oh, that is nothing for a Sacramento man to consider!

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose that fact were known, and it were also understood that we, as a Territory, had run behindhand two hundred and forty-four thousand dollars, and that the Territory had only an income of about forty-four thousand dollars a year—suppose, I say, it were known that the expenses were so much larger than the income, as shown by these figures—what would be the advantage to you of that agreement on the part of this State to guarantee, or to pay, the interest on your bonds?

Wednesday.]

STANFORD—NOURSE—HOVEY—CHAPIN—COLLINS—PRESIDENT.

[July 13.

Mr. STANFORD. I think you hardly put the case fairly. If the revenues of this State were not to be largely increased, of course there would be no great value in its securities. But so far as the rate of taxation is concerned, you should consider it in proportion to the rates paid for the use of money, which is often three and four per cent. in this country. I believe two and a half per cent. is about the usual monthly rate here, and compared with that, the rate of taxation is very light. It cannot be more in proportion than one and a half, or two per cent. per month interest, and yet there are cities and towns where people pay taxes amounting to three, four, and five per cent.

Mr. NOURSE. Would it not be of more advantage to your company, as regards giving you credit abroad and assuring the desirability of your stock, if it were known that after, or soon after, this railroad should reach the State line—which would develop our resources and give us a population, thereby rendering the State able to do something—the State would give you outright the amount of three millions of dollars, at the rate of fifty thousand dollars a mile—that the State would not lend, but give it outright? Would not that help you much more than it would to give you our bonds now, or as soon as we get to be a State, and with our present condition of finances?

Mr. STANFORD. I think not; because abroad, where most of the securities must be negotiated, the great point is to inspire confidence that the road will be constructed over the mountains, and there will always be a doubt until the ability of the company is made apparent. It is necessary not only that the company should have the ability, but also to make that ability apparent to the parties with whom we have to deal.

Mr. HOVEY. I would like to correct the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) in one respect. The county of Storey alone has paid fifty-seven thousand dollars into the Territorial Treasury during the last year.

Mr. CHAPIN. With many thanks to Governor Stanford for the valuable information he has given us, I suggest that we now proceed to our regular business.

Mr. COLLINS. I propounded one question to the Governor, but his attention was diverted from it so that he did not answer it. My question was this: How much, by the appropriation or provision for the loan of the credit of the State, or a guarantee of the bonds of the company by the State, say for a certain definite period, to an amount of one, two, or three millions—how much by that means would we be enabled to hasten the completion of the road to the State line? Would it hasten it one year, a year and a half, or six months? For instance, suppose when it reaches a point sixty miles this side of Sacramento, we guarantee the payment of seven per cent. on one million, when it arrives at a point eighty miles this side of Sacramento, a million more, and when it arrives at a distance of one hundred miles from Sacramento, or at the State line, a million more?

Mr. STANFORD. Of course, I can only approximate to it, but I will say this: that with the knowledge of the fact that this State would give the interest upon a certain amount of bonds, we could proceed with entire confidence in the expenditure of the money raised on the bonds which we are authorized to negotiate at the present time. By the time the road is constructed up to about sixty miles from Sacramento, the balance of the road, to fifteen miles from the summit, might be ready for the track, and when that is done there is no one section that has any obstacle to delay it. We could proceed at once to use the present securities with entire confidence, knowing that by the time they are exhausted, we shall have reached a point where we may receive the aid from this State; and these bonds would be negotiable in the market. Therefore, I think that with that assistance, we could construct the road as fast as any adequate amount of means would permit, and we could finish it inside of three years, probably.

Mr. COLLINS. Do you think that this aid would give us the road one year sooner than we could have it without?

Mr. NOURSE. Do you mean by the payment of the interest, or the agreement to pay it?

Mr. COLLINS. I mean not an agreement only, but the actual payment of the interest.

Mr. STANFORD. I must say that I could not say that it would make a difference of a year. It might make more difference, but I should be surprised if by some means we do not push the road forward to this Territory inside of three years. It is my ambition to do so. But the great object, as I have said, is to inspire confidence abroad.

The PRESIDENT. Do not you think that this road will be constructed without any aid from this Territory?

Mr. STANFORD. I think it will be, but perhaps not so soon.

The PRESIDENT. Then with this guarantee of interest at seven per cent. on the bonds of the company, how much sooner could that road be constructed to the State line, than it would otherwise be?

Mr. STANFORD. It is very difficult for me to say, because so much depends upon our foreign relations, and the condition of the whole country. The standing of our bonds and the standing of the Government bonds will have to be governed by events in the future, and of course, what will be our condition in the future it is impossible to say, nor how our securities are going to stand within a certain length of time. But this is certain, that if this State comes in and lends her aid, to the extent that she gives that aid, it will help the road; and more than that, it will strengthen the bonds of the company abroad, and also the stock. For instance, if the road were to cost three millions, with a million and a half of aid, you will enable us to build the whole of it, because the amount required to build a portion of the road secures the construction of a good deal more. Whatever is donated becomes a security for nearly an equal amount in addition, so that the donation of a million and a half from the State, becomes equal, so far as the construction of the road is concerned, to nearly three millions of dollars. Then in addition to that, the road having received the donation, makes the stock of the company more desirable in the market, and in that way the resources of the company and its means to build are increased. I may say, that a million and a half donated by the State, equals twice that amount toward the cost of the construction of the road.

Wednesday.]

PRESIDENT—NOURSE—STANFORD—COLLINS—CHAPIN.

[July 13.]

The PRESIDENT. Then three millions would be equivalent to six millions toward the construction of the road.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to ask one more question. What is the shortest radius of any curves on your road, and whereabouts do they occur?

Mr. STANFORD. As to the curves, our shortest is a five hundred feet radius, although we run out of Sacramento, at present, with a curve of two hundred and twenty-five feet radius.

Mr. NOURSE. Do these curves come upon heavy grades?

Mr. STANFORD. Some of them; yes, sir. Of course we avoid having curves upon sharp grades as much as possible, but we reach the elevation of seven thousand and thirty feet in a distance of one hundred and four miles, so that the grade is very regular. We have curves of this kind for at least four miles, on the maximum grade, on the part we are now running, but only one engine is required to surmount those curves. The locomotive Pacific, which is not so large as one we have coming out, drew up to Newcastle, one train containing over four hundred passengers, with only one hundred pounds of steam. There were eight cars, and each had about sixty passengers.

Mr. NOURSE. One engine hauled the train up the one hundred and five feet grade?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; I was on the engine at the time. We had only one hundred pounds of steam on, and sometimes a little less. We had certainly over four hundred passengers on the train.

Mr. COLLINS. One object in postponing the issue of the bonds was the idea that the State would be in a better condition, at a future time, to meet the issuing of so large an amount, than it is at present. As you rather demur to the action of the Convention, I would ask which would be most agreeable to the company—for instance, to issue the bonds from time to time as the work progresses on the other side, until the road reaches the State line—to make the payments from time to time until a million and a half is paid, or until the road is completed; or to pay the interest on the million and a half of bonds as they are issued by the company?

Mr. STANFORD. The object is to get across the mountains. I will say this, that if the State is not to issue the bonds until seventy miles of road are completed, the State will then certainly be in the receipt of considerable benefits from the road. In the next place, when we reach the seventy miles, and make the proper proofs, then only the company may issue the bonds guaranteed by the State, and the first instalment of interest probably would not be payable under six months at any rate from that time, so that it would necessarily be a considerable time before the State could be called upon to pay anything at all. And long before she would be deriving far more than an equivalent in the way of benefits from the road. For instance, now there are six daily coaches running from the termini of the railroads which run from Sacramento towards this Territory, and the probability is that these coaches take fifty passengers up, and carry fifty passengers down, at a cost of about twenty-five dollars for each passenger, so that there must be two thousand five hundred dollars a day paid out by the people of this Territory for passages alone. Now, the most we could charge, under the laws of California, would be ten cents a mile for passengers and fifteen cents a ton for freight, and the Territory would save on passenger travel alone not less than the handsome sum of three hundred thousand dollars a year, even if the railroad company should charge the maximum prices allowed by the law of the State of California.

Mr. CHAPIN. Have you any reliable data in regard to the amount paid for freight, and for passengers during the last year, to and from California?

Mr. STANFORD. We have got such estimates as we could on that subject, from several firms in Sacramento, and also in regard to the teaming across the mountains. The amount paid out in Sacramento for freights the past year, was from ten to twelve millions of dollars; and Mr. Swain, a large wagon-road owner, estimates it at twelve millions. I know that Whitney & Co. of Sacramento, some time along last fall—in November, I think it was—showed us their books, and also made an affidavit to the effect that they had paid out for goods forwarded from there during the season, over one million seven hundred thousand dollars. That was from one single firm. D. W. Earl & Co. have paid out probably the same amount.

Mr. NOURSE. Are not these the principal firms?

Mr. STANFORD. There are several firms which do about as large an amount of business.

Wednesday.]

STANFORD—TOZER—PROCTOR—CHAPIN—KENNEDY—STURTEVANT.

[July 13.]

Mr. DELONG. And many goods are sent here from Marysville, also.

Mr. STANFORD. I did not take any account of the Marysville trade, though I know there is a vast amount of goods shipped from there to the Territory. Taking the amount of freight brought by the several routes last year as a basis, the railroad line would probably save to the Territory at least eight or ten millions of dollars a year. That is according to the best data we can obtain. And it would save about two-thirds on the bullion shipped. I do not remember the exact amount of bullion. We have had the wagon roads estimated from the tolls received.

Mr. NOURSE. You add them to the estimate of the amount shipped in Sacramento.

Mr. STANFORD. No, sir; that is independent of those estimates. Mr. Swain's estimate of the whole was twelve millions of dollars.

Mr. NOURSE. Probably, on the other hand, Whitney & Co. and D. W. Earl & Co. forwarded about a quarter of the whole amount shipped last year.

Mr. STANFORD. Probably not a quarter, as a large amount comes also from Stockton, such as the produce of the farms—barley, hay, a great deal of flour, and some merchandise—which does not come by that road at all.

Mr. TOZER. And a great deal comes by the Henness Pass route, does there not?

Mr. STANFORD. A very great deal, and a great deal also from farms along the road.

Mr. TOZER. Could not most of the amount proposed to be guaranteed be saved to the State in the way of fuel?

Mr. STANFORD. I should say it could. You possess in your Territory, boundless resources: you have plenty of mines which would pay reasonably, were the cost of working them reduced to a smaller amount; but you have not many mines which will pay, with the present cost of the reduction of the ores. The consequence will be, without a railroad, that very soon the production will be confined to the principal mines; prospecting will die out, and your population will come to consist only of those who are engaged in working the more valuable mines, and those connected with them. But when you can transport your freight and your fuel at reasonable rates; when you can send your ores to the Truckee, or get your wood brought cheaply to your mines, you can then support an almost indefinite amount of population.

Mr. PROCTOR. How far has the road progressed already?

Mr. STANFORD. Only thirty-one miles as yet.

Mr. PROCTOR. Are there any men at work on the road now?

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; a small gang of men at Auburn, where we have a heavy cut. We have a few men at work upon that.

I feel myself greatly obliged to gentlemen of the Convention for the kind attention they have given me, and will trespass no further upon their time.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move a vote of thanks to Gov. Stanford for the valuable information he has given the Convention.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF THE FIRST CONVENTION.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to rise to a question of privilege, and will call it a question of privilege, on behalf of the former Convention. I wish to correct an error made by the gentleman from Washoe. (Mr. Sturtevant), who stated in his remarks to-day, that some twenty-seven thousand dollars of the bills of the last Convention had been audited and allowed by the last Legislature.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Oh no; I beg the gentleman's pardon; they were presented—not allowed. I was on the Committee on Claims in the Legislature. The amount is perhaps a little less than that, however.

Mr. KENNEDY. In order that this matter may appear properly in the morning papers, I wish to correct any misapprehension which might otherwise arise in regard to it. The entire amount of bills allowed by the last Legislature for expenses incurred by the last constitutional Convention, was four thousand one hundred and ninety-four dollars, which being in addition to the amount appropriated by the previous Legislature, makes the total expenses of that Convention seven thousand one hundred and ninety-four dollars. I have no doubt that if the statement of the gentleman from Washoe were allowed to go forth unexplained, it would be asserted, and used as an argument against the adoption of the Constitution, that the last constitutional Convention incurred the enormous expenditure of twenty-seven thousand dollars; and it was for that reason that I asked to make this correction. The entire expense of that Convention was only seven thousand one hundred and ninety-four dollars, taking the scrip at its par value.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am sorry that I should have been misunderstood; but it is a difficult matter for me to get up here and explain everything connected with that subject so that all can understand it, though I claim to be as bright as the average of men. I will say, however, that these claims to which I have referred, were all put in to be audited, and I will refer the gentleman to a few of the items. One was the claim of the Old Piute, amounting, I think, to six hundred dollars. Another paper had a claim of seven hundred and forty-eight dollars; and the Esmeralda paper put in a bill for six hundred dollars.

Mr. DELONG. Were those the charges of single newspapers?

Mr. STURTEVANT. Yes, sir. And I think, in fact, that pretty nearly every paper in the Territory sent in a large bill. But all of these bills, or nearly all of them, were knocked in head, though one bill was allowed, to the Virginia Union, for printing these same documents which we are now using.

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand that one of the bills which that paper sent in was for printing the Constitution of Oregon; was that bill allowed?

Mr. STURTEVANT. No, sir. Pretty nearly all these bills were knocked in head. I think I could go and hunt up the bills now, and show what was done with them and the amounts, but it is probably not worth while to occupy the time of the Convention with them.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to make one further statement, and that is, that no bills in behalf of the members of that Convention were ever presented.

Mr. DELONG. I hope the members of the former Convention will not occupy too much time in apologizing for the errors they may have committed.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT—THE HOMESTEAD.

The Convention resumed the consideration of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, the question being on the motion of Mr. Tozer, to recommit Section 30 to a special committee of three, with instructions to amend by striking out the section, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:—

SEC. 30. The Legislature shall provide by law for exempting from forced sale, under any process of law, a homestead for families, which shall not be alienated without the joint consent of both husband and wife, when that relationship exists, said homestead, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land outside of the limits of a town or city, or not exceeding one acre within the limits of a town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, and which, when acquired, shall not be of a value exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars; and which, to become thus exempt from sale as a homestead, shall be specifically described and set forth in a written declaration, by the claimant, acknowledged by him or her, and recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the county in which the same is situated; but no property shall be exempt by law from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife.

Mr. KENNEDY. Personally, I am opposed to inserting any homestead clause in this Constitution, but acknowledging the superior wisdom of older members, I am willing that the provision which was first submitted, with my amendment, should be adopted. I am unwilling that the Constitution should fix any measure of the lands to be exempted, either within or without a city or village, or any limitation of the value of the property which is to be exempted as a homestead. That is a question in regard to which I do not know the sentiments of my constituents, nor of any portion of them. It is a question which was not discussed during the campaign upon this old Constitution last year. I believe that such a provision has been productive of more fraud, and more violations of law, than it has of good. This, however, is a personal opinion merely, and, yielding to the views of older and more experienced members of the Convention, I am willing that we should say in the Constitution that a homestead, as defined and fixed by the Legislature—the proper exponent of the opinions and wishes of the people—shall be exempted from forced sale on execution. But I contend that you must leave it to the Legislature, not only because the value of the property—the value of the specific amount of property stated here—may vary, but because it is not advisable that any specific amount shall be fixed, so that we cannot change it without amending our Constitution.

Now, the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) and the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,)—our worthy President—on a former occasion made eloquent appeals to the members of this Convention in regard to the distress which the wife and children might be compelled to suffer. Some hardships might result, in a few instances, from the fact of there being no homestead provision of this kind, but I think it would be only in a few instances. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) has to-day advanced still another argument, namely: that under the provisions of the homestead act in California, a man may invest his homestead in hogs, in sheep, or in anything else. Now we do not propose here to put any such provision into our Constitution as they have in the Constitution of California. The only provision on the subject laid down in that Constitution is this:—

“The Legislature shall protect by law from forced sale, a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families.”

Now if, under that provision, a man could sell his property, and invest it in hogs and sheep, it is the fault of the law formed under the Constitution, and not the fault of the provision of the Constitution itself. I am opposed to any provision of that kind, by which, as the gentleman from Storey says, a man who has five thousand dollars in his pocket, though he may owe me a hundred dollars, may defy me, and I cannot collect it from him. There is no justice, law or equity in that. The original section, with the former amendment, together with the provisions of Section 15 of the declaration of rights, or Section 14, as it is now numbered, are all that is necessary for us to place in the Constitution to protect any man against his rapacious creditors. I will call attention to the language of the section of the declaration of rights to which I have referred. It reads—

“The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale for payment of any debts or liabilities hereafter contracted; and there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a millita fine in time of peace.”

Now I contend, with the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) that under this amendment, now under consideration, a man can invest in improvements any amount of money he sees fit, and thus actually defraud his creditors. The other gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) reminds us that we are to remember the old axiom, "That fraud vitiates every contract." I will ask that gentleman, for he has had a larger experience in the practice of the law than I have, whether he does not know that to prove fraud, although you may be perfectly satisfied that it exists, is the most difficult thing that ever lawyers have to undertake in the way of proof?

Mr. DELONG. I will answer that question now, if the gentleman wants me to. I have always found it the easiest thing to prove.

Mr. KENNEDY. My experience, then, has been different from that of the gentleman, and I will state that it is the most difficult matter I ever attempted to prove before any jury. I might be perfectly satisfied, and they might be perfectly satisfied that the fraud existed, and yet the actual proof would not be sufficient to entitle them to bring in a verdict.

Mr. DELONG. Perhaps the presumption of fraud is greater among the people where I have lived than it is where the gentleman from Lyon has lived.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then I will call the gentleman's attention to another legal maxim, and that is, that a man is always to be presumed innocent until he is proved guilty. You must, therefore, prove the fraud beyond any reasonable doubt, for it is an actual crime—made so by statute. I am willing to vote for this provision as it now stands; but most certainly I shall vote against any amendment offered proposing to limit it as to the number of acres or value of the property to be exempted; for that is a question, so far as I am concerned, which I desire to leave to the representatives of the people, elected from my county, as well as others, perhaps, upon that special issue. Now, gentlemen have insisted, upon this floor, time and again, that we are legislating too much in our Constitution; and here, for once, I am willing to meet them on that ground. Let us leave this matter to the representatives of the people, and let them determine it. Let us place the provision in such a shape that they can change it—so that if they find the sum first fixed upon is too small, they can make it larger, and if they find it too large, they can reduce it. I am not willing to make it necessary to change the Constitution before we can get rid of this matter of homesteads. I think such a provision would oftener tend to work fraud and corruption, than it would afford any protection to those wives and children about whom the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) spoke so feelingly. Let the section stand as it is, and I will vote for it; but with any amendment, such as has been proposed, I shall vote against it.

Mr. EARL. I oppose the amendment offered by my colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) for the reason that it leaves the land open to improvements—allowing the debtor to expend a large amount in that way, in addition to the amount of his property originally set apart as a homestead. I cannot see how the matter could be arranged so as to separate the improvements from the land itself. A person whilst in good circumstances, might expend a large amount of money either upon one acre or one hundred and sixty acres of land, and it would be a very difficult thing to prove fraud upon him; and in my opinion, not only difficult, but quite impossible. Now, sir, I thought that this section, after we had amended it the other day, should have satisfied any reasonable man, except, perhaps, in one thing, and that is, the amount fixed upon as the limit; and in regard even to the question of the amount, every member appeared at that time to be satisfied, for I believe no amendment was offered. I will at a proper time propose an amendment, which I will now read for information, and which I think will provide for any changes which may hereafter occur in the currency, leaving that matter to the discretion of the Legislature. I propose to insert in the original section, after the words "of the aggregate value of," the following:—

"Not less than five thousand dollars, provided, that said exemption shall extend to all premises under the value of five thousand dollars, claimed as a homestead under the provisions of this section."

For instance, if a man's premises are worth five thousand dollars, or two hundred dollars, as the case may be, let them be exempt; and if the value afterwards amounts to more than that, then let the property be sold. I do not see the objection to that which my colleague (Mr. DeLong) has urged; for if it is sold, in such a case, the man still gets his five thousand dollars, which he will find a great help to his family.

Mr. DELONG. Still he would have no home to serve as a shelter for his wife and children. He has the money in his pocket, but no house to live in.

Mr. EARL. Very true; but no law can be framed by which a man can be enabled to retain his home under all circumstances, when that home has become of great value, without doing gross injustice to his creditors. I think if a man fails and is unable to pay his debts, he should be very well satisfied to be allowed to retain five thousand dollars to invest in a homestead. But do I understand my colleague to say that under this provision a man could invest his money in hogs or sheep, and that they would be exempt?

Mr. DELONG. Certainly.

Mr. EARL. Not at all. I am no lawyer, but I would risk a suit upon that question—that under this amendment, the moment a man invests his money in hogs, in sheep, in cattle, or anything except a home, that moment it would be subject to execution. Now, there is another point which I think has not been sufficiently considered, and I wish to urge it as an objection to the proposed registration of the homestead; and a serious objection too, in my opinion. It is this: that many persons would fail to register their homesteads. Every man is more or less hopeful, even while he is in failing circumstances, and many would therefore neglect to register their homesteads until the crash came, when it would be too late to set apart a homestead for the family. I propose to relieve every man from that requirement, and to say that a homestead to the extent of five thousand dollars shall be exempted without previous registration.

FRIZELL—EARL—DELONG—LOCKWOOD—KENNEDY.

[July 13.

Mr. FRIZELL. I rise to say but a few words on this subject, and will then take my seat. The only argument I desire to offer, is simply to remind the Convention that we shall have a Legislature hereafter—that this Constitution which we are framing proposes that we shall have a Legislature in the future; though I might say, en passant, that this Convention does not seem, judging from its action, to contemplate the future existence of a Legislature. I will say still further, Mr. President, that I am getting sick, sir—quite sick. [Laughter.] No man on this floor has more kindly feelings, or better appreciates the honesty of heart and purity of purpose of the members surrounding him than I do; but I came here, sir—saying nothing of the sense or ability which I may have been supposed to possess—simply to make a State Constitution; not to legislate for the future State. Now, this homestead question is a precarious, slippery business any how, and I prefer to leave it for the Legislature, coming as it will, fresh from the people, to settle and determine. They will have ninety days to sit, and that will be ample time for framing and considering the laws necessary to be passed. Now, sir, I would ask gentlemen what in the world we have to do with people's hogs, or sheep or blacksmith's shops, or with charging men with fraud, or contending that a jury is sure to convict of fraud, or that it is the most difficult thing in the world to convict a man of fraud? What on earth have we to do with all these extraneous matters? I say again, I am getting sick of it all.

Mr. EARL. I suggest that the gentleman have leave of absence for a few minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELONG. It is probably all owing to bad habits. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope, sir, that all these amendments will be voted down, and then I will offer this, which, with the permission of the Convention, I will read. It sets up four bold landmarks; and after that, I am willing to trust for finishing the structure, whether hard or soft, or in whatever manner they please, to the Legislature.

SEC. 30. The Legislature, at its first session under this Constitution, shall provide by law for securing a homestead to families, and to those having families under their charge, under such rules and regulations, and of such value, as said Legislature shall prescribe."

The provision for those having families under their charge, is an idea not contained in the propositions now before us. Now, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Convention, I hope that this amendment now under consideration will be voted down, and then I am willing, as I agreed once heretofore, that this section should stand as engrossed; but if that is not done, I hope we shall adopt the substitute which I have just read and sent up.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I had prepared an amendment of that character, and I trust that when we have a vote upon it, we shall let it be a test vote. Let us see who are in favor of legislating in the Constitution, and who think that all wisdom is going to die out with this Convention. Let us consider it a test vote, and dispose of the subject promptly.

Mr. DELONG. Only one word, if you please, Mr. President, in relation to that rule of law regarding convictions for fraud. My friend from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) said that a conviction for fraud had to be obtained like a conviction for crime, in which it is necessary that the evidence shall remove all reasonable doubt. Now, it was held in the case of McDonald v. Baker, 2d California Reports, that when a man has concealed his property surreptitiously, a presumption of fraud is thereby raised—that fraud may be inferred in such a case, and is to be repelled by proof.

Mr. KENNEDY. That it may be presumed?

Mr. DELONG. Yes, sir. And now I say that either one of these amendments would be subject to abuse and fraud, and I do not think that any provision can be framed which would not be.

Now I will only say to my friend who sends up an amendment which he hopes will be voted down, and who uses strong oburgations in his argument, that I am not at all sick, and I hope that he will very speedily be restored to health.

Mr. FRIZELL. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question? Does he not think that there will be men hereafter in the Legislature who will understand this matter as well, and be equally as much interested in it, as he is? How many children has my colleague?

Mr. DELONG. Now, that is a very sick question indeed. If the gentleman wants to leave it to the Legislature, why should he offer an amendment providing that the first Legislature shall do so? Consistency is a jewel.

Mr. FRIZELL. My colleague does not wear it.

Mr. DELONG. I never wore jewelry in my life. [Laughter.] I say we have just as good a right to instruct the Legislature in one thing as in another. If we may say they shall provide in some way for exempting the homestead, we may also say how they shall make such provision.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Let me ask the gentleman one question. I understand him to say that in case of an appeal to the Supreme Court of California, that court decided that such a statutory clause was entirely inoperative, and therefore, even if the Legislature were opposed to a homestead law, we should still have it, under the constitutional provision. Is not that the true position?

Mr. DELONG. It is true that the constitutional provision is mandatory, and the Legislature therefore cannot prevent it. It leaves the people with the largest liberty to create homesteads as they please. ["Question, question?"]

Mr. NOURSE. I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) and if the section is to be changed at all, I shall prefer to strike it out altogether, because Section 15 of the Declaration of Rights, as printed in this old Constitution, in my judgment, provides for this whole matter.

The question was taken on the motion by Mr. Tozer to recommit Section 30, with instructions to amend as proposed by him, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. FRIZELL. I now, with all the diffidence in the world, appeal to the Convention to adopt my substitute, and I will ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:—

SEC. 30. The Legislature, at its first session under this Constitution, shall provide by law for securing a homestead to families, and to those having a family under their charge, under such rules and regulations, and of such value, as said Legislature shall prescribe.

Mr. EARL. I offered my amendment in good faith, and I think it takes precedence of my colleague's substitute. I move to recommit the section with instructions to amend, by inserting after the words "of the aggregate value of," the following:—

"Not less than five thousand dollars, provided, that said exemption shall extend to all premises under the value of five thousand dollars, claimed as a homestead under the provisions of this section."

The amendment anticipates only a change of the currency. If the Legislature deems it proper, in case the currency should go down, the limitation may be fixed at a larger sum, but not at less than five thousand dollars in any event.

Mr. NOURSE. Does this amendment compel every man to have a homestead.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is not prepared to decide that question.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Earl, and it was not agreed to.

The question was next stated to be upon the motion of Mr. Frizell.

Mr. FRIZELL. No doubt, Mr. President and gentlemen, you have all read the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence, and the Old Articles of Confederation. Those papers sound something like statesmanship, because they do not talk about everything in the way of minor details. I have tried, sir, in my weak way, which is no doubt very weak and a great ways off, to keep those great models in view; but here in this amendment are laid down the landmarks, at least, which may be required for the guidance of the Legislature. If it suits the Convention, I hope members will vote for it; if not, they can vote it down.

Mr. NOURSE. I object to the amendment, because under it the Legislature fixes the value, and there is no reliable basis for it.

The question was taken on Mr. Frizell's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. EARL. I move the adoption of the section as it stands.

The PRESIDENT. It is not necessary, as this is the third reading of the article.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the special committee, under the instructions to strike out Section 32, Messrs. DeLong, Parker, and Folsom.

Mr. DELONG. As our duty is a very simple one, I suppose that with the consent of the Convention we can report now. The special committee to which was referred Section 32, with instructions to strike it out, beg leave to report to the Convention that they have performed that duty, and the section is non est.

The question was taken on adopting the report of the committee, and it was adopted.

The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the President declared the Convention at recess until seven o'clock, P. M.

— EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at seven o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

The Secretary reported that there was not a quorum of the members in attendance.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

On motion of Mr. FITCH, a call of the House was ordered, and the following gentlemen responded to their names:—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Crawford, Dunne, Fitch, Hovey, Proctor, and Mr. President—9.

Messrs. Sturtevant, Kennedy, Earl, Crosman, Tagliabue, DeLong, Belden, Brady, McClinton, Tozer, Hawley, Kinkead, and Mason, were severally brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and made excuses for their absence.

After some proceedings of a jocose character under the call of the House—

On motion of Mr. DELONG, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT announced that the sum of four dollars had been collected by fines imposed upon members under the call of the House, which, at the suggestion of the Sergeant-at-Arms, would be given to the Sanitary Fund.

Mr. GIBSON said, as he had come in since, he would pay a dollar, so as to make it five dollars.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The Convention resumed the consideration of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, upon the third reading of the article.

DELONG—JOHNSON—BANKS—FITCH—DUNNE.

[July 13.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest that the rule requiring a bill to be read through on its third reading, might be suspended, unless some gentleman has an amendment to offer. I will move that the further reading of this article be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT. That proposition has heretofore been made in the Convention. Of course it is within the power of the Convention to dispense with the reading, if it is not deemed necessary, but, for one, I am exceedingly desirous that these articles should be read through after they are engrossed, because it has become apparent already, that errors might otherwise escape correction. Even if there is but a single word to supply or strike out, or any change necessary to be made, howsoever slight, the correction should be made before the bill is passed to enrollment.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The reading of the article was proceeded with, and several clerical errors were ordered to be corrected by the Secretary, by unanimous consent.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Section 28, having been read, as follows:—

SEC. 28. No money shall be drawn from the State treasury as salary or compensation to any officer or employee of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, except in cases where such salary or compensation has been fixed by a law in force prior to the election or appointment of such officer or employee; and the salary or compensation so fixed shall neither be increased nor diminished so as to apply to any officer or employee of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, at such session; provided, that this restriction shall not apply to the first special and regular sessions of the Legislature.

[Mr. CHAPIN in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it will be seen that the latter part of that clause is entirely unnecessary, and that it does not harmonize with the proposed general legislative system. This portion of the section was adopted by the former Convention, under circumstances differing from the present. Under the framework of the system, as then devised, we were to have a special session for a limited time immediately succeeding the election, for the special purpose of electing United States Senators, and then, following that, a regular session of the Legislature—no duties to be performed at the special session further than the election of Senators. Members of the former Convention will bear witness as to the objects then had in view, and that this special session was to transact no other business than such as I have stated. Consequently, this limitation should not be made to apply to a special session. At the first regular session, the Legislature necessarily has to elect its officers and employees before it is properly organized, and, consequently, it should be clothed with the power of fixing the salaries of all its officers. Now, I propose to amend the proviso, and if no objection be made, we can make the alteration at once. I move to strike out the words "special and regular sessions," and insert the word "session," so that the proviso will read:—

"Provided, that this resolution shall not apply to the first session of the Legislature."

No objection being made, the Secretary was instructed to make the amendment.

FIRST SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Section 29 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 29. The first regular session of the Legislature under this Constitution may extend to ninety days, but no subsequent regular session shall exceed sixty days, nor any special session convened by the Governor exceed twenty days.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that the word "regular," in the first line, need not be there, under the theory of the system which we propose to adopt, because the first session will be a regular session.

Mr. BANKS. I think it is barely possible that there may be a special session, before the regular session.

Mr. JOHNSON. You cannot possibly have a special session anterior to the regular session, unless you first change the whole theory by which we have been governed, in the arrangements we have thus far made. The old Constitution, on the contrary, contemplated having a special session first, and then a regular session.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that it is not proposed to have the regular session commence until January next.

Mr. JOHNSON. According to the plan which we have thus far adopted, there is to be no election until November, and I suppose the Legislature cannot meet until January.

Mr. FITCH. But we might provide in the Schedule for a special session.

Mr. JOHNSON. These matters were discussed some days since, and the conclusion I then arrived at, although there was no distinct action had on the subject by the Convention, there being nothing under consideration making an issue on the question, was, that there should be no election until the time of the Presidential election, in November. The gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) participated in that discussion, and I think he will recollect that such seemed to be the expression of the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. There is another section which we have acted upon, and which has a bearing upon this question. The time of the election was at first fixed in September, but that was subsequently rejected, and November agreed upon, so that now, by the provisions of our Constitution, there can be no canvassing of the votes until December.

Mr. FITCH. Perhaps I may have misunderstood the action of the Convention, but I thought it was designed to have the first session of the Legislature prior to January.

Mr. JOHNSON. No specific time has been appointed as yet, and it is in the power of the Convention to fix another time, if it chooses to do so. This matter was discussed, upon the question of canvassing the votes, on the occasion, I believe, when the proposition was before the Convention to fix an earlier period for the first election; and from the tenor and purport of that discussion, I felt at liberty to presume that the basis of action of the Convention was such as to preclude the necessity of a special session.

Mr. FITCH. If we finally adopt this section now, it will be beyond our power to recall it. I have myself contemplated the probability, nay, the necessity of a session previous to January next.

Mr. HOVEY. I have based my vote and my action hitherto, upon the hypothesis of my colleague, (Mr. Fitch,) that in the Schedule we shall fix the time of the first election at an earlier day.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to have gentlemen explain the reason why a session is necessary prior to the first of January, 1865.

Mr. FITCH. I can explain it very readily. It is required that we shall elect two United States Senators to represent the State of Nevada in Congress, and very important legislation may be expected to come up in Congress at an early period in the next session. Now, if our Legislature does not meet until January, we cannot, of course, be represented in the Senate earlier than February, or perhaps March; and I, for one, judge it to be expedient, if we are going to have a representation in Congress at all, that we should have our representatives there as early as possible. Gentlemen will bear in mind that Congress meets in December next.

Mr. KENNEDY. I certainly understood, when we fixed the day of election in November, that we were not to have a session of the Legislature until January. I can see no special use for a session before that time. In regard to the election of United States Senators, that should be done as the first business of the session.

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman had much experience in legislative matters, perhaps he would be of opinion that it would take a long time to elect them.

Mr. COLLINS. I can conceive of some important matters which should require an early session of the Legislature, and I confess that my vote has been given heretofore, with the idea that this matter would be arranged in the Schedule. I have not had much conversation with any one on the subject, but in the county which I represent, at present our judicial affairs are in such a condition, that there is an urgent demand for the organization of the State at as early a day as possible. If there be any one thing which more than another will operate to induce Storey County to go for a State organization, it will be the conviction on the part of the electors of that county, that the State will be launched, the judicial officers elected, and their duties defined by the Legislature, at the earliest practicable day. We have on the docket of the court in that district, somewhere about four hundred cases, and we have only one judge whose jurisdiction extends to those cases. There is, besides that, a large amount of litigation which would be commenced in that court if there were the least possible chance of cases being brought to trial at an early day. If this Convention shall assure the people of Storey County, (and I think there are other counties in the same category, though not, perhaps, so deeply involved in this judicial—I will not call it muddle—this judicial inaction,) that the judicial system under the State organization will be put into immediate operation, it will secure the support of the people of Storey County for a State organization. The people of the whole Territory feel the present condition of things in respect to the judiciary to be a great hardship, and they will take much less interest in the question of establishing a State Government if there is to be delay in that matter, than they would if assured that at an early day, as early as November, if possible, the Legislature would meet and define the duties of the judges who are to be elected under this Constitution. On my part, I can see no reason for this proposed delay, and for my life I cannot comprehend the rationale of this indifference to setting in motion the wheels of the State Government at the earliest possible hour. There may be reasons which I do not yet understand, and I would like to hear gentlemen who are opposed to that proposition, state the grounds of their opposition.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that it might have a pernicious effect to act definitely and finally on this subject now; but the matter could be reached, perhaps, by a slight amendment in Section 2, and then, possibly, by making some further provision in the Schedule. I will suggest that Section 2 be so amended as to read in this way:—

“The sessions of the Legislature shall be biennial, and shall, after the first session to be held under this Constitution, commence on the first Monday of January, in each year.”

Then it would also be necessary to amend the next following section, so as to read:—

“The members of the Legislature, except at the first session, shall be chosen biennially,” etc.

That would give us an opportunity to arrange this matter in the schedule, in such manner as we may deem best, providing here for the first session, and the first election of members of the Legislature, without prescribing when that first session shall be held.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman does not, by his amendment, relieve this question of all the difficulties attending it. We have already passed an article entitled Executive Department, and that is beyond the control of the Convention for the present.

Mr. FITCH. It can be reconsidered if necessary.

Wednesday,] JOHNSON—FITCH—GIBSON—CHAPIN—PROCTOR—STURTEVANT—HAWLEY. [July 13.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course it is not beyond the power of the Convention to reconsider it, but it is beyond its control in the ordinary course of business. But the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Storey does not cure the evil of which he speaks. Now, I feel unlike discussing the subject of convening an early session of the Legislature, but gentlemen must be aware of one material fact, and that is, that you cannot have a session, at least, until the Governor is inaugurated.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. (interrupting.) Is there any motion before the Convention?

Mr. FITCH. The question, I understand, is upon the passage of the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the passage of Article IV, which is upon its third reading.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there is no motion pending, I am undoubtedly entirely out of order, but I supposed that a motion had been made.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope my colleague will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. CHAPIN. We all want information on this subject. ["Leave, leave!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Ormsby will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I say I am indisposed to discuss the matter of the propriety of having an early session of the Legislature. As for the election of United States Senators, that subject may or may not be involved; but one thing is quite apparent, namely, that we cannot have a session of the Legislature unless we have a Governor—in other words, that simultaneously with the meeting of the Legislature, or prior to that, we must provide for the inauguration of our State officers. We cannot conveniently have one branch of the Government in esse whilst the other is not. And, as I was proceeding to say, that necessarily involves another amendment in Article V, entitled Executive Department, which we have already passed. It will be seen that according to the present provisions of that article, the canvassing of the votes of our State officers cannot occur until the third Monday in December. This is a period, it is true, prior to the time proposed for the meeting of the Legislature, the first Monday in January; but it is so short a time prior, that the interval between that and the first Monday of January certainly would be insufficient to accomplish any of the benefits which have been suggested here as likely to result from calling an earlier session.

But there is another view of this matter. If I were disposed to discuss the propriety of an early session for the election of United States Senators, there is another view, which relates to the propriety of our having an early representation in the United States Senate, and in Congress; and that is, the difficulty which we shall experience, and the expense and trouble growing out of the holding of repeated elections. The query is whether or not we should be benefited sufficiently to compensate for the disadvantages of holding an extra election. Without expressing any opinion myself upon that point, I would ask gentlemen to examine the question as a practical one, and inquire whether or not we should be sufficiently compensated for the trouble and expense of these repeated elections. We are to have, as it now stands, one election on the first Wednesday in September, to vote upon the Constitution, and then another, a general election, in November, which is the time of the Presidential election.

Mr. PROCTOR. Cannot we provide in the schedule for an earlier election, an earlier meeting of the Legislature?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh no, sir; by no means; not unless we make the corresponding changes which are required in other portions of this instrument, such as I have already pointed out.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The first Wednesday in September is the time fixed for holding the general election for Territorial officers, who are to hold office in case the Constitution shall be defeated, and it will not do to let that time pass by.

Mr. JOHNSON. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Nye, (Mr. Proctor.) I will say, that of Territorial officers, properly speaking, we have none to elect, except our delegate in Congress; and his election is fixed under existing laws, and nothing we can do here can change the period for electing that officer. As to the other Territorial officers, properly so-called, the people do not elect any of them. In some counties they have to elect county officers, but the Territorial county officers can be continued as ex-officio officers under the State Government, or not, as the Convention may please.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is not necessary to elect members of the Assembly this fall?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; they have to be elected, and also one-half of the Council. They are to be elected, however, in the several counties. But I desire to be understood as saying this, that there is no means which we can adopt, by any provision in this Constitution, which will obviate the necessity of holding the Territorial election in September, because we cannot possibly anticipate whether this Constitution will be adopted or not. And I suppose that every elector will vote at that September election, just as he would if there were no proposition pending in regard to a State Constitution and State Government; in other words, he will vote independently of that consideration, and select just such men, as Territorial officers, as he would otherwise, because at the same time that they are elected the vote is taken upon the adoption or rejection of the State Constitution. We cannot determine here that the people will ratify that Constitution, and we have already heard within these walls grave forebodings that a certain course of action on our part will inevitably result in the defeat of the Constitution.

Wednesday.]

STURTEVANT—JOHNSON—DUNNE—FITCH—NOURSE—BROSNAN.

[July 13.]

The proposition is this: we have to vote for or against the Constitution on the first Wednesday of September, which is the seventh day of that month. It is true that we have the authority, if we please, to allow the people to vote at the same time for State officers, but after the result of the experiment attempted last year, I do not think that plan will be tried again. On the contrary, I assume it as a foregone conclusion that not a single member of this Convention will be found to advocate the election of the State officers at the same time that the vote is taken upon the Constitution.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I suppose the gentleman is aware that I was not running for office last fall. [Merriment.]

Mr. JOHNSON. My remarks did not apply to the gentleman from Washoe, but I have some others in my mind who were members of the former Convention. With perhaps a single exception, I believe I stood alone in that Convention as an opponent of that policy, and should certainly oppose it at this time. But if we do not adopt that policy, and provide for a State election at the same time that the vote is taken for or against the Constitution, I admit that we may, if we please, appoint any day subsequent to that for the election of State officers. I concede this as a legal proposition. But the question arises here, how far removed that day should be, under all the circumstances, so as to allow for the canvassing of the votes? What lapse of time will be necessary? We have had some illustrations upon that point from gentlemen here who represent remote counties, embracing in some instances quite an extensive population, although in others, including rather large regions of sage brush.

I think we have had the testimony of one gentleman from Humboldt County, that it requires some eight or ten days to transmit the returns from remote precincts in that county. Then there is also the time required for canvassing the votes, as well as for transmitting the returns to the seat of Government. And in the event of a closely contested election—and we have to anticipate such probabilities—gentlemen will perceive that nothing short of three days would be sufficient to allow for the canvassing officers to perform their work at the seat of Government. They would have to receive and canvass the returns, and declare the result. That would bring us down as late as October, the election occurring on the seventh day of September.

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to hear some remarks directed to this point: whether or not, allowing this section to stand as it is, if it be the desire of the Convention, we can still provide for an earlier convening of the Legislature for the election of United States Senators? Can we not allow it to remain exactly as it is, and provide for a change of time for the first session, entirely in the schedule? If so, then this discussion might come up properly when we reach that portion of the schedule.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know my remarks are not in order, but I am speaking by permission of the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. The gentleman misunderstands the nature of the question. It is, whether or not it is the opinion of the Convention, or of members of the Convention, whose opinions might guide us upon such a subject, that we can provide for this matter altogether in the Schedule.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think there can certainly be no doubt about it, this being the general frame-work only.

Mr. FITCH. How would it be as to the election of officers under the Territorial organization?

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no question about it, I say, because this is merely the general system.

Mr. NOURSE. Then is there any necessity of changing the phraseology of the section as it stands here?

Mr. JOHNSON. The phraseology of this general frame-work should be such that the harmony of the whole shall not be marred and obscured by exceptional cases. Such exceptions should have no place in this part of the Constitution.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would also make a suggestion in this same connection. The gentleman from Ormsby entertains the same views which I did in the former Convention, and it will also be remembered that we did not change the word "biennial" there, merely because we wanted to provide for annual sessions for a year or two subsequently, but we left it as it stands, with a view to making that provision in the schedule; and, as I understand it, with the view of also providing in the schedule for a special election.

Mr. JOHNSON. These are reasons why we should strike out this provision from the Constitution. Whilst here we provide the general frame-work of our legislative system, in the schedule, as the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) has remarked, would be the proper place for any temporary exceptions, and when that shall be under consideration would be the proper time for their discussion. I only propose now, however, to reply to some remarks which had been made by other gentlemen on this particular matter. We can provide in the schedule, as I have before said, for these exceptional cases in such a manner as to preserve the harmony and unison of the whole instrument.

Mr. FITCH. In order to get this matter properly before the Convention, I will make this motion: I move to commit Article IV to a special committee of three, with instructions to amend as follows: After the word "shall," in line two, of Section 2, add "except at the first session." After the word "shall," in line one, of Section 3, add "except at the first election to be held under this Constitution."

The question was stated upon the motion to recommit, with these instructions.

Wednesday.]

FITCH—PROCTOR—JOHNSON.

[July 13.

Mr. FITCH. Upon this motion I have simply to say, that on the first Wednesday of September, to wit, the seventh day of September, the question of the ratification or rejection of the Constitution will be submitted to the people. I will admit that probably thirty days may elapse before the official returns of the election can be certified to the Secretary of State, and the official announcement of the result can be telegraphed officially to the President of the United States, who is thereupon empowered to admit the State of Nevada into the Union, by proclamation. That might be accomplished, then, immediately before the Presidential election. Now, it is true that, although the official returns may not be received within a month, yet the result of the election will be known certainly within a week, and we can provide for the election of members of the Legislature, and the Governor and judicial officers, as early, at farthest, as the middle of October, and the officers elected can take their seats about the tenth of November, and put the machinery of the State Government at once into operation.

I trust that members will consider the importance of this subject, which has not, perhaps, suggested itself to members. If we have a State Government, we have a member of Congress, and Congress meets on the first Monday in December. It is among the remote possibilities, though I hope not among the probabilities, that the election of the President of the United States may be thrown into the United States House of Representatives—that Mr. Lincoln may not receive a majority of the whole number of electoral votes. In that event, the vote of the State of Nevada would count just as much as the thirty-four votes of the State of New York, the election in the House of Representatives being by States. It would therefore be a national necessity that the vote of Nevada should be had in the House of Representatives of the United States, in order to secure the election of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency; and if we do not provide for a Governor and members of the Legislature to go into office before the first of January, our representative in Congress may not be able to take his seat before the election is over. That is among the contingencies of the election, and so long as it is possible for us to have an early election, I hold that it is our duty to do it. By so doing we shall be able to present strong arguments in favor of the adoption of the Constitution. We can go before the people and tell them that the vote of Nevada may be needed in the United States House of Representatives, in order to strengthen the arm of the Government, and that will be in addition to the argument that, by the adoption of the Constitution, the people will be enabled to vote at the Presidential election.

For these reasons, sir, I submit that it would be well to have the State election take place at an earlier period than November, and then we had better provide for taking the necessary steps to put the machinery of the State Government in motion as soon as the State shall be admitted. I do not wish to precipitate a debate upon this subject, but I trust that the Convention will carefully consider the propriety of making the amendment I have suggested, not only to this article, but also, if necessary, to Article V.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me that this whole subject is out of order, and that the proper place to discuss the question will be when we have the schedule under consideration. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) it seems to me, would have a tendency to injure the whole framework of the Constitution, a thing which the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) is very desirous of guarding against.

Mr. FITCH. Does the gentleman from Nye have an idea that the gentleman from Ormsby, or anybody else, holds that we cannot in the schedule, alter not only the time for the election, but also the time for the Legislature to meet, and for the State officers to take their seats?

Mr. JOHNSON. There can be no doubt of that.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think, most unquestionably, after the body of the Constitution is adopted, we can provide in the schedule when the first election shall take place, and how and when the officers elected shall enter upon the duties of their respective offices.

Mr. FITCH. And at what time they shall take their seats?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes, certainly.

Mr. FITCH. Then if we can, all right.

Mr. JOHNSON. The inquiry of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) was not directed to me, but as my name was embraced in it, I will answer without hesitation. I thought I had made myself distinctly understood on that proposition heretofore. The only object I have been aiming at in connection with this matter hitherto, has been to preserve the harmony and unison of the instrument throughout. I say that when we are establishing the general frame-work, we should not embrace in it the exceptional cases also, but that those provisions should be found either in the miscellaneous provisions or the schedule. That is my proposition, and I do not think that any gentleman on the floor, whether a lawyer or otherwise, would dispute that proposition. The one is the general frame-work of our Constitution, while the other embodies the special and exceptional cases; and the two being construed together, as they must be, no conflict could result, the one applying to the future, and the other to the present or immediately succeeding time. There can be no doubt, in my judgment, of the propriety of that course.

Mr. FITCH. Having great confidence in the opinion of the gentleman from Ormsby, I take pleasure in withdrawing my motion.

Wednesday.]

JOHNSON—HOVEY—BANKS—EARL—DUNNE—COLLINS—NOURSE.

[July 13.

Mr. JOHNSON. The question now recurs, I suppose, upon my motion to amend Section 29 by striking out the word "regular," and that, I believe, requires the unanimous consent of the Convention.

Mr. HOVEY. Does not that word "regular," have reference to special sessions which may be convened subsequently by the Governor?

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to know exactly how this matter we have been discussing now stands. I understand—and I have listened attentively to the discussion—that this section remains unchanged, and that it is proposed to provide in the schedule for any exceptions to these general provisions. Is that the state of the case?

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KENNEDY. I rise to a point of order. I think there is no quorum present.

The SECRETARY reported that there were only twenty members present.

[The President in the Chair.]

On motion of Mr. BANKS a call of the House was ordered, and the following members responded to their names: Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brogan, Collins, Crozman, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Frizzell, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, McClinton, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Wetherill, and Mr. President—20.

Messrs. Belden, DeLong, Kinkead, Tagliabue, and Tozer were severally admitted, and made their excuses to the Convention.

After considerable time spent in hearing and considering the excuses of absent members, etc..

On motion of Mr. NOURSE, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. EARL moved that the Convention adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The third reading of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, was proceeded with.

THE HOMESTEAD.

Section 30 was read as engrossed.

Mr. DUNNE. The last provision seems only to apply to liens made by the husband and wife jointly. It says—

"Provide, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife."

Now, is it not intended that the person who is the head of the family may alienate the homestead? If it is so intended, I would inquire whether the language here would not prevent the person who is entitled to the homestead from alienating it, after that relationship of husband and wife has ceased to exist by reason of the death of one of the parties.

Mr. EARL. I suppose the homestead law, which will be passed pursuant to this provision, will regulate the matter, and declare who shall be considered the head of the family.

The PRESIDENT. The inquiry seems to be propounded in reference to the lien, in view of the exception in the last proviso.

Mr. COLLINS. Does not that language properly refer to the joint consent required to be given on the part of the husband and wife?

Mr. DUNNE. That is the very point I desire to raise.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Humboldt asks, as I understand, whether, where the relation of husband and wife does not exist, this provision would apply? It might be that a widow, or a widower, or another person, would be the head of a family; as, for instance, a brother, with minor children dependent upon him for support, and occupying towards him the relation of a family. The inquiry, I suppose, extends to them—as to whether or not the exemption would apply in such cases.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand the exemption applies, whether there be the relation of husband and wife or not. Then the prohibition of sale applies only where there is both a husband and wife, and the object is simply to prevent the husband from selling the homestead away, without the consent of the wife. Where there is no longer a wife, there is nothing, as I understand it, to prohibit the alienation by the husband, or rather, by him who has been the husband. The preceding clause only makes certain exceptions—it says the homestead shall not be exempted in certain cases. And if a lien is given by both husband and wife, then, under this latter proviso, the exemption ceases to apply. I see nothing to prevent the husband alone, after he has lost his wife, from alienating the homestead by his own act.

Mr. DUNNE. I should like to see some language placed there for the protection of minors.

Mr. NOURSE. Does the gentleman mean to require the consent of minors?

Mr. DUNNE. Yes, sir; or the consent of such persons as may legally represent them; as, for instance, by order of the Probate Court. That seems to me to be a case requiring, perhaps, more careful safeguards, even, than are necessary to be required for the protection of the wife. There might be an elder brother seeking to deprive the minor children of their property. It may be sufficient to provide that the alienation shall take place only by order of the Probate Court.

Mr. NOURSE. The property of minors cannot be alienated without the power of the guardian to sell; and when, therefore, the homestead becomes the property of minors, the Probate Court at once guards the rights of such minors. To effect the sale of the property of minors, there must be a guardian first appointed, and he must get an order for sale from the Probate Court, upon showing cause. But if the father still lives, the mother being dead, it seems to me proper to leave in the father's hands a certain discretion as to what he will do with the property.

The PRESIDENT. That would suggest another inquiry. If the mother dies, and the father survives, how will this section affect the right of the survivor? The father being the survivor, is the head of the family, and entitled to the homestead; and how far does this provision exempt the homestead from the operation of a lien given by him alone?

Mr. NOURSE. I suppose he may give a lien, and I think the Convention would not want to restrict him. So long as the mother lives, it requires her consent, but after she is gone, we do not wish to tie his hands?

Mr. DUNNE. That is not the point of my inquiry, exactly: but it is whether, after he has done that—after he has sold the homestead, and received the money—he could then fall back on the homestead right, and attempt to set up a claim to the property, under this proviso?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not suppose the homestead right could apply to the money, after the money is once paid.

Mr. DUNNE. That is not what I mean. Having given a lien—having encumbered the homestead with a lien—then, when that lien is attempted to be enforced, can the head of the family claim the benefit of this provision as against the lien?

Mr. NOURSE. There is nothing here to prevent it. When the wife dies, he may make the lien alone. When but one of the two is left, the husband alone, for example, there seems to be no good reason for any restriction in that respect.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. What is before the Convention? I do not think these gentlemen are talking to the question at all.

Mr. COLLINS. I cannot see any difficulty in this matter, if it is not contemplated to restrict the action of the husband after the wife dies.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. I rise to a point of order. What is before the Convention? I believe there is no motion whatever pending.

The PRESIDENT. The article is before the Convention on its third reading, and discussion as to the construction of the various sections I think is in order.

Mr. COLLINS. The object of this language seems to be very clear. It is, that while the husband and wife are both living, neither shall be permitted to alienate the property without the consent of the other. That seems to be the sole object of the provision. It says:—

“And shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists.” After that relation ceases, as a matter of course the restriction ceases. If the husband dies, the wife may, by her own act, alienate the property, and vice versa.

The PRESIDENT. If the gentleman will permit me, I will suggest that it is the latter clause to which the gentleman from Humboldt calls attention.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. I think the clause he refers to is not printed at all.

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT. The inquiry, as the Chair understands, of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) is in reference to the latter clause, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY read as follows:—

“Provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife; and laws shall be enacted providing for the recording of such homestead within the county in which the same may be situated.”

Mr. BROSNAN. I had not given much attention to the inquiry of the gentleman from Humboldt, but I understand it is as to whether a person being the head of a family—as for instance, a brother having younger brothers and sisters under his charge, or a widower, being the head of the family—whether in such a case the head of the family could himself alienate the property after the decease of the wife or mother. From the reading of the section, I have no doubt that he could, because I see nothing there to prohibit it.

The PRESIDENT. The point is as to the lien—as to whether the homestead would or would not be subject to a lien or mortgage, which might be executed by the survivor alone.

Mr. BROSNAN. I see no reason why it should not be: and I will state that in California it is provided by statute—although there is but little said in regard to the subject in the Constitution of that State—that the head of the family cannot alienate the homestead: showing that in that State they have the same understanding of the subject as I have stated.

Mr. EARL. Does the gentleman understand that the brother, being the head of the family, might give a lien on the homestead, and in that manner steal the property?

Mr. BROSNAN. No, sir. There are frequently cases—I suppose the gentleman will recollect many such—where brothers inheriting a portion of the property have had charge of the younger children: but in such cases, as a matter of course, the brother could not alienate any more of the property than the portion he was himself entitled to.

Mr. FITCH. Why not insert the words of the proviso in the preceding part, after the words “when that relation exists?”

Mr. NOURSE. The joint consent could not be given, unless the relation did exist.

Mr. FITCH. But that would make it agree with the first part of the section.

The PRESIDENT. That amendment may be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. FITCH. I make the motion.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Fitch, and it was not agreed to.

SEPARATE PROPERTY OF THE WIFE.

Section 31 was read, as follows:—

SEC. 31. All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

Mr. NOURSE. I suggest the striking out of the word "more," so that the clause shall read: "Laws shall be passed clearly defining," instead of "more clearly defining the rights of the wife." &c.

The PRESIDENT. Is it not proper, in that connection, following the definition of her rights, in preceding sections of the Constitution?

Mr. NOURSE. That may be so, and I will not make the motion.

LEGISLATIVE COMPENSATION.

Section 33 having been read, as amended, as follows:—

SEC. 33. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury, but no increase of the compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of sixty dollars, for any general or special session, to each member; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant Governor, as President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

Mr. NOURSE. In regard to that last proviso, relating to the compensation of the Speaker of the Assembly, and the Lieutenant Governor, as President of the Senate, I would ask if that has been well considered; because it has been customary, I believe, for presiding officers of legislative bodies to receive double pay.

Mr. FITCH. That is the case in Minnesota, I suppose, where the members of the Legislature get only two dollars a day.

Mr. NOURSE. It is the custom, too, in Congress, and in the Legislature of every New England State.

Mr. DUNNE. I call attention to the amendment which has been already made in this section, in the first proviso. It now provides that the sum of sixty dollars shall be allowed each member for any general or special session, for postage, newspapers, &c. Sixty dollars is allowed even for a special session, which I believe is limited to twenty days. Now if sixty dollars is all that is necessary for a session of sixty days, why should the same amount be required for a session of twenty days?

Mr. FITCH. Would not the gentleman leave that much, at least, to the discretion of the Legislature? Cannot we trust as much as that to the sense of justice and the generosity of our future Legislatures?

No amendments being proposed to the section, the reading of the article was continued.

THE VETO POWER.

Section 35 having been read, as engrossed, as follows:—

SEC. 35. Every bill which may have passed the Legislature, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it originated, which shall enter such objections upon the journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it again pass both Houses by ayes and noes, by a majority of two-thirds of the members elected to each House, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the Governor's objections. If any bill shall not be returned within five days after it shall have been presented to him, (Sunday excepted,) exclusive of the day on which he received it, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature, by its final adjournment, prevent such return, in which case it shall be a law, unless the Governor, within ten days next after the adjournment, (Sundays excepted,) shall file such bill, with his objections thereto, in the office of the Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the Legislature at its next session, in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor; and if the same shall receive the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, upon a vote taken by ayes and noes, to be entered upon the journals of each House, it shall become a law.

Mr. NOURSE. In the first part of this section, it seems to me that the word "majority" is not correctly used. It says—"by a majority of two thirds of the members elected to each House." I think it should be "by a vote of two thirds," instead of "by a majority." I see the word "vote" is used in the subsequent part of the section, and I move to strike out the word "majority," and insert the word "vote."

Mr. PROCTOR. I see the same objection here that I did in another section, only that here it is more forcibly presented. It says in this section that a majority of two thirds of the members elected shall be necessary to pass a bill over the Governor's veto. Now I will refer to gentlemen who have had some legislative experience—which I have not, never having been inside of a legislative body—and I would ask them how often, in their experience, they would find two thirds of the members elected on the floor to vote. Now, sir, I look upon this provision as being as absolute as the veto power which exists in this Territory at the present time. I think it would be utterly impossible, under such a provision, to pass any bill over the Governor's veto, and for that reason I move to amend this section by striking out the word "elected," and inserting the word "present." I believe that amendment will cover it.

The PRESIDENT. The question will first be on the motion to strike out the word "majority," and insert the word "vote," as proposed by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.)

The question was taken, and the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse was unanimously agreed to.

Wednesday.]

PROCTOR—PRESIDENT—HAWLEY—BANKS—McCLINTON—DUNNE.

[July 13.

Mr. PROCTOR. Now I move to strike out the word "elected," where it relates to the vote of two-thirds of the members, and insert the word "present." It occurs twice I believe in the section, and my motion is to make the amendment in both cases.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Nye, in making his motion, will understand that it requires the unanimous consent of the Convention in order to amend, but his object can be reached by a motion to recommit to a special committee, with instructions to amend in this particular respect.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will make that motion, if there is any objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to inquire if this amendment would not interfere with some of the provisions which we have already agreed upon, or the general principles which govern them? We require a majority of all the members elected to pass a bill, and this section requires a larger vote, to wit, two-thirds, to pass it over the Governor's veto.

The PRESIDENT. It does not necessarily involve the preceding sections. This section refers only to bills which may be vetoed by the Governor, although possibly, by analogy, we should provide that they should be passed only by a majority of two thirds, since we require a clear majority to pass bills in the first instance.

Mr. HAWLEY. But will it not involve hereafter some question as to the legality of legislative action, under the provision as it stands? Will it not be a question, if we merely strike out the word "elected," whether we thereby definitely determine that a vote of two thirds of those present shall be sufficient? That two thirds might be less than an absolute majority. I think it is a matter which demands serious consideration, and I address my inquiry to the Chair because I presume the President understands the matter fully.

The PRESIDENT. There can be no doubt that if it be the sense of the Convention, we may make this difference, in one case requiring a vote of two-thirds of the members present, and in the other, a majority of all the members elected. There would be quite an obvious difference; and it is so apparent that I do not think any question whatever could arise.

Mr. HAWLEY. My remarks were based upon the supposition that we were going to require a two-thirds vote of all the members elected, to override the Governor's veto. I am quite unwell to-night, being hardly able to attend, and it is quite likely that I do not fully understand the question before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. I would suggest that if this language is to be amended at all, it should be made to read "two-thirds of the members present and voting in each house."

Mr. PROCTOR. Very well; I will make the motion in that way.

Mr. BANKS. I am opposed to the proposed amendment, and for this reason: that if we adopt this provision of the Constitution—

The PRESIDENT [interrupting.] Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Humboldt to object?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to recommit the article to a special committee, with instructions to make the amendment. [Cries of "question, question!"]

Mr. BANKS. Now, Mr. President, I will state briefly, if I may be allowed, the reasons why I oppose this change. It is the presumption of the people of the State, when they elect a legislative body, consisting say of thirty, sixty, or any other number of men, that their laws are to be made through the exercise of the united wisdom of that body of men; but by the change now proposed, a very small proportion of that body—two-thirds of a majority, for instance—can pass a law over the veto of the Governor. That is not in accordance with the spirit in which the people act in electing their legislative body. It would operate badly in practice, too, because members would feel no such responsibility as would compel their attendance upon the duties which they are elected to perform. I have seen enough of that loose sort of legislation, where each man conceives that he has the right to go away when he pleases and neglect his duties, to lead me to the conclusion that we ought to incorporate into our Constitution everything we can, which is calculated to make members of the Legislature feel that they have responsibilities resting upon them—that they are responsible for their absence from legislative duties, as much as they are for an indifferent or wrong performance of those duties. If we can do that, it will certainly have a beneficial effect. If we adopt this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nye, we thereby discriminate in favor of legislating by a comparatively small number of those who are sent to the Legislature by the people; while if we refuse to adopt the amendment proposed, we, on the other hand, discriminate very strongly in favor of compelling every man who is elected to a legislative body to spend his whole time in that body, in the performance of his duties.

Mr. McCLINTON. I hope the gentleman from Humboldt, who has just spoken, will pardon me for so persistently calling the question. I did not mean to deprive him of the privilege of making a lengthy speech, to prove what I presume four-fifths of the members here already see clearly in this respect. I agree with him upon this question in every particular, and I believe the Convention generally concurs, that the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected, shall be required to pass a law over the Governor's veto. That is all I have to say.

Mr. DUNNE. One point to be considered in connection with this amendment is this: that it would require a less number of votes to pass a bill over the Governor's veto, than would be required to pass it originally. I will here suggest, also, although it is not material to the question immediately before the Convention, that this same amendment would have to be made in Section 3 of Article 1—the Declaration of Rights—where it is provided that the Legislature by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof, may change the constitutional provision in regard to finding a verdict. I believe that is the language which was adopted in that section upon my own motion.

Mr. HOVEY. I would like to ask one question. By a preceding section, it is provided that no law shall pass except by the vote of a majority of all the members elected. Now, under this section as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Nye, could they not pass a bill by a two-thirds vote of those present, and by a less vote than a majority of all the members elected?

Mr. DUNNE. I will answer the gentleman's question. If that amendment were adopted, the Constitution would read exactly in this way:—

"If after such reconsideration it again pass both Houses by ayes and noes, by a majority of two-thirds of the members present and voting in each House, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the Governor's objections."

Mr. HOVEY. Would not that two-thirds require to be more than one-half of all the members elected?

Mr. DUNNE. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. Suppose a House were composed of sixty members; then thirty-one members would constitute a quorum, and it would require thirty-one votes to pass a bill in the first place. Then, if that bill should be vetoed, it would return to the House, and under this provision, it might pass over the Governor's veto, by receiving only twenty-two votes, in case there were only a quorum present. I do not think it is necessary to say anything more than that, to defeat the proposition. It is in itself, I must say, so monstrous an absurdity, that it is only necessary to look at the matter in the light of a few figures, to secure its condemnation by the Convention.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I rise to a point of order. I am not very familiar with Jefferson's Manual, but there is one thing which I think I recollect clearly, and that is, that when a proposition is once made and lost, that is supposed to be the judgment of the House, and it is final. Now, my recollection is perfectly clear that this same motion was made, I think by myself, some time ago, and in exactly the same language, and it was then voted down.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has no recollection of such a motion in reference to this particular section; but if the same motion had been made and voted down at a former stage, either in Committee of the Whole or on the second reading, it would, nevertheless, be perfectly competent to propose it again at this stage. The point of order, therefore, is not well taken.

Mr. PROCTOR. In regard to this proposition being so monstrous, as the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Hawley) supposes it to be, I will say that I regard the proposition made in the first place, requiring a two-thirds vote of all the members elected, as a greater monstrosity. The section as it originally stood, was emphatically monstrous; and I would be in favor, rather than adopt it, of striking out all power whatever to pass a law over the veto of the Governor, because this section, as it now stands, virtually deprives the Legislature of any such power. If we allow it to remain, the Governor and a few absent or captious members can together keep the Legislature in session a whole year without enacting any laws whatever. I think we might as well make a provision that the Legislature shall pass no law at all, without the consent of the Governor.

The question was taken on Mr. Proctor's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. BROSNAN called for the reading of Section 33, as engrossed.

The SECRETARY again read the section.

Mr. BROSNAN moved to amend Section 33 by striking out the word "the" before the word "compensation," where the latter word occurs the second time, and inserting instead the word "such," so as to read, "but no increase of such compensation shall take effect," etc.

By unanimous consent the Secretary was instructed to make the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTON. I will ask if there is any provision made here by which the members will receive mileage?

The PRESIDENT. That is left to the Legislature to fix. It is contemplated, as I understand, that at the first session a law will be passed fixing the mileage for members of future Legislatures, and in the Miscellaneous Provisions, or Schedule, it is proposed to provide for the first Legislature.

Mr. McCLINTON. Their incidental expenses are provided for in this section, but there is no provision for mileage.

The PRESIDENT. Their compensation for services will include mileage, and that, as a matter of course, will be provided by law.

THE HOMESTEAD.

Mr. McCLINTON. Would it be in order, before taking the vote on the final passage of this article, to move to strike out Section 30? I am one of those who believe that the aggregate wisdom of this Territory is not bound up in this body. I know there was a little wisdom remaining in Esmeralda when I left, and possibly that may happen to be sent to the first Legislature. I am opposed most emphatically to encumbering this instrument with special legislation.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that at a former stage of our proceedings, since this article has been on its third reading, a motion was made and lost to strike out that section. If the Chair is correct in that impression, the motion will not be in order.

Mr. NOURSE. I think the Chair is not correct. I made such a suggestion, I know, and stated that I would be glad to see it stricken out, but I do not think there was any formal motion made or acted upon.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs me that he thinks such a motion was made.

Mr. McCLINTON. If the motion has not been made, I now make the motion.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary now informs me that upon examination he finds that he was mistaken, and that there has not been such a motion.

Several gentleman objected to the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment being objected to, can only be made by referring the article to a special committee, or to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out the section.

Mr. McCLINTON. I move that the whole article be referred to a special committee of three, with instructions to strike out Section 30, and report immediately.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

Article IV having been read a third time, as follows:—

ARTICLE IV.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The Legislative authority of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated, "The Legislature of the State of Nevada," and the sessions of such Legislature shall be held at the seat of Government of the State.

SEC. 2. The sessions of the Legislature shall be biennial, and shall commence on the first Monday of January next ensuing the election of its members, unless the Governor of the State shall, in the interim, convene the Legislature by proclamation, except as hereinafter provided in this Constitution.

SEC. 3. The members of the Assembly shall be chosen biennially, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and their term of office shall be two years from the day next after their election.

SEC. 4. Senators shall be chosen at the same time and places as members of the Assembly, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and their term of office shall be four years from the day next after their election.

SEC. 5. Senators and members of the Assembly shall be duly qualified electors in the respective counties and districts which they represent, and the number of Senators shall not be less than one-third, nor more than one-half of that of the members of the Assembly.

SEC. 6. Each House shall judge of the qualifications, elections and returns of its own members, choose its own officers, (except the President of the Senate), determine the rules of the proceedings, and may punish its members for disorderly conduct, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected, expel a member.

SEC. 7. Either House, during the session, may punish, by imprisonment, any person not a member, who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not extend beyond the final adjournment of the session.

SEC. 8. No Senator or member of Assembly shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, nor for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office of profit under this State which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term, except such office as may be filled by election by the people.

SEC. 9. No person holding any lucrative office under the Government of the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under the State; provided, that Postmasters whose compensation does not exceed five hundred dollars per annum, or commissioners of deeds, shall not be deemed as holding a lucrative office.

SEC. 10. Any person who shall be convicted of the embezzlement or defalcation of the public funds of this State, or who may be convicted of having given or offered a bribe to procure his election or appointment to office, or received a bribe to aid in the procurement of office for any other person, shall be disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in this State; and the Legislature shall, as soon as practicable, provide by law for the punishment of such defalcation, bribery or embezzlement, as a felony.

SEC. 11. Members of the Legislature shall be privileged from arrest on civil process during the session of the Legislature, and for fifteen days next before the commencement of each session.

SEC. 12. When vacancies occur in either House, the Governor shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 13. A majority of all the members elected to each House shall constitute a quorum to transact business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner and under such penalties as each House may prescribe.

SEC. 14. Each House shall keep a journal of its own proceedings, which shall be published, and the ayes and noes of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of any three members present, be entered on the journal.

SEC. 15. The doors of each House shall be kept open during its session, except the Senate while sitting in executive session, and neither shall, without the consent of other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be holding their sessions.

SEC. 16. Any bill may originate in either House of the Legislature, and all bills passed by one may be amended in the other.

SEC. 17. Each law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject and matter, properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title; and no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but, in such case, the act, as revised, or section, as amended, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

SEC. 18. Every bill shall be read by sections on three several days, in each House, unless, in case of emergency, two-thirds of the House where such bill may be pending, shall deem it expedient to dispense with this rule; but the reading of a bill by sections, on its final passage, shall in no case be dispensed with, and the vote on the final passage of every bill, or joint resolution, shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be entered on the journals of each House; and a majority of all the members elected to each House, shall be necessary to pass every bill, or joint resolution; and all bills or joint resolutions so passed, shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses.

SEC. 19. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money shall be attached to and published with the laws at every regular session of the Legislature.

SEC. 20. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Justices of the Peace and of Constables; for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors; regulating the practice of courts of justice; providing for changing the venue in civil and criminal cases; granting divores; changing the names of persons; vacating roads, town plots, streets, alleys, and public squares; summoning and empanneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their compensation; regulating county and township business; regulating the election of county and township officers; for the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county and township purposes; providing for opening and conducting elections of State, county, or township officers, and designating the places of voting; nor providing for the sale of real estate, belonging to minors or other persons laboring under legal disabilities.

SEC. 21. In all cases enumerated in the preceding sections, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the State.

SEC. 22. Provision may be made by general law for bringing suit against the State as to all liabilities originating after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 23. The enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: "The people of the State of Nevada, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—" and no law shall be enacted except by bill.

SEC. 24. No lottery shall be authorized by this State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed.

SEC. 25. The Legislature shall establish a system of county and township government, which shall be uniform throughout the State.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Board of County Commissioners, in each county, and the County Commissioners shall jointly and individually perform such duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 27. Laws shall be made to exclude from serving on juries all persons not qualified electors of this State, and all persons who shall have been convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, larceny or other high crimes, unless restored to civil rights; and laws shall be passed regulating elections, and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influence thereon, from power, bribery, tamul or other improper practice.

SEC. 28. No money shall be drawn from the State treasury as salary or compensation to any officer or employee of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, except in cases where such salary or compensation has been fixed by a law in force prior to the election or appointment of such officer or employee; and the salary or compensation so fixed shall neither be increased nor diminished so as to apply to any officer or employee of the Legislature, or either branch thereof, at such session; provided, that this restriction shall not apply to the first session of the Legislature.

SEC. 29. The first regular session of the Legislature under this Constitution may extend to ninety days, but no subsequent regular session shall exceed sixty days, nor any special session convened by the Governor exceed twenty days.

SEC. 30. A homestead as provided by law, shall be exempt from forced sale under any process of law, and shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists; but no property shall be exempt from sales or taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife, and laws shall be enacted providing for the recording of such homestead within the county in which the same may be situated.

SEC. 31. All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

SEC. 32. The Legislature shall provide for the election by the people of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, County Recorders, who shall be ex-officio County Auditors, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, County Surveyors, Public Administrators, and other necessary officers, and fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex-officio Clerks of the Courts of Record in and for their respective counties.

SEC. 33. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury; but no increase of such compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers and stationery, not exceeding the sum of sixty dollars for any special session, to each member; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant-Governor, as President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

SEC. 34. In all elections for United States Senators, such elections shall be held in joint convention of both Houses of the Legislature. It shall be the duty of the Legislature which convenes next preceding the expiration of the term of such Senator, to elect his successor. If a vacancy in such Senatorial representation from any cause occurs, it shall be the duty of the Legislature then in session, or at the succeeding session thereof, to supply such vacancy. If the Legislature shall at any time as herein provided, fail to unite in a joint convention within twenty days after the commencement of the session of the Legislature for the election of such Senator, it shall be the duty of the Governor, by proclamation, to convene the two Houses of the Legislature in joint convention, within not less than five days not exceeding ten days from the publication of his proclamation, and the joint convention, when so assembled, shall proceed to elect the Senator as herein provided.

SEC. 35. Every bill which may have passed the Legislature, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it originated, which shall enter such objections upon the journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it again pass both Houses by ayes and noes, by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each House, it shall become a law notwithstanding the Governor's objections. If any bill shall not be returned within five days after it shall have been presented to him, (Sunday excepted,) exclusive of the day on which he received it, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature, by its final adjournment, prevent such return, in which case it shall be a law, unless the Governor, within ten days next after the adjournment, (Sundays excepted,) shall file such bill, with his objections thereto, in the office of the Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the Legislature at its next session in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor; and if the same shall receive the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, upon a vote taken by ayes and noes, to be entered upon the journals of each House, it shall become a law.

No further amendment being offered, the question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article, and the vote resulted: yeas—24; nays, none—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tozer, Wetherill, and Mr. President—24.

Nays—none.

So the Article was passed.

On motion of Mr. NOURSE, at twenty minutes after ten o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FITCH—DUNNE.

[July 14.

TENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 14. 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M. and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members reported except the following: Messrs. Ball, Frizell, Haines, Jones, Nourse, Parker, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 29; absent, 10.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. NIMS.

The journal of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

Mr. FITCH moved that the official Reporter be authorized to omit from his report the proceedings under the call of the House, last evening.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to a question of privilege, for the purpose of inviting attention to the reports of our proceedings here, as published in the Union and Enterprise. I discover some inaccuracies, in these reports, which I think it will be well to correct, for the reason that advantage will be taken, and capital made out of them, against the Convention and against the Constitution, if it is not done. [Merriment.] It is well known to all that I am opposed to this Constitution, but I wish to see no opposition made to it except upon just and reasonable grounds, and not upon any unfair advantage which might be taken in that way. One of the corrections which I wish to make is a matter personal to myself. The error appears in the Virginia Union, and as a preliminary I will say that it is not a matter of wonder to me that such mistakes occur, but the wonder is that they do not occur oftener. I am represented in the Union as saying, in regard to the article on the Right of Suffrage, that in the excited state of the public mind it would be impossible to get a fair vote if the word "disloyal" should be stricken out; whereas, it is well known that I took exactly the opposite view, namely: that in order to remove the subject from the passions of men, the word "disloyal" should be stricken out.

Then again, in the Enterprise there is an error on another question in regard to a vote of the Convention. I submitted an amendment requiring that every person applying to have his name registered as an elector should take and subscribe an oath of allegiance to the State and General Governments, and instructing a committee to draft an oath for that purpose, and report it to the Convention upon the succeeding day. To that resolution of instructions an amendment was offered providing that every person, when making application to be registered, shall, upon being challenged on account of disloyalty, take and subscribe on oath. &c. I opposed that amendment for this reason: that I thought it was legislation directed especially against a special class—that it would be said that one class arrogated to itself the right of voting without being subject to this requirement, and that if that amendment should be adopted, it would leave it in the power of any man at any time to brand another as disloyal, by denouncing him to the Registrar. I opposed the amendment, and it was rejected by the Convention; but the report in the Enterprise says it was "passed, without a division."

Mr. FITCH. It is probably a misprint for "lost."

Mr. DUNNE. According to that report, it would appear that the Registrar should only demand the taking of the oath upon the party being challenged, and that I believe is incorrect. And now, to show what advantage is taken of these points in a canvass, I will state that the canvass has already begun in our county, and I have been required to defend the positions of our party, and to meet and repel arguments like this, advanced by a leading man of the opposing party, a lawyer in our county: At a large meeting there he attempted to prejudice the audience against the party of the Union by declaring—and as I was in the room he addressed his remarks particularly to me—that the members of this Convention were bound by their solemn oaths to incorporate a clause in the Constitution allowing negroes to vote, and if they did not do that they would violate their oaths. He doubted which they would do, but thought that from policy they would violate their oaths. In proof of this position, he read from the Enabling Act a provision that the Constitution when formed shall be republican, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and then he quoted the Declaration of Independence as declaring that "all men are created free and equal," and quoted it incorrectly, for the word "free" does not occur in that sentence of the instrument. He then went on like this: "Now, gentlemen," said he, "here is the Enabling Act, which requires them to embody the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence in their Constitution, and they are obliged to include those provisions, one declaring all men free and equal; and if negroes are free and equal with white men, of course they must have the right to vote." Now when men will make such statements as that, there can be no doubt that they will also take advantage of an error of this kind, if it is not corrected, as I trust it will be in the Enterprise. They will say that amendment was adopted in such a shape that any person applying to the Registrar as a voter will be required to take that oath only in case he is challenged for disloyalty; whereas, by the action of the Convention it is well known that the requirement to take the oath applies to all men alike.

Thursday.]

DELONG—NOURSE—FITCH—BANKS—JOHNSON—TOZER.

[July 14.]

Mr. DELONG. In this connection I will call attention to a very funny error in the Union's report of my remarks. It says here "He had no fears but that the suits arising from it would live for a hundred years to come." I really do not know what that means.

Mr. NOURSE. Perhaps the gentleman had a professional idea in his mind.

Mr. FITCH. I imagine it is a typographical error. The word may have been "fruits" instead of "suits."

The PRESIDENT. As to the action had by the Convention on the amendment I offered to the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt. (Mr. Duane.) there is no question but that it was voted down with great unanimity, and the minutes exhibit that fact.

Mr. FITCH. I do not think the Convention had better spend its time in correcting the errors of the press. If we do we shall have plenty of business on hand. By way of illustration, I will state that I telegraphed to my paper, that the Convention had struck out the section prohibiting a Sole Trader law, and by some strange blunder they printed it in the dispatch that the Convention had adopted it, which is just the reverse, though the dispatch was plainly written.

Mr. NOURSE. Probably they did not believe you.

Mr. DELONG. As to this language attributed to me, I do not understand it.

The PRESIDENT. That may have been the condition of the reporter; perhaps he could not understand it.

CORPORATIONS.

The Secretary called attention to the fact that Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, had been retained in his hands, although partially engrossed, at the instance of Mr. Warwick, who gave notice that he wished to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITCH. I have an amendment to offer to one section of that article.

Mr. BANKS. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Lauder (Mr. Warwick) is temporarily absent, and I know he is desirous of offering his amendment, and inasmuch as the gentleman from Storey also wishes to offer an amendment, I move that we go into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the chair, on the next article before that committee, which is Article X, entitled Taxation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole. (the President remaining in the Chair.) and resumed consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation.

TAXATION.

The CHAIRMAN. When this article was last before the Committee, an amendment was pending, offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) to strike out the words "including mines and mining property." Also an amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) to strike out only the words "mines and," and also to add at the end of the section the words: "Provided, that in the taxation of mines, the proceeds only shall be taxed."

The question was taken on Mr. Banks' amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Tozer, to strike out the words "including mines and mining property," so that the section would read as follows:—

SEC. 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes."

[Mr. Lockwood in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe the section, in the condition in which it stands now, is open to amendment, as there is but one amendment pending. I will not, however, present the amendment which I desire to offer at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the gentleman's amendment be read for information.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not desire to embarrass this subject with a multiplicity of amendments, which possibly might confuse the judgment of members, but for the information of the Convention, I will state what course of action I propose, when this amendment now under consideration shall have been either adopted or rejected. I shall move to strike out the section as it occurs in our printed basis, either with or without any of the amendments which have been offered, and insert the following, as a substitute for the entire section:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of taxes by a uniform rule, so that taxes shall be assessed and collected on all property, possessory rights, and claims, according to their true value in money.

It is the same amendment which I read for the information of the Convention on a former occasion.

Mr. TOZER. I shall not trouble the Convention with remarks of any length upon this question, at this time, and I hope I shall not feel it my duty to do so at any time. I rise now simply to say that the amendment, as originally proposed by myself, striking out the last clause of the section, which follows the words, "both real and personal," would leave the section, in my judgment, in such a shape that it will be acceptable to the voters of this Territory, who are to deliberate and decide upon the question of a State Government. I cannot conceive how the Convention can leave the taxation clause in a better shape than that. It simply places in the hands of the Legislature,

Thursday,]

JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 14.

which is to succeed us, the power and authority to raise revenue for the support of the State Government by a uniform and equal rate of taxation upon all property, both real and personal. If this view will not meet with the sanction and coöperation of the delegates on this floor, both from the agricultural and the mining counties, I can hardly conceive what will. I sincerely hope that the Convention will be able to get over this "Hog's-Back" in our business, by simply adopting the amendment I have offered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not occupy any considerable part of the time of the Convention in discussing this matter, but there is one proposition which I wish to present clearly to the minds of the Convention. The question is, whether it is or is not the intention, by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) to tax the mines? Or whether, on the other hand, it is the intention of the Convention to do something, the effect of which will be to confuse and deceive the public mind on that subject? Now, sir, as I expressed myself on a previous occasion—and the responsibility of which position I am willing to assume before the people of this Territory—I do not want to leave this question one of doubt and uncertainty; that is, in such a condition as will be calculated to deceive the public mind. I repeat, sir, that unless all property that has a cash value in the market is subjected to taxation, unless we have a government founded on those immutable principles of justice, equity and right, I, for one, want to be far distant the day when we shall adopt a State Government. That is the issue which I wish to have presented, and I do not want it confused or mystified by language which may be susceptible of different constructions. I will not consent, by the adoption of the language of the California Constitution, and the consequent precedent afforded by the example of that State, to appease the consciences of gentlemen who shall be sent here as members of our Legislature, and, with uplifted hands, swear before Almighty God to support the Constitution. I do not wish to adopt such language that they may feel justified, after taking that oath, in turning around and palpably violating the express provision of the instrument they have sworn to support, because, forsooth, the action of California, under a similar constitutional provision, has, for fourteen years, been of the same character. No, sir; I will consent to nothing of that kind, and I entreat and beg of gentlemen of the Convention to incorporate no language in this instrument which is susceptible of more than one construction, but to adopt language which every person can understand. Let us take the responsibility, one way or the other. Let us say, plainly, that one-fourth of the property of the State shall pay all the expenses of the government, or on the other hand, let us declare that all property which has a cash value in the market, in proportion to that cash value shall be subjected to the burden of taxation.

This is, in brief, my position. I conceive that it is not necessary to discriminate, or to specify the particular species or classes of property, aside from the terms we employ in this section which I offer as a substitute for the entire section under consideration. If we were to do that, it would possibly be necessary to go into an extended enumeration and description of all kinds of property. But, I repeat, to avoid the like evils which have grown up under the legislation of our sister State of California under a similar provision, to escape the consequences of such legislation, to deprive members of our Legislature of the pretext, with which to appease and satisfy their consciences, that because the Legislature of that State, bound by a similar provision, has been, as I conceive, for the last fourteen years palpably violating the oath which the members of that Legislature have taken, therefore they may pursue the same course—to avoid this consequence, I say, I want such language incorporated here, as cannot, by any possibility, leave it a matter of doubt or question what we mean. If other gentlemen desire to present the proposition distinctly and unmistakably that a portion of the property of the country shall pay all the taxes, and another portion shall be exempt from taxation, then I appeal to them to come out like candid men and distinctly enunciate in the organic law of our State, the rule, that mines and mining property shall not be taxed. Then we shall know what we are doing. Then we can have a square vote, and our constituencies will know, now, and in all time to come, what we do mean, and what is to be the understanding of our action by the Legislature. Any expression less explicit than this, I should not be content to see incorporated in the Constitution.

Mr. DELONG. I had hoped that this question might come to a vote without further discussion. I asked by colleague (Mr. Tozer) not to make any remarks which might open the way for a protracted discussion, and he did not do so until the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson) opened the debate. We proposed to have a vote without discussion, but now, I think it would be impossible.

Mr. JOHNSON. In reply to the gentleman, I will suggest this; that a few days ago, the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) did himself speak very extensively on this question, and other gentlemen did the same; and at that time, for about eight minutes, I addressed the Convention, but was cut short by the hour of adjournment, and of course it was understood and recognized as a matter of courtesy, to say nothing of right, that I should have an opportunity to conclude. And that I might do so, and thereby render my views on this question understood—and not to provoke discussion—have I to-day claimed the attention of the Convention.

Thursday.]

DELONG—STURTEVANT.

[July 14.]

Mr. DELONG. Certainly, by no words of mine, would I cast any censure upon the gentleman from Ormsby, our President, for making any remarks, upon any question, at any time, or on any occasion he pleases. It is a privilege which I always avail myself of, regardless of any censure which I might incur from any source, and I concede the right to others to do the same. But I thought this matter had been so long canvassed, not only by members of the Convention, but also by the people, and the press of the whole Territory, that every member's mind must be firmly made up, and that we might as well march right up to the scratch, declaring expressly what will be our course of action, without any further talk. Now, what is the use of my going through the field of argument on our side, to show that this amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ormsby would be wrong? Could I hope to convince any one of these agricultural members that it is wrong? No, sir. Neither can men, with actual or assumed indignation mantling to their brows, convince me that I am wrong when I say that a tax, as proposed by this section, upon mining property, is onerous and unjust.

Now, sir, while I concede to gentlemen on the opposite side credit for candor and sincerity, I ask the same concession from them to me. I do not believe this is right, as it stands. Sir, when members representing mining constituencies in the former Convention, arose and insisted with unanswerable logic that property in mines was no property at all, but a mere hope and expectation, what was the reply of these agricultural gentlemen? Why, that a mine was as much property as a farm; and they have insisted, and do insist upon the same thing to-day. Now, for the sake of consistency, I say, do not abandon that position; but if you assert it, maintain it throughout. And when you have gone thus far—when you have said all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed, have you not gone far enough, if mines really are property? In the name of conscience, why would you add those words which will make this Constitution odious to the great mass of the people of this Territory? Why insist on retaining those words, "mines and mining property," which we are proposing to strike out? There is and can be but one reason for it. They insist that mines are property, yet, although they do not name farms and barns and buildings, and so on, they nevertheless insist on naming here our particular species of property. They can give but one reason for it, and that is the one advanced by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) who says that he wishes to make it so plain that men occupying legislative positions under the Constitution, shall not be able to do otherwise than tax the mines, without a violation of that oath which every one takes in the presence of Almighty God. Now, sir, I reply to that gentleman, that his argument is bad. If it be true that mines are property as much as farms, and buildings; and if it be true that a man coming to the Capital here as a legislator, under the Constitution, will tax that latter description of property, without taxing the mines, and thereby violate his oath, then, I say, such a man will violate his oath just as readily with that provision in, as he will with it out. You cannot provide, by any stringency of law, against wrong-doing by a man who is naturally a wrong-doer. If a man comes here, actuated by the prejudices of his constituents, or his own determination not to tax the mines, he will do it no sooner with this provision in, than he will with it out.

Our only object is, not to avoid taxation, but that we may remove from this article what appears to be a studied insult to our constituents. We wish to remove that offensive language which brought down upon the old Constitution the condemnation of the people of this Territory—to remove an objection and a reproach which last fall caused the State organization to be buried deep under the people's feet, instead of being adopted, as it would have been if that clause had not existed in the Constitution. If, then, we want a new State—which I suppose is the desire of all of us—if we wish to step into the circling sisterhood of the Union as a sovereign State—we cannot hope to do it with a Constitution containing a clause which has met with the people's express disapproval, time and time again. Strike that out, and then if you have other amendments to propose, we are ready to meet you on fair and equal ground, so far as we can. But we insist that it is useless to go over the whole argument—on the one side that the mines are property, and on the other side that they are not. Leave us to stand on the same broad and complete platform of equality with yourselves, and do not apply yourselves to the task of compelling the members of the Legislature to do their duty. They are responsible to their constituents, and to their God, for any violation of their oaths, or any wrong-doing whatsoever.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? He assumes the responsibility of saying that the Constitution was beaten last year in consequence of this mining clause; now I ask this question: If that be the case, why did the Legislature since that time, pass an act which is now among the territorial statutes, amounting to the same thing as that which this clause provides for? I refer to the provision in the present revenue law for taxing the mines.

Mr. DELONG. My dear sir, not having been one of the members of that Legislature, and their intentions and motives being inscrutable, I could not answer the question. I do not know what in the world they did it for; but I will say this, that they only did what we are perfectly willing they should do. I insist upon it as a proposition not to be disputed, that the mining community are willing that the mines should be taxed. And they will come here by their representatives, as a State, as they did last winter, by their representatives, as a Territory, ready to vote for a revenue bill which will tax the mines.

Thursday,]

FITCH—JOHNSON.

[July 14.

But they say, nevertheless, that you shall not incorporate a provision into the Constitution, which appears to be devised, as it were, from a motive of vengeance and hate towards their especial interest. Why do you say that mines and mining property shall be taxed? It looks as if it were a studied effort—as if you were seeking to reach us, beyond a peradventure, while other interests might escape. But I am willing, in order to meet the demands of the occasion, in order to try and adopt a compromise between ourselves, in order to try and draw up a Constitution which will be adopted by the people, to abandon the position which I had at heart, to wit: a provision that nothing but the proceeds and improvements of mines, and not the mines themselves, should be taxed. That is the position which I believe to be correct and just; but, with the hope of obtaining some ground which will be common ground, I am content to adopt the amendment of my colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) inasmuch as I believe if you adopt that at once, it will allay all hostility against the Constitution among the miners, and you will, at the same time, reach precisely the same result as you would by the adoption of the clause of the article which we propose to strike out. That is my wish, and I do hope we shall come to a vote with as little debate as possible.

If it is the will of the Convention, nevertheless, that we shall have a clause taxing mines as other property—although I protest against it—yet if this objectionable language only be removed, I will leave this hall and return to my constituents, ready to do all I can to secure the adoption of the Constitution, under the necessities which are upon us. But, in the name of my constituents, I ask for the removal of this language of reproach.

Mr. FITCH. It seems to me that if those gentlemen who are opposed to the mines being taxed, were imbued with the spirit which the friends of mining taxation ascribe to them, they would not take the position which they have assumed on this floor. If I were as much opposed to mining taxation as I am in favor of it—if I were as strongly opposed to a tax being levied upon the market value of the mines as I am in favor of a tax of that kind—I should be satisfied with nothing less than a clause declaring that mines and mining property shall not be taxed. I would contend that it should be stated directly and plainly, that the mines shall not be taxed. And I think that the gentlemen who, differing with me, are opposed to taxing the mines, are acting with a great deal of liberality, and exhibiting a commendable spirit of compromise, in proposing merely to strike out the words, “including mines and mining property.”

Now, sir, the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr.

Johnson) said he wished the Convention to declare distinctly that they intended either to tax or not to tax the mines.

Mr. JOHNSON. To use such language as not to leave it a matter of doubt.

Mr. FITCH. Exactly; that the Convention should adopt such language that the Legislature would have no reason for doubt. Now, sir, I think so long as the gentlemen who are opposed to taxing the mines fail to demand positive prohibition, they do all that the gentleman from Ormsby can ask. They leave the question with the Legislature, and the Legislature, in my judgment, and in the judgment of men older and more experienced than myself, if those words were stricken out, would undoubtedly have the power to tax the mines. And, as my colleague has stated, even if you go farther, and assert positively that the Legislature shall tax the mines, and leave your Constitution in that form, at last you will have to leave it to the Legislature to render the provision operative, and if they would choose to violate their oaths in one respect, they would in another. It has got at last to be a question of judicial construction.

Now, sir, I have but a few words more to say, and I will then take my seat. In regard to the remarks I made the other day, my position has been somewhat misconstrued on this subject. Some gentlemen have seemed to entertain the idea that I was in favor of so mystifying this question as to deceive the mining population, or deceive the agricultural population, by leaving the matter in doubt. Not at all. I regard it as being as clear and strong as it can be, when we say that all property shall be taxed. I regard it as being so clear as to leave no possible room for doubt, and I object to putting in the words, “including mines and mining property,” because those words express a doubt in our organic law as to the intention of the mining constituencies. It is an intimation that they would refuse to obey the Constitution, and it is, therefore, as my colleague has remarked, an insult to the mining constituencies. I ask gentlemen to consider this question. Let them count the number of delegates, if they please, who are present here from the mining counties, and then the number present from agricultural counties. Let them see the large majority in the Convention—if they will pardon the allusion—of representatives of the mining interest. Let them see that the delegates from the mining counties have certainly the power, if they had the will, to insert in that Constitution a positive prohibition of the taxation of the mines. And yet we are quite content to omit the language altogether. I have said “we,” because, although I am in favor of taxing the mines, yet I represent a mining constituency. I should rather say, they are willing to let the section be as strongly in favor of taxing the mines as it can be, without insulting those people whom they represent. Now, if you strike out those words, you still include the mines by saying that all

JOHNSON—DELONG—FITCH.

[July 14.]

property shall be taxed. What is the necessity, then, of inserting that provision? It accomplishes nothing, because, as I said before, if the Legislature should choose to violate the Constitution, it would do it just as readily in one respect as in another. But, on the contrary, if you place that objectionable language in the section, you put an argument in the mouths of those who are opposed to the formation of a State Government.

One word further, and I have done. I disagree with the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) in one particular. He says he wants this matter definitely stated in the Constitution, and if the Convention shall fail to put it in, in unmistakable language, he would rather the Constitution itself should fail. If the Convention fails to use such language as exactly suits him, he does not want the Constitution adopted. Now, sir, I take no such position as that. If this Convention shall put in this phrase, "including mines and mining property," I believe that my colleagues, who are strongly opposed to taxing the mines, will, as well as myself, nevertheless, go before the people, and strongly urge upon them the importance of the adoption of the Constitution. It is my determination to take that course, no matter what may be put in this section. But I ask the Convention to consider this, that if you put that language in the section, you thereby place a club in the hands of your enemies, and aid them in beating out your own brains.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know, upon reflection, but what now is as proper a time as now to offer my amendment, and I will do so. I move to strike out Section 1 entirely, and substitute the following:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of taxes by a uniform rule, so that taxes shall be assessed and collected on all property, possessory rights, and claims, according to their true value in money.

Now, sir, if there were any evidence wanted of the impracticability and the impropriety of leaving this section as it is proposed to be left by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) it would be found in the speeches which have been made by the two gentlemen who have preceded me. One of these gentlemen is willing to assume the position, as I understand him, that mines are property; but, the other gentleman, not content with the enunciation of his views here, recurs to the opposition, in past time, to the passage of the former Constitution, and in the most unmistakable language, declares that he does not believe that mines are property. Am I correct?

Mr. DELONG. I do not think I used that language—that I did not believe that mines are property. I believe they are not such property as should be included in taxation, beyond the proceeds and the improvements.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman believe that the Legislature would have the right, under this section, as proposed to be amended by his colleague, to refuse to tax them as property?

Mr. DELONG. Entertaining the views of the gentleman from Ormsby, I should not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is not that the gentleman's own view? Does he not believe that the mines should not be taxed?

Mr. DELONG. Yes, sir; my view is that they should not be taxed, any farther than the proceeds and improvements.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the practical question. Now, shall we adopt a Constitution that will give the Legislature an opportunity to escape the responsibility of their oaths, and tax only a portion of the property of the State?

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Most unquestionably; for I intend to ask him a question pretty soon.

Mr. FITCH. Does the gentleman believe that if the words, "including mines and mining property," were stricken out, the Legislature would have a right to tax the mines?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will tell the gentleman, and I will tell the Convention, the reasons why I desire the words, "possessory rights and claims," inserted there, very soon.

Now, we know that one of the gentlemen is in favor of taxing the mines, while the other is not. And I will say that, whatever may have been the position of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) the other day, and whatever he may have intended to express, I certainly greatly misunderstood him if he did not take the position that he was in favor of taxing the mines, and thought that that provision would give the right to the Legislature to do so, but that at the same time he did not want the people to understand that that was what was intended by the action of the Convention. And I do not believe there is a member of the Convention here but understood that to be the position of the gentleman from Storey at the time. We are told now, that gentlemen do not want those words left in, because they are a studied affront, and an attempt to insult the people of the mining counties. To insult them how? To insult them by saying: "You, enjoying the wealth of the country—enjoying the blessings of its Government—enjoying its protection—enjoying the protection of the courts, and the expensive judicial system, which is proposed now to be increased in the way of expense, and the greater part of the time of which is to be devoted to the litigation of your rights and the protection of your property, shall pay your share—your fair share—towards the support of the Government, and of that judicial system."

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me, if he pleases, till I get to a period, for I want to make the point right there. I ask again, is it an insult to say to them—enjoying those innumerable benefits and privileges—that they shall be required to contribute towards the expenses of the Government in proportion to what they have of this world's goods, according to its true value in money? This is the insult that gentlemen prate about. It is telling our people that if they enjoy the benefits of the Government, they must, in proportion to the property they possess, contribute to the support of that Government. If that is an insult, then I am one who does insult them. But on behalf of myself, and those whose views I represent, I maintain that it is begging the question to say that because we will not consent to the use of words of a doubtful meaning, it is an insult to any one.

[July 14.]

Now, how far does this question affect those whom I represent on this floor? Why, sir, the Enabling Act, by the authority of which we are here assembled, expressly provides that the property of the Government shall not be taxed. The mines are confessedly the property of the Government, but the possessory right is in individuals. Now, the ranch which I hold west of this city, belongs to the Government, also, and all the right I have is a possessory claim. I am willing to be taxed on that, and I propose that my constituents, who are mainly agricultural people, and few of whom have any right to the lands they occupy but a right of possession, the fee being in the Government, shall also be taxed; whereas, this section, as it would stand amended on the motion of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) would entirely exempt all of us who have only possessory rights in our ranches, from taxation. So far as I am concerned, leaving it as the gentleman from Storey proposes—leaving out the words, "possessory claims and rights"—it would stand about this way: I should be taxed about one-fifth as much as I would be by the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. DELONG. Has the gentleman found the place for my question, yet?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am ready.

Mr. DELONG. Suppose you leave it as it is in the original printed basis, and after "mines and mining property," insert the words, "also possessory claims to the public lands, the title of which is in the United States"?

Mr. JOHNSON. In contradistinction to mining claims? Then I would ask to include possessory rights in mining claims, also. But these words in the amendment which I have offered, I conceive would include the possessory rights of every man, woman and child in the country to property of the Government, whether it be a mine or anything else. That language embraces, in my judgment, the right of possession, and every kind of claim to property, the fee of which is in the Government, and of course, the higher title also, when the fee has passed from the Government to the citizen. In other words, it exempts nothing. That is my proposition. I am unwilling that anything shall be exempted that has a cash value, but according to that value, everything must be assessed and taxed. Now, sir, it must be apparent, inasmuch as there is a difference of opinion among gentlemen on this floor as to whether the words "real or personal," as they are here used, would or would not embrace claims to agricultural lands or claims to mining property, that there is a necessity of employing words, the meaning of which cannot be mistaken. How often has it happened, both in this and in the former Convention, that gentlemen have insisted—and very properly—on incorporating words, and sometimes only a single word, in order to show clearly what was intended. But here, on the contrary, seems to be a studied effort to use language that shall mystify and deceive. Already, even here within our own walls, we find a conflict of opinion as to what we really do mean by the language we employ. Is that right? Is it just to those who have sent us here to frame an organic law, or will it be of any advantage to them, to introduce words which we ourselves admit to be susceptible of more than one construction? No, sir; whilst I have the honor to represent a constituency, upon this floor or elsewhere, I shall make it my object not to incorporate in any legislation, nor in this instrument which we are engaged in framing, any language, by the use of which, any mistake can arise as to the meaning intended to be conveyed. I cannot consent to adopt any phraseology here, in regard to which there can be any necessity to resort to precedent, or to the legislation of other States, in order to ascertain what has been the intention of the Convention.

Now, we are told that in future Legislatures, men would attempt to escape the binding force of their oaths with the same readiness, under the amendment I have proposed, as they would if we were to use the identical language employed in the Constitution of California. But the position I took on that subject was this: that where there has been a precedent afforded, judges and legislators will resort to that precedent, and according to a clear and well known rule of interpretation, if we adopt in the organic law of this State a provision which is copied from the Constitution of another State, wherein a construction has been given to that provision, by the mutual action of the legislative and judicial departments, we, at the same time, adopt the construction which has been given to that provision. Therefore, if we use the language of the California Constitution, the Legislature of that State having for fourteen years, by its formal action, exempted mines from taxation, why, sir, we shall have adopted the construction that they have thereby given to that provision, and our Legislature would be justified in assuming that when we adopted this provision of the Constitution, we recognized also the interpretation given to it by that Legislature. It is to avoid this consequence, and to place words there which shall clearly embrace everything that should be subject to taxation, that I offer this amendment.

FITCH—JOHNSON—COLLINS—DELONG—McCLINTON.

[July 14.]

I do hope that gentlemen will, by some definite mode of expression, take the position either that we shall or shall not tax the mines, and not adopt a proposition upon which they can unite, acting upon altogether different and opposite motives, on the one hand, holding that the mines can, and on the other, that they cannot escape taxation under such a provision. It must be apparent that if we leave the section as it is proposed to be left by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) that would be the effect, and our fundamental law ought not to be left in any such condition of doubt and uncertainty.

Mr. FITCH. I have reduced the question which I desired to ask to writing, as I find the gentleman has nearly forgotten it. This is the question: Do you believe, or do you not believe, that under Article X, as it is in the old Constitution, with the words, "including mines and mining property," stricken out, the Legislature would have the right to tax the mines?

Mr. JOHNSON. I answer frankly, that prior to the passage of the Enabling Act by Congress, I would have said there was no doubt about it. But if it is property which belongs to the Federal Government, the fee being in the Federal Government, I do not think the section would be sufficient to embrace mining property. I am free to say that the language in the Enabling Act does, in that respect, change the merits of the case. And, in that respect, this question occupies a different position from the last Convention, as the Enabling Act was passed since the session of that Convention, and our action here must be in conformity with that Enabling Act. But it is a proposition unanimously upheld by the courts of new States, that whilst those States are inhibited from action affecting the property itself, belonging to Government, which means the fee title, yet it is competent for the Legislature to tax the possessory right, or claim of the individual, to the extent of all that right or claim is worth, be it much or little—of great or of trifling value. Whatever that right is worth—whatever may be the value of the claim—it is within the power of the State to tax it, and with the adoption of language in the organic law expressive of such meaning, it is within the power of our Legislature to subject that possessory right to taxation. On the other hand, I do not believe—I say it in all sincerity—that, with that language in the Constitution, as it is proposed to be left by the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, a single foot of the possessory rights, or claims to either the agricultural or mineral lands of the State, could be made subject to assessment or taxation for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. COLLINS. I am here as a representative of a mining section of the Territory; but while I am here, thus representing that mining section, and am bound to defend and protect its rights, I am not here to aid in doing injustice to a section which is not a mining section. I conceive that in one sense—and a just sense—I am a representative here of the interests of this whole Territory, as well as a representative of Storey County; and I do not want the particular or local interests of my constituents so to press upon me as to compel me to feel that I have a right to do injustice to any other section of this Territory.

With these preliminary remarks, allow me to state the position which I occupy in relation to my constituents upon this question of mining taxation. Last year, in this hall, in the Convention which was called by the Legislature of the Territory, this question was most fully, ably, and elaborately discussed. The delegates from Storey County were divided upon that question, but I think a majority of those delegates, if my memory correctly serves me, voted for taxing the mines, according to this provision of Article X, Section 1, as it stands in the old Constitution. Both the newspapers in Virginia City then advocated the taxing of the mines. Now, I have yet to learn that any body of men gathered together in Storey County, have given any instructions to her representatives on that subject, and in the absence of such instructions, I feel that the voters of Storey County still regard it as an open question for each man to decide according to the dictates of his conscience, and his own best judgment.

I want to correct a mistake made by my eloquent and earnest friend and colleague, (Mr. DeLong). It is this: He tells us that the old Constitution was buried under the feet of the indignant voters of this Territory, last year, in consequence of its taxing the mines. I think that gentleman, by reviewing the facts of the case, will come to a different conclusion. Take Washoe County, for instance, whose interests from A to Z are such as would be promoted by taxing the mines, and I ask if that county did not give an almost unanimous vote against the Constitution?

Mr. DELONG. They had local causes which controlled the vote. I spoke only of the miners.

Mr. COLLINS. So far as I was able—for I was suffering in consequence of a long and severe illness—to gather the opinions of the people at that time, I came to the conclusion that if it had not been for certain circumstances, which are well known, as for example, that men desired to lay unholy hands upon the ship of State, before it was launched, for the benefit of individuals, the opposition of every county, except perhaps that of Humboldt County, could have been overcome, and the vote would not have been against the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. McCLINTON. Allow me to make an explanation, right there. The vote of Esmeralda County was almost solely and entirely given against the Constitution, because of that mining clause, as it was called.

TAXATION—AGAIN.

Mr. COLLINS. To a certain extent, I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Esmeralda, but I do not think it accounts entirely for the vote against the Constitution. The people interested in mining, and in the various interests connected with that pursuit, may have been unwilling to support the mining clause, but even in Esmeralda County, I have no doubt they took the same ground against the Constitution as they did in other counties, and gentlemen will bear in mind, that when the people had once resolved that the Constitution should not be adopted, they naturally brought to bear every possible argument, and they found that mining clause to be a very strong and efficient one. And I repeat that, but for certain political transactions—and I refer especially to the efforts made to introduce a certain set of delegates into the State Convention here—there would not have been much opposition to the Constitution, on account of that mining clause. I speak on that subject advisedly. I admit that a great deal was said—and very ingeniously said, too—against the policy of taxing a hole in the ground, and bed-rock tunnels, and all that, and about legislating against the “poor miner,” by the men who claimed to represent the “poor miner,” particularly; but that “poor miner” was a bumbag and a myth. He has been aptly pictured as holding in one hand a number of shares of Gould & Curry stock, a like amount of Ophir stock in the other hand, and a quantity of Savage stock protruding from his pocket behind; with rotund belly and hawk nose, and dressed like a regular San Francisco “Cent-per-Cent.” That is the “poor miner,” who was talked about so much. [Meriment.] The truth is, that the miners who are proposed to be protected in this way, are those men who never had any interest in our community—men who do not live here, at all. Now, I should be willing to do anything to aid the laboring classes—anything to aid that class of poor men which my honorable friend from Storey, Mr. William M. Stewart, so eloquently depicted in the last Convention, men whose hopes, he said, were about to be taxed. I would like, if possible, to exempt the poorer classes of the community—those who are delving in the mines, and trying to strike something valuable, and who yet, nine cases out of ten, never find anything but disappointment—those who are always, as they think, nearing the golden treasure, though it seems to recede, as they approach. I would like, I say, that that poor class of men should be exempted from taxation, if it were possible. But I did not think then that the people whom I represented were disposed to rest on the small amount of surface property we had, relying upon that alone to carry on our State Government, and I do not believe it, to-day. I believe that if the vote were to be taken to-day, by the owners of mines in Storey County, they would say: “Deal justly by every man, and do not exempt any one. Do not pursue a course which will have a tendency to drive away the surface property which exists in our cities.” Do not let us drive that property away by attempting to carry on the Government at the expense of only those smaller interests of the Territory. I have more faith than that in the honor, in the dignity, in the integrity, and in the sense of justice of the miners whom I represent.

It has been said here by some gentlemen, that they are willing to tax the proceeds of the mines. Now, if we were to tax only the proceeds, how unjust that would be! Here is a man, for instance, who is paying out perhaps five dollars for every dollar extracted from his mine—and gentlemen well know there are plenty of our mines, every dollar taken from which costs not less than two dollars, or two dollars and a half—would not such a provision operate very injuriously upon mines of that kind? And why should we tax only the proceeds of the mines, while we tax the surface property, also? Here is my friend from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) with his farm. The assessor comes along and asks the value of that farm, and he gives it and urges no excuse that it is United States property, although it is no less the property of the United States than the mines are, in Storey, Esmeralda, Humboldt, or any other county in the Territory. The farm is assessed upon its value. Then the assessor asks him the value of his personal property—of his hay in the barn—of his oats and barley in the ricks—his cattle in the fields—his horses and mules, and sheep upon the plains—and all those are assessed, also, and my friend comes up and pays his taxes upon them. Now, I ask those members who profess to represent the mining interest, if they believe that that is just?

I represent the interest of my constituents, not only those above ground, but of those beneath the ground, also; and let the consequences be what they may, I will not consent to do that which I regard as injustice to any class of men. I think if the mines are taxed, justly and properly—and it is not for me to say, perhaps, what is just or what is proper in that respect—and they are exempted from the taxation of the proceeds, the miners ought to regard themselves as exceedingly fortunate. For the proceeds of some mines would be, perhaps, more than equal to the value of the mine itself.

Then, again: this tax is not going to operate so very severely upon the mines, after all. Last year, the Gould & Curry Company gave COLLINS.

[July 14.

in as the amount of its surface property, eleven hundred thousand dollars, which was the amount upon which they were assessed upon the list by the County Assessor, and upon which amount they paid one dollar and seventy cents on each one hundred dollars. And a large amount of that property was situated within the corporate limits of the city of Virginia, and upon that was paid an additional tax of one per cent. Now, as I estimate it, last year, when Gould & Curry was worth eighteen hundred dollars a foot, if all the mines in the Territory had been taxed, as such, according to their value, the amount of taxable property would have been trebled and perhaps quadrupled, and the Gould & Curry mine would not have paid into the county treasury, for the benefit of the county, and into the Territorial treasury, for the benefit of the Territory, as large an amount of taxes as it did pay, under the operation of the law taxing surface property. When you come to assess the property of the mines at so much per foot, the Gould & Curry, having so much property in superficial structures, and surface property, would not pay an amount of taxes equal to what it paid under the old system. Now, to illustrate, take the case of the man with a little cabin and a hole in the ground, who has been so much talked of—the man who is running a tunnel, with nothing ahead but his hopes. He has a cabin worth say one hundred dollars, and one hundred feet in an undeveloped claim, worth in the market, say three dollars per foot. Now, if the surface property possesses only one-fourth the value of the mines, it follows that if the surface property alone is to be taxed, the percentage of taxation must be four times greater than it would be were the mines included for taxation. Hence, to raise a given amount of revenue, the "poor miner" of our sympathetic friends, would pay one dollar on each one hundred dollars on his cabin, which would be one dollar; or twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars, including his mining ground, which would be one dollar. It therefore resolves itself into this: that as we decrease the range of taxable property, we must necessarily in that proportion increase the rate of taxation upon that class of property remaining liable to assessment—in a word, to quadruple the burdens of government upon one class, in order to relieve another class altogether.

I would like, I say again, if it could possibly be done, in adjusting this matter so as to make it as just and equal all around as possible, to see some means devised, some well matured plan adopted whereby these "poor miners," who are struggling to strike something of value—it may be with the chances of five to one against them, or it may be perhaps even with the chance of only one out of ten—I would like, I say, to see some plan devised by which that class of men could be relieved from taxation. But I do not see how it can be done, and I ask the gentleman from Storey County (Mr. DeLong,) and the gentleman from Esmeralda County (Mr. McClinton,) and the gentleman from Lander County (Mr. Warwick,) all of whom represent mixed interests, how it can be done with justice? And, sir, there is no man on this floor who has a right to say that he represents the mining interests exclusively. We are all mixed in that respect. I represent fifteen millions, according to the Assessor's list last year, of surface property, in Storey County; and therefore, I say, you cannot call that a purely mining community, when we have that amount of surface property, to sustain the interests of the county and of the Territory. I ask these gentlemen from the mining counties, therefore, who represent mixed interests, before they cast their votes, or give their voices against taxing the mines, to ascertain whether they are not, by that course, exacting from one class, unjustly, and giving it to another class, with equal injustice?

Again, there are now on the printed calendar of the District Court in Storey County, nearly four hundred cases, and more than one-half of those cases are exclusively mining cases, seventy-five of which, at the outside, will occupy three times as much of the time of the court as all the rest put together. Now, I ask those who profess to represent the mining interests—which is really a mixed interest, however, as I have shown—if it is right and just to tax the owners of the surface property to pay all the expenses of that litigation, when it is keeping their own cases out of court? There is a dark shadow hanging over our county, and I think also over many other counties, on account of the difficulties in the way of litigation. Cases cannot be reached on the dockets of our courts, probably, for a long time to come. There are, in our county, clouds upon the titles of our surface property, and also upon our mines, which, on account of the difficulties in the way of litigation, cannot be cleared up. Sir, I verily believe that if, by the fiat of the Almighty, those cases could be reached to-day, and cleared from the dockets of our courts—if those clouds could be cleared up from the property, both the mining and surface property of Storey County—that county would be worth five millions of dollars more than it is to-day.

I think we should be frank in this matter; I think we should be manly; I think we should never attempt, unless perhaps when we are dealing with treacherous rebels, to "whip the devil around the stump." Let us come square up to the work and meet the issue before us like men. This is one of the most important questions which can possibly agitate this Convention. We are about to launch from the stocks into the waters of experiment, a State Government: and there is a powerful opposition to that State Government. That opposition has already begun to organize, and to organize, too, before men really know whether the Constitution we are framing is to be a good one or a bad one, in any respect. The question is: how can this State Government be maintained? I verily believe that if an assessment were taken of all the surface property in this Territory to-day, according to the cash value of it, as suggested in the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) the assessment-rolls would not swell up to an aggregate amount exceeding seventeen millions of dollars. Now, I ask the people of this State, without any disposition to dodge any question, if it is possible, under the circumstances, for us to maintain and support a State Government on a basis for taxation of less than seventeen millions of dollars? If it cannot be done, then the Convention should look the question fairly in the face, and endeavor to ascertain how we can have a State Government under which we can hope to escape from bankruptcy and disgrace. If that can be done, then the water is clear ahead; there is a fair course, and no breakers on the lee. I ask the Convention to embrace all subjects of revenue, and see what is legitimately subject to taxation, and what is not—what is property, and what is not. Let it be settled here, and now, and not be left to the Legislature, to be a bone of contention in every Legislature that shall assemble hereafter. Do not leave it in such a way that it shall be an open question for all future time, in every successive election of representatives to the State Legislature. Do not leave it so that this question shall be at issue constantly, so that the one class of men who want to escape taxation, shall press into their service all who are in their power, snubbing all the voters they can; and the other class, in favor of equal taxation, shall be driven to the same course; so that money will be spent and squandered, and bribery practiced, in consequence of the action of this Convention, for the purpose of carrying one side or the other of this issue. Why should we leave this question in doubt for all future time? I ask if that is wise statesmanship, and sound legislation? I ask if it is in accordance with our sense of justice and right between man and man? It looks to me rather like a cowardly effort to escape from our just proportion of the burdens of society.

COLLINS—MASON.

[July 14.

Our forefathers, about the years 1774, 1775, and 1776, became terribly excited, and I think justly so, because on the part of the mother country there was a determination manifested to tax the colonies, without giving them the privilege of representation. Now, do you want to introduce here a system equally false, by providing that there shall be protection of law afforded to some, without support of law on their part? Do you mean to say that a hole in the ground has no value, and then say that if any person jumps it, you will allow the owner to appeal to the courts to protect that hole in the ground? "No legal protection," is my doctrine, "where there is no contribution to sustain legal authority." This is a question, it seems to me, which appeals to the reason and common sense of the Convention. For one, I would rather that my right hand were stricken from my side, than that I should knowingly be a party to the commission of an act of injustice towards any man, and especially towards that great class of the community whose labors tend to cheapen our produce. I say, if there is anything which should be exempted, it should be such interests as conspire to give us potatoes for a cent and a half instead of five or ten cents a pound, and wheat and oats and beans at less than one quarter, or at least, less than one half the prices they would command but for the existence of those interests. It is by virtue of future competition that our mines are to be worked hereafter at a cheap rate; and just in proportion as you cheapen production, just in that proportion will the mines rise in value.

Now, I had the honor to address the Convention the other day in favor of aiding the Pacific Railroad; and one of the strongest arguments I could urge in behalf of that great enterprise was, that it would bring into play hundreds and millions of tons of quartz that are now worthless, and worse than dead on the hands of the miners, because they are in the way—that it was going to open up new fields of productive mines to the mining class, and give employment to thousands and tens of thousands of laboring men. Now, do you say that it would be unjust to tax the mining interest to pay the interest on those railroad bonds? Would you exact it all from the farmers whose property, to a certain extent at least, is to be depreciated by the railroad? Would you exact it from the farmer and give it to the miner, whose interest is to be augmented by the railroad? Would that be right and just? Would it be acting as one man would have another man act towards him? I feel, while standing before this Convention, the same power pressing upon me to do justice to my fellow-men, that I do in my individual capacity, in the private walks of life, and I hope no power will ever drive me from that path which has been marked out for me to pursue.

I have occupied a great amount of time already on this question, and at present will say no more. I only desire that every member shall act as though he himself were the party in interest. The only way by which we can hope to secure an efficient State Government, is to unite as one body, having one common interest, and one common destiny, and let each one of us do everything he can to promote the common object, for the support of that State Government.

Mr. MASON. This question has been so extensively discussed that I have got about into the position of that Dutch Justice of rather dull comprehension, who thought he could decide the case after hearing one side, but after hearing the other side, found he could not decide it at all. There has been a doubt expressed as to whether we have a right to tax the mines at all, under the Enabling Act, and it has been urged that if the farms can be taxed as property, then the mines can just as legally be taxed as property, under the Enabling Act. That act says that the property of the United States shall not be taxed, and therefore, by incorporating this Article X, as it is now printed into our Constitution, we should be adopting only a nullity and a dead letter, under our Enabling Act. I hope therefore that the amendment as introduced by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer) will prevail. I consider that it is long enough and broad enough to cover the whole ground, and I do not want the shafts and bolts of malice to be thrown at that class of people whom I represent especially and particularly. Now, my friends from the "cow-counties," as they are called, would not like to have those words expunged, and the words "including farms and farming property" inserted.

STURTEVANT—MASON.

[July 14.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I should have no objection at all to using those words.

Mr. MASON. I say they would not like to have the words "mines and mining property" expunged and another clause substituted, to wit: "farms and farming property."

Mr. STURTEVANT. I should have no objection to specifying both—none whatever.

Mr. MASON. Then, of course, the gentleman will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer.) I am satisfied he will, and I am much obliged for the expression of his sentiments. Now, the way that section reads as he proposes to amend it, I think no man at all conversant with the subject will deny that it covers the whole ground. It says:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes.

Now, I consider that that covers the whole ground, and your Constitution will then go before the miners, and before the people of the Territory, without any odious distinction—without affording any opportunity for any class of persons to say that this Convention took particular pains to throw their bolts of wrath at them. We, the miners, have as good a right to be considered as the head and front of this Territory as the farmers themselves have. Look at the arguments they use, sir. Who developed the resources of the country? What were the farms of the Carson and Washoe valleys worth until the miners developed their claims and built up a State in five years; a thing unparalleled in the history of the world? Is there any taxable property in this State outside of the mines? Do the mines of Esmeralda produce no property outside of the mines themselves? Yes, sir. And is not that property a source of revenue? Why, sir, seven-eighths of our taxable property at the present time is in connection with the mines, and in the capital employed in their development. Sir, it is impossible for the most fervid imagination to conceive the vast amount of wealth existing in this Territory. Go into the counties of Nye and Lander and Humboldt. Why, sir, you find your Ophir and your other mines in Virginia, would be looked upon there as insignificant, in comparison with the vast amount of wealth existing in those regions of the Territory. Take it from Amador eastward—the coast is clear, I believe, though the gentleman from Amador (Mr. Warwick) is somewhere in the house—there is Austin, and Big Creek, and Lone, and Union District, and Lamartine District, and Kentucky, and San Antonio, and all those districts, which will vie, I believe, with Virginia in the course of the next five years.

I have said that I do not profess to be a prophet, but I have a perfect right to prophesy, nevertheless, and I say that in five years from now, when the disturbances which now agitate the public mind shall have ceased, when peace with her halcyon beams shall be restored to bless us, when we shall have become a part of the great Federal compact, when the currency of the United States shall be the capital employed in our midst, and shall be equally as valuable here as it is in the East, when we do not set up as a standard of value that which is only an article of speculation in the eastern portion of the United States, when we shall have a National currency as a basis, when we can speculate because we shall have the article among us to speculate upon—I say, when that time shall come, the history of the world has never produced, and can never produce, a parallel to the wealth which this Territory will be in possession of.

Now, sir, I maintain that those who develop the rich mines of this Territory, are entitled to equal consideration with the farmers, who become rich on the products raised from the soil and exchanged for the bullion of the miners. I know our interests are identical. I heartily concur with the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) that we are not independent of each other, but must work together harmoniously, for the promotion of each others' good. We want our potatoes and cabbages, and you want our bullion; and although we frown a little at the prices we have to pay for your cabbages, yet you smile when you receive and pocket the compensation. But do not in your hearts hold wrath towards us. Be generous. Place us on an equality with yourselves; that is all we ask. Leave it to the Legislature to say how all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed equally. But you want to incorporate a clause here designed for the miners particularly. I tell you if you do that, they will look upon this instrument, when it shall be presented to them, as the illegitimate offspring of a corrupt political body, and a miscarriage at that. It will be one of those peculiar cases of miscarriage, too, that always produces death to the body suffering it.

Now, sir, I am anxious that Nevada shall be a State. I am anxious that she shall be one of the stars in that grand Confederation of ours. I am satisfied that this Union will be reëstablished, though the Carolinas should become a forest of creaking gibbets, though vultures should gorge themselves upon the hanging skeletons of traitors, and though smoke and cinders should cloud the skies of the once sunny South. I say it were even better that seven millions of tyrants should be ground under the chariot-wheels of conquering freedom, than that succeeding generations should be placed within the grasp of despotism. [Applause.] And we will be the golden star of that Confederacy. We have the gold—all we want of it. If we had the Pacific Railroad now—if this war should cease—with the capital of the eastern States, which is there in abundance, to develop our vast resources—why, sir, we would rise higher in the estimation of the world than it is possible for the most exalted imagination to conceive. Now, I hope and trust that the proposed expunging of those few words, in accordance with the amendment of my friend from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) will prevail. It will settle the whole matter satisfactorily to the miners. They will see that they are not to be the exclusive objects of indignation and wrath, and I tell you we will pay just as big prices for your potatoes and cabbages as we can afford.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to state a few reasons why I am not satisfied with the section as it would stand after striking out the words, "mines and mining property." It would then leave it to read that all property, real and personal, should be taxed. That is all right. But the point has been well made that, under a similar provision in the California Constitution, mines are not taxed in that State; that the California Legislature, through a series of years, has resolutely refused to tax them. The gentleman on my right from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has maintained, as a lawyer, that under that wording, the Legislature need not—and I presume he means they cannot—tax the mines. Now, it is of no consequence that the President of the Convention thinks otherwise—an opinion which the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) drew from him with so much art and with such an air of triumph. That is the very point, the very objection to the section as it will be left, that while the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) thinks that under it, the mines may be taxed, the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) thinks that under it, the mines may not be taxed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I have enunciated distinctly the proposition that under this Enabling Act, the Legislature would not have the power to tax the mines, as the property of the Federal Government, but that in the former Convention, before the Enabling Act was passed, I felt satisfied they had that power. Since the passage of the Enabling Act, however, containing inhibitory language, I do not think they could do it.

Mr. NOURSE. Then my point is stronger still, for gentlemen on both sides think that under such a provision, the mines cannot be taxed. Now, I start out with the proposition that if the mines cannot be taxed, we cannot run the State Government. The surface property alone, with any reasonably conceivable increase, cannot carry it on. Now, can there really be any diversity of interests between the mining counties and the so-called "cow counties?" What, in this connection, my constituents expect from me, I do not know, having been nominated without my knowledge or consent, and elected in my absence, (and they came very near defeating me,) but I consider that I am not here to advocate only their peculiar interests, without regard to the peculiar rights and interests of others; but I am here as a member of a Convention to form a Constitution for the whole State, and to do that which will be really just towards all, as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) has stated his position to be. Now, can it be right, simply because a particular interest is dominant—simply because it has the most wealth—that it should be exempted from taxation? Can it be right, because the mining interest of the Territory is that interest without which there would be nothing else, perhaps, in the Territory, that therefore that interest should be exempt from taxation? Upon the same ground, you might exempt the shipping interest in Maine, the commercial interest in Massachusetts, or the farming interest in the western States. We know that the farming interest builds up cities, just as the mining interest does—that it creates property, just as the commercial interest in Massachusetts creates property; and yet those interests do not come forward and ask for exemption. They recognize at once the doctrine that they, like all others, must bear their share of the burdens of the Government, simply because they receive their full share of the benefits of the Government.

Now, it cannot be that the "cow counties" are to be helped by any course that will injure the mines. It cannot be that any representative of the agricultural interests desires, for the benefit of his particular county, to strike a blow at the prosperity of the mines. No man can be so foolish as that, because that would be striking a blow at the market for his products, and thus it would recoil upon himself. It is not because the representatives of the agricultural interests desire to set up independently for themselves, that they want the mines taxed; but because they want even-handed justice. They want a course pursued by which it will be possible—for it will be hard enough, any how—to carry on a State Government, under the Constitution which we frame.

Now, if this clause should be amended, as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) it would simply provide for taxing real and personal property. These mining claims would seem to be included in that phrase, "real and personal property," or to be neither real nor personal property. But careful conveyancers have used the terms, "real, personal, and mixed," so as to include all kinds of property, and it is contended that mining claims are simply possessory rights. Now, by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) this question is put at rest forever in our organic law, which would be left otherwise still open and undetermined, so that those possessory rights, which are as valuable as any other rights of property, shall be taxed. And why should not we have the right to tax a man who has the privilege of taking out ore? Why not tax that man as well as to tax a toll-road? The man who builds a toll-road to Lake Tahoe, for instance, would have no right to sell the land over which it passes. He does not own the property. Yet, who doubts the right of a State to tax that toll-road? What man says that toll-roads should be taxed only on their net proceeds? But why not? I can see no more reason for taxing the right in one case than in the other.

Now, sir, the argument against taxing the mines according to their cash value, has lost much force, even to the unreflecting portion of the community, since the last Constitution was framed. There was then a speculative movement in the country, which has now, thank God, gone down. It was an argument then put forward, that it would not do to tax the mines on their speculative value, because that would prevent their development. I think there is not much speculative value left in them now. I guess they have got to the bed-rock, and I think there is not much danger that those speculative mines will be taxed at a higher rate than they ought to be. But was that ever a good argument? Was it a good one last year? Does this Territory need more prospecting? Is that what it wants? Does it need that prospecting shall be encouraged by exemption from taxation? Is not what we want, rather, the development of the thousand and one mines already discovered? Is not that what is required, rather than encouraging the "poor miner" in seeking for new ledges, when we have not the hundredth part of the capital necessary to work the ledges which have been already discovered?

Now, as the matter stands at present, there is not even a diversity of opinion, for gentlemen on both sides believe that if these words "mines and mining property" are stricken out, the Legislature would have no power to tax the mines. How does it leave us then? It leaves us with only the surface property, upon which to carry on the State Government. Now, in addition to the argument of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) founded on the Enabling Act—the argument which satisfies the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) that the mines cannot be taxed because they are the property of the Federal Government—we have the argument to be presented to the Legislature, and to the courts, that this Convention did not intend to tax the mines, even if it shall be decided by the Convention—and possibly it may not be so decided—to omit those words. There being a doubt in respect to the language, and reference being had to the reported Proceedings of the Convention, to see with what view the language employed was adopted, it is found that while the words "mines and mining property" were included in the original Constitution adopted by the former Convention and taken by us for our basis, in going over the work of that former Convention and framing it to suit ourselves, we have struck those words out, leaving it in every other respect the same as we found it. Is there not thereby a strong argument afforded, to show that this Convention intended not to tax the mines? So it seems to me. If, therefore, those words are not stricken out, or if the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) is not adopted instead, we are surely adopting a Constitution with a provision, in effect, that the mines are not to be taxed. That conclusion seems to me to be inevitable.

Mr. STURTEVANT. There is one point which I would like to hear explained, and that is, the term "real property." Is real property a perfect title?

Mr. DELONG. It is immovable property. Anything which you cannot move around with you is real property; it is something which is really there.

Mr. NOURSE. I have already suggested my views upon that subject, but I will give them more fully. The mere possessory title to lands of the United States, considered as the right of possession, is not real property. Our courts recognize it as evidence from which to presume a grant, when the question of the ownership of the United States is not raised; but considered in its true light, as a mere right of possession, I think that every lawyer will agree with me that it is nothing more than a chattel real, and is not real property at all. The United States Enabling Act prohibits the taxing of the land, as land, or as the land of the United States—and, the United States having the fee in it, if that question is raised, in a tax suit, and it is shown that the land has been taxed as real property, and it is shown also that the fee is in the United States—I think all lawyers will agree with me that not only the mines, but also the farms which are in that condition, would be exempt from taxation. But when it is taxed as the right to possession of real property, recognized by our statutes and judicial decisions, then that right of possession to real property, of which the United States owns the fee, is taxable as much as any other description of property. Therefore it is, that I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) which provides not only for taxing real property, and personal property, but also the property which partakes of the nature of both, or "mixed," as it is sometimes termed, like chattels real—the possessory rights which are so familiar to us all here—those rights to the possession of ledges, farms, and all that. It is provided by this amendment, that they may be taxed; whereas the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer) makes no such provision. Now, it seems to me that leaving this clause without such a provision—without any provision for taxing this property, or these rights of possession—is going to deprive us of the right to tax, not merely our mines, but even our farms. It seems to me that it would exclude from taxation all but a small fraction of the lands in our State. There would perhaps be no land subject to taxation, except that for which a patent has been issued by the United States Government, so that taxes can be assessed upon it. Unless the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby shall be adopted, it will leave us with scarcely anything in the world to tax, and that is without reference to the mines at all. We shall have no taxable farms, or anything else, there being here such a large class of property consisting merely of possessory rights. I do earnestly hope that the amendment will be adopted, so that all this property, of whatever description, shall be uniformly and equally taxed.

Mr. WARWICK. I hope, for one, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) will not carry. There is probably no question in the administration of government that has occupied the attention of statesmen so much as the very delicate question of taxation. That the government must be supported, is a self-apparent fact; and that means must be provided for its support, is also self-evident. But how to provide those means, as I said before, has been a question which has exercised the wisdom of the greatest statesmen, for all time past. In the productions of every country, it has been found absolutely necessary, in some cases, to discriminate—to encourage some by bounties and benefits, whilst others are most heavily taxed. It always has been the policy of the United States, that those things which are articles of necessity, or the production of which is extraordinarily hazardous or difficult, should be encouraged by extraordinary bounties; while other things, easy of production, are considered capable of bearing a heavy, and sometimes an onerous tax. The gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) alluded to the State of Massachusetts. Now, if he is cognizant of the affairs of that State, he is doubtless aware of the fact that large bounties are paid to encourage the fisheries there. Why? Because they produce a species of taxable property from the deep, a place where it could not otherwise be taxed, but when produced, it becomes a legitimate subject of taxation. That is the very point which we ought here especially to consider.

Now, the gentleman from Washoe rises, as others did before him, and speaks as if the mines were not taxed. Sir, they are taxed, from the first pick that strikes the ground, and the powder that opens the rocky seam, to the ore after its production, and the bar when it is run into silver, and the property that accumulates from that basis. There is not one article, from the moment you open the mine, up to the moment you produce the ore, and to the time when that ore is distributed to the four winds by its owners, but it is taxed, in some shape or other. The question that divides the Convention at present is, the policy of taxing those mines, and of taxing them too, if I may be allowed to use the expression, in their crude state. A company is formed, and, upon paper, their capital is stated to be one million of dollars: are they to be taxed on that amount? Now, sir, I represent a mining county, and I have its interests very closely at heart; the more so, perhaps, for the reason that if this proposition should carry, I should be one of the victims of the injustice of this mode of taxation; and I will briefly tell you why. With a very excellent prospect of success, in company with a number of other individuals, on the twentieth day of last December, I commenced running a tunnel in the town of Amador. I worked my mine night and day for six months—from the twentieth day of December to the twenty-third day of June—at an outlay of over twenty-two thousand dollars, from which I have never yet realized a return of one cent. The capital of the company is represented at several hundred thousand dollars. Now, there may come a time when that claim can afford to contribute to the support of the Government, and then it will be a legitimate subject of taxation. But what would be the result, if the project encouraged by some gentlemen on this floor were to carry? Why, sir, the result would be, that that company, disheartened by past ill success, instead of endeavoring to resuscitate, and to drive on their work, would feel themselves crushed to the earth; and then what becomes of your taxable property? Suppose you sell us out under the hammer of the sheriff, what do you gain by it? Why, sir, you get nothing but a barren rock. If you were to sell us out to-day, at sheriff's sale, that mine itself, with all its valuable improvements, costing twenty-two thousand dollars, expended in the labor of six months past—the whole thing together, I say, upon which has been expended over twenty thousand dollars, would not bring five hundred dollars.

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I know of two quartz mills in Washoe County, which are nearly done, but are not yet ready to earn a dollar; yet they are taxed at just about their cost. Now, is it any harder for these men whom the gentleman speaks of, to be taxed on their mine at its cash value, prior to reaching the rich rock, than it is for the owner of these quartz mills to be taxed on them prior to their earning anything?

Mr. WARWICK. Certainly it is, and I will tell you why.

Thursday.]

NOURSE—WARWICK—JOHNSON.

[July 14.]

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to have you tell me.

Mr. WARWICK. There are none so blind as those who will not see. Now, I will tell you why it would be unjust to tax a mine which is yet undeveloped, although you can at the same time tax a mill which is nearly finished, with the greatest propriety. We will suppose that this mill could be completed so as to get to work in thirty days. Undoubtedly a millman would not start without knowing that he can get a sufficient amount of ore to crush, for milling is conducted now on the same kind of business calculations as the transactions of merchants, and though they are not always successful, yet when they are well conducted, they are generally successful.

Mr. NOURSE [interrupting.] Are not many mills out of employment now? Are they not thrown out of employment for want of ore?

Mr. WARWICK. I do not know. As to first-class mills—I can only speak for Lander County in that respect—there is not one mill within the precincts of that county of a character fit to extract the silver from the ore but can have work, night and day, crushing ore worth from seventy-five to one hundred dollars a ton. No, sir! and if there were ten times as many mills as there are in that county, there would not be one of them remaining quiet, night or day, for want of ore to crush; and the miners would willingly pay them remunerative prices for crushing, for we have mines which I believe, before God, will pay richly for hundreds of years to come.

Now if, after these mines begin to pay, they would escape taxation, then the people of the agricultural counties might justly find fault with the language of the article which we propose to incorporate in the Constitution of the coming State. But it is not a fact that they escape now; in no wise do they escape. Every article they use is taxed, and every article they produce is taxed. It is only a question of policy now—whether you will allow them to develop themselves, or crush them out before the chance for their development comes. Take the seed which produces the giant pine that grows in the State of California—that wonder of the world, which attracts visitors from every part of the earth, and has elicited exclamations of astonishment from men of almost every nation and clime. That seed in itself is insignificant. You plant it in the earth, and the smallest bird of the air could consume it, or bear it away. But you let it grow; let the rains of heaven fall upon it—let the sun give it its warmth, and the earth yield its nourishment. It grows—it springs upward—it towers, year after year—and it becomes at last a mighty, giant tree, covering with its branches an area so wide that you could scarcely credit the fact when you see the little seed which is at first planted in the ground. Now, this is what these gentlemen propose to do: They propose to take the seed which produces the giant tree, and destroy it the moment it is planted in the earth. I ask if that is sound policy?

These agricultural gentlemen, I suppose, have a perfect horror of crows. [Merriment.] They sow their fields with wheat, and let us suppose that just after they are sown, a flock of those pirates of the air carry off the seed which has been planted—where then would be their hopes of a future crop? What do these gentlemen do? Why, they take a collection of old coats, discarded pants, and dilapidated vests, stuff them into a semblance of men, and place them around their fields, to guard them and keep away these feathered piratical thieves, because they do not want their hopes destroyed in the bud—carried off in the germ. They want them to sprout, and to grow, so that, the spring-time having passed, the harvest may come, and they may reap the fruits of their industry. That is all we propose. We no more ask to escape taxation than they do. Every sensible man knows that so gigantic an interest as the mining interest of this State must be taxed, in order to support the Government, nor does any man, I venture to say, on this floor, endeavor, or desire to escape that taxation. It is just and right that we should be taxed, and we are taxed to-day, to the extent to which the mines pay. It is only a question of propriety and policy, to say when that taxation shall be—whether we shall develop the wealth hidden in the mountains around us or not. Let us go out, if we choose, into the desert, and suffer hardships, undergoing toil, and untold privations and sufferings, such as can hardly be described; and then, after we have succeeded in producing the precious metals—after we have developed the sources of wealth—we will come in and say to you: "From the barren hill, and the desert valley, we have produced gold and silver. Here it is. Tax it. It is at the disposition of the State and the National Government." That is all the difference between us.

Gentlemen must not seek to impress on the Convention the idea that the mining counties desire this amendment in order to escape from taxation. I have never heard it advanced in any mining county, or in any mining community. No member here has been possessed of so much hardihood as to say that his constituents sent him here to endeavor to escape from proper taxation. But what we do desire is to escape from a false basis of taxation. Now, suppose we were to go to Washoe and tax the prospect of the coming crop of the farmer, for that is what this amendment proposes in relation to the mines?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but the language of the substitute is, that all property shall be taxed according to its cash value in money. The laws will provide for the election of assessors, but no law could be framed under such a provision, which would be inimical to the just principle that everything shall be taxed according to its true cash value in money. Such is the basis

Thursday,] WARWICK—FITCH—BELDEN—FOLSOM—STURTEVANT—NOURSE—MASON. [July 14.

I propose, and it applies to farms, and to everything else.

Mr. WARWICK. One word further and I have done. I will first bring to the view of the Convention a leading principle which, I think, is pertinent to this case. Now there is a claim in Virginia, known as the Gould & Curry, and the area of that claim is probably not so large, including the mill site and the ground which the company claims as its mining ground, as that little patch in front of this building, known as the Park, or Plaza. That claim has, by the industry of those connected with it—by the intelligence with which it has been worked, and by the scientific appliances which have been placed at their command—been developed and increased in value to such an extent that it has paid taxes to the county of Storey, to the Territory of Nevada, and to the United States of America, upon over one million of dollars, and that is only one claim in the county of Storey.

Mr. FITCH. Do you mean that it has paid a million?

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir; I mean that it is valued at over one million of dollars, and taxed upon that amount. Am I correct?

Mr. FITCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARWICK. Very well; I never was wrong in my life, and I thought I was not going to begin now. [Laughter.] Now, sir, I believe the taxable property of Washoe County is about two millions of dollars. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. BELDEN. Two and a half millions.

Mr. FOLSOM. It does not matter—it is worth more than that.

Mr. WARWICK. I accept the amendment to the amendment. That county is taxed on a basis of two and a half millions, and that county is about as old, and certainly as large, as the county of Storey.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Four times as large.

Mr. WARWICK. Four times as large, I am told; and yet it pays taxes only on two and a half millions of dollars, while one little patch in the county of Storey, properly developed, is taxed on—I believe, about a million and a quarter of dollars. Now, sir, that is the difference, that being one of the interests that requires encouragement, and which, being encouraged, in a short space of time yields a revenue, from a single small patch, amounting to over one-half of the entire revenue of the county of Washoe, although the entire county of Storey is only one-fourth the size of that county. This little patch in a county one-fourth the size of Washoe, yields about one-half as much revenue as the entire county of Washoe yields. I think this illustration will address itself to the intelligence of every gentleman in the Convention, as an argument to show that this mining interest is one which needs encouragement.

Mr. NOURSE. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that the income of that mine is probably five times the amount of the income of the whole county of Washoe. The stock is divided up into shares, and its monthly dividends, though they have been sometimes as low as a hundred and twenty-five, or a hundred and fifty dollars a foot, have amounted during the past year, to somewhere about one million eight hundred thousand dollars. That is the income for a single year, which is equal in amount to about the whole of the appraised value of Washoe County. That is the interest which the gentleman thinks is so feeble that it must not be taxed, and needs to be fostered and encouraged by exemption from the burdens of Government.
